The seriousness of these economic factors in the Philippine problem will grow with the years. The importation of Philippine products and the immigration of Philippine laborers into the United States will have to be prevented either by the taxation of the one and the exclusion of the other or else by the bestowal of independence. To treat the people and the products of the Philippines precisely as we are treating the inhabitants and commodities of foreign countries would be an unforgivable negation of our principles and a painful disregard of the rights of the Filipinos. It would be a grossly anomalous policy. It would be such a subordination of idealism to materialism that we ourselves would suffer from it.

The only alternative is the fulfillment of our promise to give the islands independence. That would be the doing of a just thing for its own sake, but it would also be mitigating some of the hardships which the present importation of products and the present immigration of workers from the Philippines are inflicting on certain of our own population. Best of all, the redemption of our pledge would be a realization of our ideals and an example of justice to the whole world.

LOANS TO STATES—SYSTEM OF HIGHWAYS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12445) to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by authorizing and expediting a public-works program, and providing a method of financing such program, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. ASHURST, which was to amend the House text of the bill, on page 8, line 10, after the first set of numerals, by inserting:

Florence, post office, $90,000; Holbrook, post office, $90,000.

And on page 8, line 13, by striking out the figures "$905,000" and inserting the figures "$1,085,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona.

On a division the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and is open to amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, is there an amendment pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate committee amendment is pending and is open to amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. There are two or three very small amendments which I think are not inappropriate and which I believe will meet with no objection. They have been presented and are now upon the desk. They are, in line 15, page 100, after the word "empowered," to insert "(1)," and in the same line, after the word "loans," to strike out the numeral "(1)," and after the word "to," where it occurs the second time, to insert "or contracts with." The Senator from New York is familiar with the amendments.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; I was going to say that I had similar amendments in my hand ready to offer. The amendments are simply for the purpose of perfecting the language.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendments offered by the Senator from California.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. In order to complete the text, I move, on page 100, in line 22, after the word "loans," to insert the words "or contracts."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON. I am simply completing the text by the amendments which I am offering, if the Senator will pardon me.

On page 100, in line 25, after the numeral "(2)," I move to insert "to make loans."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. There are two or three other amendments of mere insertion which I propose. On page 101, line 4, after the word "loans," I move to insert "or contracts," and on the same page, line 5, after the word "loans," I move to insert the words "or contracts." I present both amendments together.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments are agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, with which I think my colleague is familiar.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, before proceeding with the amendment of the Senator from New York I hope we may have an explanation of the significance of the amendments which have just been adopted on the motion of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. I do not understand what the amendments mean.

Mr. JOHNSON. I did not catch the purport of the remarks made by the Senator from Montana. Will he please repeat his statement?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I asked if we might not have an explanation of the significance of the amendments offered by the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. The amendments relate particularly to the municipality of Los Angeles and its water-power department. I have moved to insert the words "or contracts" after the word "loans" in order that the water department of Los Angeles, by virtue of its peculiar contracts, may come under the act if it were deemed appropriate subsequently that it should do so. The amendments are merely to broaden in that aspect the language.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Is the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to be authorized and empowered to make loans or contracts?

Mr. JOHNSON. It is empowered to make loans to or to contract with.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator specify where he proposes to insert the amendments?

Mr. JOHNSON. The first amendment is on page 100, line 15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to add:

And the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is also authorized and directed to allocate and make available to the Secretary of Commerce the sum of not to exceed $1,000,000 annually for the purpose of providing credit facilities on sales of manufactured products in export markets, such facilities to be provided through the medium of reinsurance to be extended to established and existing private export-credit insurance agencies in the United States.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I hope the Senator will explain the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. I will do so.

Mr. President, this is an attempt to do on a small scale what is proposed to be done for agricultural products. There is an organization in this country which is known as the American Manufacturers' Foreign Credit Insurance Exchange. It is really the only organization in existence designed to help the American manufacturers by insuring their export credits. With the uncertainty abroad in most countries regarding foreign exchange the American bankers have become greatly handicapped, and, with restrictions in credits, are offering only limited aid to American manufacturers. The American Manufacturers' Foreign Credit Insurance Exchange is not a private corporation, but is made up of members who benefit solely by its work and by its profits, if any. They will not export without the approval of the organization. In other words, every order that they receive from abroad is first submitted to this credit exchange, this cooperative exchange, for approval. The exchange is also limited as regards credit extensions. If this organization could receive in some way temporary assistance from the Government through the unemployment relief bills, it is certain that American manufacturers would be able to hold some of the markets they now enjoy.

The plea for this amendment comes, for instance, from the General Dry Batteries Co., of Cleveland, Ohio; from the Consolidated Expanded Metal Cos., of New York; from a concern in Williamsport, Pa., doing a large export business; from the paint, varnish, and waterproofing concerns of the country; from the A. P. W. Paper Co.; from the Dunlop silk concern; from Sweet-Orr & Co.; from the Plaza Music Co.; the Lily Tulip Cup Corporation, as well as the Syracuse Washing Machine Corporation.

I have no doubt that every Senator has received similar communications.

My suggestion, Mr. President, is that this amendment be accepted and go to conference; that in conference there be determined the validity and wisdom of this amendment, and then that there may be reported to us the final conclusion of the committee regarding it.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. Do I understand that the Senator wants the conferees and not the Senate to settle this question?

Mr. COPELAND. No; I want Senators to express their wishes in the matter; and if the Senator from Michigan has any views with regard to it, I should be very glad to hear them.

Mr. COUZENS. I should like to hear the amendment read again.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New York a question?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Has the amendment been considered by the committee?

Mr. COPELAND. Let me ask my colleague as to that.

Mr. WAGNER. No; the suggestion came in after the committee had acted.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Has there been any report or information received from the department regarding the desirability of the amendment from the standpoint of the department?

Mr. COPELAND. No; but I may say to my esteemed leader that the reason I asked that the amendment might go to conference is that it came in at a late moment and it was not possible to get the reaction of the various departments involved. It is to be administered by the Commerce Department, and I think it is so important—and apparently all these manufacturers that do an export business consider it so because of the uncertainty of the dollar value abroad—that I believe we would make a mistake if we did not give the committee an opportunity to get a report from the department.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, the pending bill relates primarily to the subject of unemployment.

Mr. COPELAND. This amendment relates also to the relief of unemployment, because the more our manufacturers are encouraged in their foreign market the more active they will be in their efforts to increase their sales.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The thought of the Senator is that the provision would stimulate and promote production?

Mr. COPELAND. Exactly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. This amendment contemplates placing at the command of the Department of Commerce a million dollars annually.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Without any limitation as to time?

Mr. COPELAND. I will inquire of my colleague what is the limitation in the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The limitation on loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is two years.

Mr. WAGNER. The limitation in this case is the life of the loans. The power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans under the law is limited to 2 years, but under this bill a loan may be made for a period of 10 years.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to ask another question of the Senator. Does this contemplate loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the organization mentioned in the amendment?

Mr. COPELAND. It permits loans to the American Foreign Credit Underwriters in order that they may go forward with their insurance activities, a thing which they are not able to do now because of the tremendous restriction of credit advanced by the banks.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I did not understand that this was to provide for loans. I understood that this was an appropriation to the Department of Commerce simply for the purpose of promoting that sort of work. Of course, a million dollars to export trade would be a mere bagatelle.

Mr. COPELAND. It is not to finance the export trade, but to finance the insurance of credit abroad. This organization, which is a cooperative organization running through many manufacturing concerns, seeks to protect its members by a study of the credit facilities in foreign lands; and then when it is determined that those credits are acceptable credits, it undertakes to insure payment to the manufacturers of the amount of credit advanced abroad.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I am still at a loss to understand what this million dollars is to be used for. In one place it says, "for providing credit facilities," and then in another place, "for providing reinsurance." Does not the Senator believe that this amendment ought to go over and let us see if we can frame it in better language? I am frank to say I do not know what it means.

Mr. COPELAND. I dislike to take the time of the Senate; but if the Senator things it important enough, I should like to read the letter from the American Foreign Credit Underwriters, which is a cooperative concern. Shall I do that?

Mr. COUZENS. Will not the Senator let this amendment go over for the time being in order that we may see if we can get together on it. I want to understand what this amendment is intended to do, but I do not understand now what this million dollars is to be used for.

Mr. WAGNER. It is a reinsurance proposition.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me read this letter.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I interrupt the Senator to inquire whether it has to do with the marketing of agricultural products as well as others.

Mr. COPELAND. No. Omitting the personal part at the beginning of the letter, it reads as follows:

We represent the American Manufacturers Foreign Credit Insurance Exchange, which is a mutual, nonprofit association of American manufacturers and merchants engaged in export trade. This exchange is to-day, and has for the past 12 or 13 years, been actively functioning in the field of export credit insurance, and is now the only organization of its kind in the United States.

The exchange has been responsible for more than a quarter of a billion dollars' worth of export merchandise shipments, the credit in connection with which it has insured for its members. Additionally, it has passed on another two hundred to three hundred million dollars' worth of export shipments, in connection with which exchange members have availed themselves of its credit-checking facilities.

The exchange acts as a clearing house for its members, who centralize in it their ledger experience and credit information with foreign importers of American merchandise. Upon the basis of the records thus set up—and supplemented by information gathered directly in foreign markets by the exchange—the overseas customers of American exporters are properly classified and rated, based primarily upon their own performance record in the payment of their bills in the United States.

The ratings thus assigned are in turn used as the basis for foreign credit-insurance certificates issued by the exchange to its members, protecting those members against credit losses which they may sustain on insured accounts.

The exchange reinsures a large portion of its risks through responsible private reinsurance companies in the United States, and is thus able to safeguard itself, through this reserve of reinsurance, from any losses which are likely to be sustained in the ordinary normal run of business. Even at this time, under the abnormal conditions prevailing in our principal export markets, the exchange is insuring for the large group of American manufacturers and merchants who constitute its membership approximately $1,000,000 worth of export shipments each month and is passing on the credits pertaining to an equal amount of shipments made by manufacturers who depend upon its credit service and protective facilities.

The great majority of these American exporters would not continue to do this business but for the protection and service afforded them by the exchange.

Although, as previously stated, the exchange has reinsurance treaties with private companies in the United States, such treaties, as you can well appreciate, can hardly be made sufficiently flexible to meet the unusual credit conditions now confronting us in many of our most active export markets. Because of this we are naturally limited in the credit-insurance coverage that we are able to extend to exchange members, and as a result there is a substantial volume of worth-while business which is perforce being declined by manufacturers in this country. A good part of this business is going to European exporters, who in many instances have for years been provided with export credit-insurance facilities by their governments. The inability of the American exporter to meet these competitive conditions, due to his lack of credit facilities, is naturally resulting in a general curtailment of export activities among manufacturers and merchants in the United States, and is a material factor contributing to the unemployment of men and machinery in this country to-day.

We believe that it is only through some agency of the Federal Government that the urgent need of additional export-credit facilities, such as above referred to, can be supplied. As you know, provision has already been made in the Wagner bill (S. 4755) for additional facilities for financing exports of agricultural products, such as wheat, cotton, wool, etc., and we have been urged by many manufacturers in our membership, and particularly those in New York State, to bring to the attention of Government officials in Washington the need for similar assistance to exporters of manufactured goods.

Senator WAGNER has already expressed his sympathy with and interest in our plan, which, briefly, provides for a fund to be provided by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and administered through the Secretary of Commerce to be used in furnishing additional reinsurance facilities to our association.

Even a modest appropriation of, say, $1,000,000 annually would, in our opinion, be responsible for an increased export volume of $40,000,000 to $50,000,000 through the added confidence and stimulus to export effort which this appropriation would provide.

Specifically, we believe that the matter could be covered through an amendment to bill S. 4755, page 5, line 15.

That is such an amendment as I have offered.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think I grasp the general idea of the amendment now.

The organization to which the Senator refers undertakes to guarantee to American exporters the bills incurred for their products by the foreign purchasers, and it reinsures with other companies, and thus the risk is divided. It is proposed here that the Secretary of Commerce engage in this reinsurance business, and that he have a million dollars for the purpose of doing so. Of course, the million dollars is to meet any possible losses that may accrue by virtue of the contracts of insurance, but in order to do that it would be necessary to set up in the Department of Commerce a reinsurance department.

Mr. COPELAND. May I answer that by reading a paragraph from this letter?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND (reading):

There is no reason to believe that the fund set aside by the Government would actually have to be drawn on to any considerable extent, as the exchange would continue its policy of insuring only sound and worthy credit risks, and the premiums paid by the manufacturers for this insurance should be sufficient to cover all losses sustained. Further, the operation of this plan would throw no added administrative burden upon the Department of Commerce, as the officials of that department would simply have to exercise a general supervision over the activities of the exchange in insuring export credits subject to this plan

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; but they have no power now, under the law, to issue the reinsurance. The Senator would have to have an act passed authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to make contracts of that character.

Mr. COPELAND. I think this is the answer:

The Senator will recall that under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act certain loans were to be made to railroads, provided they were recommended by the Interstate Commerce Commission. I should think that was exactly parallel with this; that no money would be advanced by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation unless the Department of Commerce, which is familiar with all these activities, should pass its approval upon it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is not the proposition at all.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. There is nothing in the bill that authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to lend to any of these private institutions, for export or otherwise, except as it applies to the Department of Agriculture. In other words, just what kind of credits would the Department of Commerce pass on to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. COPELAND. We have in the Department of Commerce a Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. To my mind, it is one of the most effective means we have to promote our commerce. It is a tremendously active organization, familiar with all the problems that are dealt with by this mutual cooperative institution. I think, without setting up any new machinery or having any more employees, it might readily pass judgment upon the wisdom of recommending to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation an extension of these facilities. As the president of this organization says, it is doubtful if the sum would be drawn upon to any considerable extent, because the manufacturers who take advantage of the facilities themselves pay the premiums.

Mr. COUZENS. If the Senator will yield, it seems to me this might properly come in if there were any provision in the bill authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to loan money to these private institutions; but there is no such provision. In other words, if there were a provision in the bill that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was permitted to loan to private industry, then the Senator might properly put in this amendment, so that the Department of Commerce would pass upon the loans prior to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation making them.

Mr. COPELAND. How does the Senator interpret the provision in this bill relative to agricultural exports? I read from page 101, subdivision (b):

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to advance to the Secretary of Agriculture, in addition to the amounts allocated and made available to him by section 2 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, not to exceed $40,000,000 of the amounts made available under section 2 of this act, for the purpose of financing sales of agricultural products in the markets of foreign countries in which such sales can not be financed in the normal course of commerce.

I see that that is not entirely parallel; but, after all, there can be no question that with the uncertainty of credits, and with the variation in the value of the dollar as well as the standards of other countries, our manufacturers and merchants desiring to do an export business are tremendously embarrassed; and they feel—they have impressed this upon me personally—that this would be of tremendous value in encouraging exports of manufactured products.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I dare say that something of that kind would be helpful; but I am calling attention to the fact that this is not a proposition to make any loans at all. This is a proposition that the Secretary of Commerce shall make an insurance contract by which he, for the Government, would become responsible to the domestic exporter for bills which are incurred abroad; and he simply has a fund of a million dollars with which to make insurance and take care of any losses that may ensue in connection with that insurance business. When this organization comes to him for the purpose of reinsuring, however, the Secretary of Commerce will say, "Why, I have no authority to make any contract of that kind with you."

Mr. COPELAND. Does my friend suggest any change in the language that would be employed?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I do not; but I agree with the Senator from Michigan that some effort ought to be made to put the language in shape so that it would mean something.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the Senator ought to withdraw this amendment, because it really is meaningless, and it can not operate, because there is nothing to operate on in the amendment as drafted.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator think that if there is merit in it, the presentation of this amendment, together with such argument as has been presented, could be given to the Department of Commerce for them to pass judgment upon? I know that the exporters regard this as necessary to the progress of export business.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. If that is true, the exporters must have had in mind that there was going to be some provision in this bill for lending to private industry, because obviously this can not operate unless loans are made to private industry. The Senator himself says that he has in mind that the Department of Commerce will pass upon the prospective loan prior to the loan actually being made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. COPELAND. No; I do not think it is quite that.

Mr. COUZENS. That is what the Senator said a while ago.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not think I expressed myself, fortunately.

The membership of this organization, the American Foreign Credit Underwriters, extends throughout the country. It is an organization the purpose of which is to insure exporters against loss incident to change or variations in exchange, and so forth. They are not able always under present conditions to reinsure, and they need aid in that direction. The Senator from Montana has hit upon that. They need assistance in this matter of reinsurance.

The matter gets back to this, in my mind, if I may be permitted to say it: I think one of the great troubles we have about the recovery of prosperity in America is due to the unwillingness of the banking institutions to cooperate. I do not think that is true of the local banks generally, but those in control, the men I call the "banksters," have so injured the credit facilities of various manufacturers and merchants of the country, and also this particular sort of organization that there is a helplessness on the part of our manufacturers which interferes with their return to normal business.

I did not work out the idea of a million dollars; this was handed to me, of course, by the organization referred to; but if it is actually true that by having a reserve of a million dollars, it could be used in case of necessity, in the event of failure of underwriting through reinsurance, I would say it was an investment well made.

I recognize what the Senator from Michigan says, that perhaps the amendment is loosely worded, and I think, perhaps, it should be perfected; but there should be some way to extend help in a case of this kind, if we are seeking to relieve unemployment in the country, not to pass out a dole but to make it possible for these manufacturers to operate in order that there may be business.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. In either case the amendment does not mean anything, because, as the Senator from Montana has pointed out, if it is a reinsurance problem, the Department of Commerce has no right to reinsure; and if it is for passing upon credits, then there is no authority to make the credit. So that the whole amendment is perfectly meaningless unless there is some other language put into the bill to which it may apply, and in that case the amendment ought to be voted down.

Mr. COPELAND. Would the Senator from Michigan resist the request I made a little while ago, that this amendment might be accepted by the committee, and in the meantime I will attempt to get the material which the Senator has suggested we should have?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, there is another feature involved in this matter, to which the Senator from Michigan has called attention. It is not unknown that there is a flat difference of opinion as to whether this bill ought to authorize loans to private enterprise; that is, to individuals engaged in competitive lines of business. I understand that an amendment will be offered which will authorize loans of that character.

Those who have been concerned in the preparation of the bill, which has now become the amendment, have steadfastly refused to introduce any provision into the bill whatever to authorize loans to private enterprise wherever the business is competitive in character, feeling that it would be quite unjust to make loans to one company or one enterprise from the Public Treasury while its rivals and competitors were obliged to rely upon their own resources to carry through their business.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I was just going to point out that the Committee on Banking and Currency gave very thorough consideration to that question, and voted 9 to 6 against including any provision to lend to private industry.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. This would not only be granting authority to lend to private enterprise but guaranteeing the insurance contracts of a private insurance company, of which, as we gather here, there are a considerable number in the United States engaged in this same business, namely, in assuring to exporters the prompt payment of obligations due them from abroad. We would loan perhaps to one company, and the other reinsurance companies would be obliged to rely upon their own resources.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. COPELAND. Just a moment. Let me reply, if I may, to what the Senator from Montana has said.

I agree fully with the policy of the committee in not providing for loans to competitive enterprises. I think that is right. But the organization to which I have referred is a cooperative organization, which includes all manufacturing enterprise. We are not asked to lend money to an exporter of plows, or threshing machines, or sewing machines, or furniture. We are seeking to help that underwriting concern which is guarding the credit of manufacturers of all products. It is not to assist any one concern as against another. It is to take care of the export business of all.

Now, I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was going to make a suggestion to the Senator from Montana, if the Senator from New York will permit me.

The Senator from Montana states the line of demarcation between two different groups in this body as to the loans which shall be made. Coming to our desks at 11 o'clock this morning is an amendment which is presented by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], wherein that line is made perfectly plain. I had no opportunity to see the amendment or to read it until after the Senate convened this morning, but as I read it, it endeavors to do exactly what the Senator from Montana suggests is objectionable to those in charge of the bill, and it endeavors to do also what, in my opinion, would render the bill practically futile if it were adopted. But the amendment does represent a considerable number upon this side of the Chamber, and it provides for the lending of the money that is assumed to be loaned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under the measure to private, competitive organizations, corporations, and the like.

The amendment of the Senator from New York would be probably wholly appropriate under the amendment that is tendered by the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from New Jersey. This amendment, thus tendered, goes to the very heart of the policy which shall be pursued in the measure before us. I wanted to make the suggestion to those in charge of the bill that perhaps it would be better for us to settle that policy at the beginning of this discussion instead of at the end of the discussion, and if the Senators will turn to the amendment that has been presented at 11 o'clock this morning, intended to be proposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] they will see, as I assume to be the fact—though I have not consulted with either of the Senators mentioned—that apparently it attempts to do exactly what those in charge of this measure inhibited when they presented the measure, and if that is to be the contest in determining the policy of the Senate in regard to this bill, let us determine that policy, I suggest, in the beginning, now, and then we will know exactly where we are going.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I suggest that the Senator read the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator from New York has the floor. I thank him for having yielded to me.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I want to make just one more observation and then I shall yield the floor.

It is pointed out by these various correspondents of mine that the problem of foreign credit has been anticipated by many foreign governments, which have already set up organizations to maintain and amplify their foreign trade by supporting the exporter by government aid in foreign credit insurance. Here is a concern which does business in 70 countries of the world, and, with the uncertainty of exchange, of necessity it is impossible to have any assurance that credits are good.

It has occurred to me that it is unwise to press this amendment at the moment, but it is my intention to call the matter to the attention of the Department of Commerce and of those who have presented the matter to me, and see if we can not work out some amendment to the bill which will be acceptable to its sponsors and acceptable to the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I have received letters similar to those mentioned by the Senator from the parties whom he has mentioned, and in these letters they referred to provisions of this bill under subdivision (b), in section 101. They seem to be of the impression that that which is provided for agricultural products should be provided for manufactured products. It seems to me, however, that the proposition which they have presented to us is broader and much larger than the provisions of this bill applying to agricultural products which are exported. I suggest to the Senator that he confine his amendment to exports of manufactured products in the same manner in which exports of agricultural products are taken care of.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank my friend the Senator from Massachusetts, and, with the consent of the Senate, I will temporarily withdraw the amendment in the hope that it may be reshaped so as to be acceptable.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator believe that if this amendment were accepted in spirit, or in the present form, it would lead to further raids—and I do not use that term offensively—upon this bill by private corporations, until finally we would have nothing left? I say frankly that I will not vote for this bill if it is to be for the purpose of furnishing funds out of the Public Treasury to aid private corporations and private business.

Mr. COPELAND. I say to my friend from Utah that I share his views regarding that.

If this were a proposal to encourage competitive business, I stand with the Senator from Utah; but if we are going to aid the manufacturers of the United States and assist them in general in their export business, certainly if we have the power and the will to do it, we can do something for them worth while. But in the meantime I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I have an amendment to subsection (a), page 101. The amendment has been printed and is on the table, and I would like to have the clerk report it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 101, line 13, before the period, to insert a semicolon and the following: "except that loans may be made under the provisions of this subdivision to aid in financing the construction of any publicly owned bridge to be used for railroad, railway, and highway uses, the construction cost of which will be returned in part by means of tolls, fees, rents, or other charges, and the remainder by means of taxes imposed pursuant to State law heretofore enacted; and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is further authorized and empowered to purchase bonds of any State, municipality, or other public body or agency issued for the purpose of financing the construction of any such bridge irrespective of the dates of maturity of such bonds."

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, some gentlemen representing the city of New Orleans have asked me to offer this amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, unless some other Senator has objection, I might say to the Senator that I see no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment on page 101, line 2, after the word "waterworks," to insert the word "canals." I see no reason why we should not include canals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 101, line 2, after the word "waterworks," insert the word "canals," so as to read:

To private corporations to aid in carrying out the construction of bridges, tunnels, docks, viaducts, waterworks, canals, and similar projects devoted to public use and which are self-liquidating in character.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator whether the word "canals" is to be limited to canals which are owned by the Government and by States or whether it contemplates canals constructed and owned by private persons and by individuals? We have many canals in my State which we use for irrigation purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, these are all self-liquidating projects.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; navigation canals.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The incorporation of the word "canals" at the point indicated by the Senator from Florida would be restricted by the term "self-liquidating projects," so no loans would go to canals other than those which are self-liquidating.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I am frank to say I do not understand the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment for the information of the Senator from Michigan.

The legislative clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] was right in his statement a moment ago. We ought to settle this whole question of just where we are going. In other words, we should determine whether the proposal made by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] in his amendment which was adopted a moment ago really contemplates self-liquidation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It does.

Mr. COUZENS. The amendment which the Senator from Louisiana proposed contemplates the collection of taxes for part payment of the loan.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. But that is different from the self-liquidating projects described in the bill. The amendment of the Senator from Florida has only a remote relation to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana, which has been agreed to. The amendment of the Senator from Florida is included in "bridges, tunnels, docks, viaducts, waterworks, canals, and similar projects devoted to public use and which are self-liquidating in character." So far as I can see, there is no occasion to discriminate against the construction of a canal which is intended to be devoted to public use and which pays for itself by reason of tolls, charges, or some other means.

Mr. COUZENS. Does the Senator from Arkansas believe we will have a definition of "self-liquidating" before we get through?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think a "self-liquidating" project may be explained to be one which pays for itself.

Mr. COUZENS. When?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is another question and a difficult one. Of course, it never pays for itself immediately; but I think the committee has fairly defined it.

Mr. FLETCHER. After all, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should determine that matter before they make the advance.

Mr. COUZENS. For how long does the Senator contemplate they would make the loan to build the canal?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly within the life of the corporation.

Mr. COUZENS. If the undertaking was not self-liquidated at the time the corporation expired, what would the Senator propose to be done with the loan or the unpaid balance?

Mr. FLETCHER. That would be a question of refinancing or arranging for refinancing. If the corporation can satisfy themselves that the project will be self-liquidating within the life of the corporation, all well and good; or if they can satisfy themselves that within that time nine-tenths of it will be liquidated, they can generally infer and gather and believe that the other one-tenth can be financed outside of the corporation.

Mr. COUZENS. At this point may I ask the Senator what he had in mind should become of the portion not liquidated at the time of the expiration of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. FLETCHER. It would be subject to an arrangement to be made between the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the people to whom the loan is made. There would have to be assurance of that in some form adequate to satisfy the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. COUZENS. Does not the Senator believe that Congress ought to fix some rule applying to self-liquidating corporations to determine what shall be done at the expiration of the life of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Congress proposes that in the bill now under consideration. As I said a moment ago, there is a definition in the bill of "self-liquidating projects," in the language on page 101 immediately following or very shortly following the language that has been amended, which reads as follows:

> For the purposes of this subdivision a project shall be deemed to be self-liquidating if such project will be made self-supporting and financially solvent and if the construction cost thereof will be returned within a reasonable period by means of tolls, fees, rents, or other charges.

Mr. COUZENS. At this point I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] was adopted, because the language does not provide that it shall be self-liquidating. It proposes that it shall be partially paid by the collection of taxes.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from Michigan would not enter the motion if he understood the situation.

Mr. COUZENS. Let me say I am not having in mind any specific project at all. I am taking the viewpoint that either this bill should provide for the lending of funds to all private industry or it should lend to self-liquidating projects within the definition just cited by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. But the amendment just adopted on the motion of the Senator's colleague provides that a part of it is to be paid by taxation and a part of it by tolls. I wish to enter a motion to have that vote reconsidered because it is not provided in the bill that we are to rely upon taxation for any of these projects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Michigan to reconsider will be entered. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I notice on page 101, line 17, it is stated that "as used in this subdivision the term 'States' includes Puerto Rico." I have consulted with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] in charge of the bill and have been informed that it was not intended to exclude Territories. Therefore I send to the desk an amendment which will take care of this situation and permit Territories to be included. The amendment is in several parts and I ask unanimous consent that they may be considered as one amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments submitted by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 101, line 17, after the words "Puerto Rico," insert "and the Territories"; on page 103, lines 18 and 19, after the words "Puerto Rico," insert the words "and the Territories"; on page 105, at the end of line 13, insert "as used in this subsection the term 'States' includes the Territory of Hawaii"; on page 108, line 6, strike out the word "continental"; and on page 109, lines 4 and 5, strike out the word "continental."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut asks that the amendments may be considered en bloc. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendments en bloc as offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am quite in accord with the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut, but I should like to inquire what other Territories than Hawaii are involved?

Mr. BINGHAM. The only other Territory is Alaska. The reason why the word "Alaska" was not used definitely is that in connection with roads in Alaska we make a direct proposition.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is what I understood.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I say in this connection that I have been told an effort would be made to eliminate or strike out the name "Puerto Rico" from the bill? Certainly there can be no sound argument which would justify extending the provisions of the bill to Puerto Rico and withholding them from Hawaii and Alaska.

Mr. BINGHAM. May I say to the Senator from Arkansas that Puerto Rico does not contribute at all to the revenues of the United States, whereas, as the Senator well knows, the Territory of Hawaii contributes about $10,000,000, or as much as several States put together?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I had that in mind when I made my statement.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I rise in the interest of progress on the bill. On Saturday last I introduced an amendment proposing to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in its discretion, to make loans to Indians on Indian Reservations and to accept as security for such loans wool produced by Indians and woolen blankets made by Indians from wool grown on Indian reservations. I now perceive that the Senate, in order to make progress respecting this bill, must first determine whether it is going to make loans to individuals. Therefore, I withdraw my amendment, because it proposes to make loans to individual Indians.

I see the inescapable logic of the suggestions made by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], and other Senators, that the Senate must first determine whether it is going to make loans to individuals. So I withdraw my amendment until that question shall be determined. If the Senate determines thus to do, I shall later offer my amendment.

It will be remembered that when the original Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill was before the Senate last winter I offered an amendment proposing that loans might be made to individual citizens of the United States upon good security, and I think it received 1 vote—my own. I have not changed my mind with respect to the advisability, yea, the necessity at this time of making loans to individuals who tender perfectly good and solid security, but I plead now with the Senate to settle first the question as to its policy.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 100, line 18, after the word "corporation," insert the words "boards and commissions," and also in line 20, after the word "under," insert the word "Federal."

Mr. HOWELL. This is for the purpose of providing that where boards and commissions have been created instead of a corporation, and if created by Federal law, they shall be included in the provisions of the bill. The amendment has been approved by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I have several amendments corrective in their nature which really do not go to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. My amendment is to correct the so-called Garner bill. It will take only a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Wisconsin offers the following amendment: On page 65, between lines 14 and 15, insert the following:

Milwaukee Harbor, Wis., House Document 282, Seventy-second Congress.

IN REPLY TO SENATOR REED

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin will pardon me for interfering for the moment with the consideration of his amendment, but I have been trying to get the floor for several moments.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] is now here. I want to call the attention of the Senate to some remarks made here in my absence by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania which I can not allow to go unchallenged. On page 13010 of the RECORD of June 15, 1932, the appointment of Mr. Burguieres, of New Orleans, to be commissioner of immigration, was considered by the Senate; that is, it was reported by the committee for confirmation. Among some remarks which were passed on the floor of the Senate, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]—and I wish to thank him very kindly at this time—mentioned the fact that I had appeared before the committee and had objected to the confirmation of Mr. Burguieres for personal reasons and for the reason that he was obnoxious to the labor people of my State. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] among other remarks, and all remarks were similar, finally wound up by saying this:

Mr. REED. The Senator from Utah is one of the most scrupulous in attendance to his duties here on the floor of the Senate, and I know that he agrees with me that it is indefensible for any one of us to go away in the absence of an emergency, and to remain away for weeks at a time, and expect the business of the Senate to stagnate in his absence.

Mr. President, I was absent from the city on very important business of the State of Louisiana and, I think, business of the United States. I have not been absent except for this purpose since I have been a Member of the Senate. I understand that it hardly lies within the province of the Senator from Pennsylvania to make an attack here because I was absent at this particular time, because I am one of the sorrowing Senators who has frequently had to undergo the sad situation of seeing the Senator from Pennsylvania absent from his seat. I understand that no doubt the Senator from Pennsylvania is not well aware that there is another State besides Pennsylvania. More or less like all of us, he is somewhat inclined to be provincial in his mind and ideas, but by reason of the disaster of the Hoover administration the State of Louisiana and all other States have had to undertake great corrective measures.

We have found ourselves in the midst of a depression, with which the Senator from Pennsylvania is more acquainted than I am and the cause of which he is in more of a position to understand than I am, which necessitated taking care of 650,000 school children in the State of Louisiana. We had to impose certain taxes in that State upon some of the special interests, and I was requested by my friends and by the governor of that State to come and assist them in the preparation of legislation necessary to keep the schools open and to keep the hospitals running.

I have understood—I may be mistaken in this, and if I am I beg the Senator from Pennsylvania to correct me—that even at times when the Senate was in session the Senator from Pennsylvania himself has been absent to attend to law business. I may be wrong in that; and if I am, I want to be corrected by the Senator; but the Senator who makes this great spectacle of a Senator being absent from this body at a time when he was undertaking to assist his State has at times been absent in his own State pleading the cause or attending to the cause or working in the cause of some of his clients. So it is even worse than a case of the pot calling the kettle black for the Senator to make this statement while I was away from the Senate.

While I have the floor, Mr. President, I wish to say that I have not been able to be present here during the last two or three weeks, although I believe I was in as constant attendance on the Senate as any Senator prior to that time for a number of weeks.

I have opposed Mr. Burguieres's appointment, although it was concurred in and recommended by my colleague, because he is obnoxious to the laboring people of my State. He has a record which they have certified and which I have filed with the committee, a record which the laboring people of my State think disqualifies him absolutely from becoming commissioner of immigration in that State.

He is also obnoxious for reasons not stated and which I have not placed in the record, because I think that were I to do so, I might be held to transgress some of the rules of the Senate, as to one of which I was called to order some time ago.

I presented those objections and at the time I presented them I was told, as I think the hearing of the committee will show, that those objections were positively sufficient, or I was given the impression at the time that those objections were sufficient and that the nomination would not be reported to the Senate. That is what I was led to understand. I had every assurance when I left here that the nomination of this man was not going to be reported to the Senate and put on the calendar for confirmation. However, it seems apparently to be the policy of the Republican Party, and possibly of some of those on this side of the Chamber, that in the case of a particular position which affects laboring people more than any Federal appointment that can be made in that State, the fact that the man who is nominated for that position is, because of his unfair record, universally condemned by the laboring organizations and by all the laboring people in the State is no reason whatever why the Republican cohorts should not advocate the confirmation of the nominee and should not report his nomination to the Senate in my absence and urge his speedy confirmation.

It is getting high time that the Members of the Senate should give some attention to the laboring people of this country. Yet when a nomination comes in here affecting the men who are paying the bills under the tax system that has been put over by the Senate, the men who are bearing the burden of supporting the Government, who are suffering from economic reverses who have come here and asked the Senate not to put this man over on them in that State in the midst of the present condition of economic adversity, the Senator from Pennsylvania thinks it is a terrible and frightful thing that the nomination should not be spontaneously and immediately put over here in the Senate.

Mr. President, if on the day I appeared before the committee I had not had the impression—and the Senator from Utah, the Senator from New York, and the Senator from West Virginia were present—and had I not been given to understand at that meeting that the committee was not going to report this nomination, there were weeks and days when I sat in this body and when I could have been called upon for any statement as to that nomination.

A few days ago it came out on the floor of the Senate, and I heard a number of gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber say—and a number of them on this side of the Chamber concurred—that a man who was a member of the President's Cabinet who was holding an important position as a Federal employee ought not to be national committeeman of his State or engage in its politics.

Mr. President, in Louisiana there are not any Republicans except the "black and tans," and the officeholders or the would-be officeholders under the Republican Party. Everybody who knows anything about the condition in the State of Louisiana knows that the real sincere Republicans of that State are the "black and tans." When they undertook to take the political organization away from the only people down there that ever have voted the Republican ticket, and when I was asked a number of years ago to assist in that movement, I declined to do so, because I thought that a man who had not been in the church had no right to come up there and take the songbook from a man who was a sincere Republican; and if they wanted to go into the Republican Party, they ought to be required to go in under the terms that were prescribed by somebody else.

Mr. Ernest Lee Jahncke, who has been a charge on that State, Mr. Jahncke, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, I understand, has taken such serious personal offense about the treatment that has been given to this favored appointee that he desires to have put over in the Senate. Mr. Jahncke, who is Assistant Secretary of the Navy, has no right—and I say this speaking personally and as a former governor of that State—Mr. Jahncke has no right to come to the Senate and complain about the objection that has been made by the people of the State of Louisiana. I do not need to disclose that the administration of the State of Louisiana and these very laboring people have been most kind to him in a certain situation—and he knows what I am talking about. He has no right, and I say that it is an act of absolute ingratitude for Ernest Lee Jahncke, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, to try to drive this appointment through the Senate.

My colleague the senior Senator from Louisiana had a little something to say about this matter, according to the newspapers. However, the report of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD does not confirm what was contained in the newspapers by a great deal. My colleague stated, according to the RECORD:

> I do not know that my colleague, who is now in Louisiana running the legislature, should be allowed to prevent the confirmation of a man at this session.

Well, Mr. President, it is just a question as to whose ox is gored in running the Legislature of Louisiana. Of course, if it is being run in opposition to the Long administration or the Allen administration, then it is not being run by the people, in the view of the political opposition, but as we view the matter, when it is being run by us, then it is being run in the interest of the people. That matter has been settled in Louisiana and will be settled in Louisiana. I do not care to wash the political linen of the State of Louisiana in the Senate and I do not believe that my colleague desires to wash the political affairs of the State of Louisiana in the Senate.

He states in this RECORD that he knows the nominee, has known him for a lifetime, and knows him to be a very good man of high standing. Personally, I do not know the man at all, so far as I recollect, but I do know something of his activities.

When I was telephoned a number of days ago before this nomination was sent to the Senate, I was asked then by Mr. Jahncke himself if I had any objection to Mr. Burguieres. I told him that I knew of none whatever; but before I had returned from New York, where I was telephoned to from Washington, there was on my desk a record of the man, and it was such that I could not let his nomination go by without objecting to him, not only in my own right but objecting to him on behalf of the laboring people of that State and of the area which is affected by this appointment.

Mr. President, everybody knows that we have had considerable politics in the Senate. I have never made any objection to any politician. I say that every man in the United States Senate is to some extent a politician; he would not be in the United States Senate if he were not some kind of a politician; and I have always taken the liberal view that all of us have to go back to our home States and take care of our politics; everyone has got to do it if he stays in office. We are not so fortunate as is the Senator from Pennsylvania.

I am here in my own right as a United States Senator; I am here elected by the people of that State; I have not a Vare nor a Mellon in Louisiana to help me come to the United States Senate. I have got to get the votes in my own right. The ipse dixit of a political organization can not make me Senator from the State of Louisiana; they can not meet between suns and send me and between moons send somebody else. We have 400,000 qualified voters in the State of Louisiana, and we have to take care of them. In this particular case I do not want to transgress the rules of the Senate, Mr. President, you will understand; I do not want to say anything that transgresses the rules of the Senate or to reflect upon any Member of the Senate. I would not do it for my right arm. I want to stay within the rules of the Senate. I do not want to offend the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. The Senator could not.

Mr. LONG. That is fine. I do not know whether the Senator means by that that he is immune or whether he "considers the source," but I will take the charitable position and assume that it is the latter.

But, Mr. President, it is very timely that we hear from the Senator from Pennsylvania on this kind of questions. I say to you, Mr. President, that every human being is a product of creation or environment, and we can not get away from it. I wonder how the Senator from Pennsylvania felt when he saw the State of Louisiana, under one of the supposed-to-be Long laws, put a tax upon electrical power in that State and require that it be absorbed and not passed on to the public. That provision went into the law, while at the same time, under the masterful guidance and help of the Senator from Pennsylvania, the United States Senate voted a tax upon power and passed it along to the people. I am wondering if in some subconscious mind, unknown to the Senator from Pennsylvania, there might not have seeped up some kind of an influence which misled him as to the purpose of my absence from the Senate.

That is not all that we had to do. I am wondering whether the Senator from Pennsylvania read in the paper that we placed a corporation franchise tax upon the corporations in the State of Louisiana, which I unsuccessfully undertook to do when I was the governor of that State and came very near being impeached as a result of it, which went over in the State senate by a vote of 30 to 8 this time.

Mr. President, all my life I have read of the big characters and geniuses of this Nation. I have in my early days sat by the spring in the corner of a rail fence and read and admired the talents of the Senator from Pennsylvania long before I ever heard of what the purpose and function of the United States Senate were in a real sensible fashion. As the news spread that we sat here in the United States Senate and voted tax after tax upon the consumers of this Nation—taxes upon automobiles, taxes upon candy, taxes upon everything that can be had, consumed, desired, or otherwise known about—I am wondering whether or not the Senator looked afar off and saw the State of Louisiana putting the taxes where they would be absorbed by the people who are able to absorb them under these distressful conditions; putting the taxes where they belong; putting the taxes upon the interests that have this country tied in a web in one solid Power Trust; and I wonder whether the Senator might not subconsciously and unconsciously—because it would have to be that way—have allowed himself to criticize an absence entirely justified under these distressful conditions.

The Republicans have had a convention over in Chicago. Several Members of this body went to the convention over in Chicago. Several Members on the other side of the Chamber were active and prominent participants in the convention over in Chicago. I have been asked by my party to come to Chicago.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. Before the Senator gets off the question of the confirmation of an immigration official, I should like to ask the Senator if he is opposed to the confirmation of Marcel Garsaud as power commissioner, because we have been waiting practically a month for the Senator to register his views about it.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; I should like to discuss that matter a moment, if the Senator will permit me.

I was advised by the Senator from Michigan—I got the telegram, I believe, Thursday—that a hearing would be held on the confirmation of Mr. Marcel Garsaud as a member of the Power Commission to-day. I went to my friends and induced them to hold day and night sessions of the Louisiana Legislature in order that we might dispose of all business, so that I might be in Washington this morning to attend that hearing. Upon my arrival the Senator very kindly and courteously told me that, not having received an answer to his telegram, he had postponed the hearing until to-morrow. I made my arrangements and came here to-day, on the day that I was informed by the Senator from Michigan the hearing would be held, and the legislature wound up by holding sessions all day and almost all night in order that I might get here to-day, because, Mr. President, it was a crime against this country when they put that man, Marcel Garsaud, on the Power Commission. There never was a greater crime committed against the men, women, and children in this country than when they put Marcel Garsaud on the Power Commission. If you do not think that is the view of the people of the State of Louisiana on the subject matter, you will be convinced of that in a way that will be irrefutable within the next few months' time, if you have not already had such evidence.

I knew Marcel Garsaud down there. He was under me as the general manager of the dock board. I had already been elected to the United States Senate when he was appointed by President Hoover to the Power Commission. Why, I would a whole lot rather go to Harvey Couch, whom I know most intimately, to secure a concession or ruling against the power companies than go to Marcel Garsaud to-day. I do not even know Andrew W. Mellon, but I do know Marcel Garsaud; and I would take the chances of the people of the State of Louisiana 40 times to 1 with Andrew W. Mellon before I would take them with Marcel Garsaud. If there ever was a thimble-rigging, thumbscrew appointee of the most nefarious interests in the country, it was that man.

He was put out of his job in Louisiana, kicked out of it, because of the fact that as general manager of the dock board he had kept in existence a thimble-rigging, nefarious system of contracts with a power company, by which he took the publicly owned port of the State of Louisiana, bonded for $41,000,000, and divided it up into units—unit 1, unit 2, unit 3. He had divided the business of that port—which was one port, connected every plank and every nail with another one—up into units, so that the consumption of power down there would be insufficient for them to enjoy a consolidated power rate.

That is the gentleman who has been selected by the President of the United States to sit on the Power Commission of this country. Every job he ever had was as the result of friends of this Power Trust. Nobody that has been picked out of the State of Louisiana by this Republican administration for any job of any kind whatever has been picked except from that nefarious group that has been publicly repudiated and rebuked by the people of the State of Louisiana.

The only certificate of good character with the administration of Herbert Hoover is: You must have been publicly rebuked by the people of the State of Louisiana before you are eligible for appointment under this Republican administration. [Laughter.] That is the sacramental function. You must have been positively obnoxious to the working people of that country before you have even the right to come in at the outer door to receive an appointment at the hands of the Hoover administration.

I can only be in so many places at one time. I am not a very important man in the affairs of this Nation, and I am sure many people will agree that I am not a very important man in the affairs of the State of Louisiana; but I have taken the responsibility of seeing that 650,000 children shall be able to go to school this fall, and had I not undertaken and received the help of my friends to raise an additional sum of several millions of dollars which could not be borne by the poor people of that State, but which had to be borne by the special interests of that State, the schools in the State of Louisiana could not have run this year. The great Louisiana State University, the pride of this country, the old war school established by Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman, could not have continued its work this year except for what we had to do in the Legislature of the State of Louisiana at this time.

Now, it seems to me—and I address this particularly to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], although I must say that the Senator from Michigan, so far as I know, takes very little hand in politics of any kind, and I am one of his true admirers, I believe, if he has one, and I know he has thousands and probably millions—it does seem to me that at this time I should be accorded the right to attend the Democratic National Convention over in Chicago, and to attend to certain functions, without the people who wish to make protests against these appointees being denied their rights to be heard.

I have undertaken to show, and I always have, I think, shown, that spirit here in the Senate. I always have done it, so long as I have been here, and it seems to me that I should be given some little time to come here—and I will come as quickly as anyone else can return—to present the facts and figures to this committee over which the Senator from Michigan presides, and to the Senate, as a result of the appointment of Mr. Burguieres, and as a result of the reappointment of Mr. Garsaud. I believe the Senate will accord me the same rights and consideration that it accords to the distinguished Senators on the other side of this Chamber who have seen fit to go to the national convention, and there are some on this side.

I am not unmindful of the fact that I stand rather peculiarly in the Senate as regards any party backing, but I am going to stand a whole lot stronger as regards party backing a little later on. You need not be worried about that. Chickens are going to come home to roost in this country in several sections before very long. I am not a bit worried about that. [Laughter.]

I appeal to the Members who are here now whether I should not be given the right to present these facts and these matters, which have not been and could not have been thoroughly presented to the Senate and to these committees, and can not be submitted in my absence. How would any other Member of the Senate feel under the circumstances? I went before the committee several weeks before I left the Senate, and I left there with every assurance on earth that there was not any danger of that nomination being reported out by that committee—none at all—and now it is brought up here for confirmation at a time when I can not be here, and at a time, I say, when it is unfair to the laboring people of this country.

I think, Mr. President, if the committee were going to report this nomination out, instead of having given me to understand—or, rather, whether they intended to do so or not, instead of having left it so that I might have believed that what I had presented ample—they should have heard from the laboring people of that country before sending this nomination here.

So, Mr. President, as to the remarks of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I hope that I am not in any way, in any sense, in his innermost heart, causing him any offense whatever. The Senator has a peculiar position. He has an administration to defend which is obnoxious, probably, in every corner and section of this land. I once, for a few months of my life, was prosecuting attorney by special appointment in a number of cases, and I experienced the difficulty that always they put the prosecuting attorney on trial when there is any other man to be tried. The Senator from Pennsylvania can not try the Republican Party's record in this political campaign, because I do not believe there is anybody who can stand to defend this condition of unemployment. I do not believe anybody can stand the obnoxious tax system that has been imposed upon the people of the United States, by going into every little vicinity and taxing every little product when it was not necessary to support this Government. Instead of having confined ourselves to a tax system which would have put the tax upon the people earning the money, we have gone down and put it on the people in such a way as to burden them if they are such people as consume the utter necessities of life; and so the Senator from Pennsylvania has a position which I am not going to envy in any respect.

I sympathize with the position of the Senator, and I hope and I bespeak for the Senator that he will understand and appreciate the absence of some one on State business as being nearly as important as though he might even have been absent attending to the business of some favored private client of his law practice.

LOANS TO STATES—SYSTEM OF HIGHWAYS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12445) to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by authorizing and expediting a public-works program and providing a method of financing such program.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] is agreed to.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I offer three amendments, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments to the amendment will be stated in their order.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 101, line 1, after the word "construction," insert a comma and the words "replacement, or improvement."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On the same page, 101, line 6, after the word "such," the first time it occurs, insert the word "adequate," and on page 100, line 21, change the comma to a semicolon, and strike out all of lines 22, 23, and 24.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 101, line 8, after the period, insert:

Such loans may be made through the purchase of securities, or otherwise, and for such purposes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to bid for such securities: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in carrying out the provisions of this act, from purchasing securities having a maturity of more than 10 years.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I confess my inability to hear what is being presented or read by the clerk. Is this a committee amendment, may I ask the Senator from New York?

Mr. WAGNER. No; it is an amendment which is very simple. I will explain it.

We provide in the bill that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in making loans to municipalities or other public agencies, may purchase bonds as the security for the loans.

Under the pending bill the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may not make a loan for a longer period than 10 years. That provision is subject to the interpretation that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has no authority to purchase bonds having a maturity of longer than 10 years, and that would limit very much the securities which the corporation could accept as collateral security. This proposed amendment simply empowers it to buy bonds of longer maturity.

Mr. McNARY. Let me understand. To what section is the amendment directed?

Mr. WAGNER. Page 100, beginning line 8. Let the clerk read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 101, line 8, after the period, insert the words, "Such loans may be made through the purchase of securities, or otherwise, and for such purposes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to bid for such securities: Provided, however, That nothing here contained shall be construed to prohibit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in carrying out the provisions of this act, from purchasing securities having a maturity of more than 10 years."

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, it is my understanding, although I see that the language is not in accordance with my understanding, that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is to make loans on adequate security, but it appears from the reading of the bill that they are permitted to bid for the purchase of securities in any of these activities which it is authorized to put money into. In other words, the amendment which the Senator offers provides that it may go out and bid in the market for securities.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, that refers particularly to a situation in California, although I am told there are other instances with similar limitation. This is simply to take care of a situation where bonds are issued, the money to be used for the prosecution of public projects, and the law provides that they can not be sold except as a result of bidding. If we desire to advance money for the construction of projects in States where bonds of the State or its agent can not be sold except after public bidding this amendment is necessary. The amendment is simply to take care of such a case.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I understand that that puts the ownership of the securities permanently in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. In other words, there is no obligation from the borrower ever to pay off the securities. In other words, the only security the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has is the security which it gets in the market. In the case of all other loans, from banks and from railroads, the obligation of the maker of the loan is secured to the corporation outside of the mere deposit of securities. That is what I want to insist upon.

Mr. WAGNER. The bill provides that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may enter into a contract with a public agency in which provision is made for the liquidation of the advance or loan, and as security for the loan these bonds are deposited, so that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has, first, the agreement that the project is to be made self-liquidating and will pay for itself eventually; and, second, as to the bonds which it purchases, the money from which is used to prosecute the projects, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may dispose of those bonds, if it deems it advisable, by sale before the date of maturity. I do not see the slightest difficulty about it.

Mr. COUZENS. I see a great deal of difficulty.

Mr. WAGNER. Let me say this, in addition: Even at the end of 10 years, if the loan ends, under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, all of the securities which are left are turned over to the Secretary of the Treasury for liquidation; so that there is ample security.

Mr. COUZENS. If I understand the amendment correctly, this puts the Reconstruction Finance Corporation into the bond and security business, by authorizing them to go out and bid for any security.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. In the first place, we must recollect that the loans of municipalities are governed by the definition of a self-liquidating proposition. That is point No. 1. If it does not come within the definition of a self-liquidating proposition, then there is no loan. If it does come within that definition, then the question is whether or not they shall enter into a contract and put up bonds as security, or whether they shall turn the bonds over. It simply happens that the charters of certain municipalities, or the constitutions of certain States, define how they may borrow money.

Mr. COUZENS. I understand that.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is, through the sale of bonds, on bids.

The relation of the corporation to the municipality would be no different if it took the bonds as security under the contract, or if it bid for them and took them in that way, providing the corporation found two things, that it was a self-liquidating project, and that, being a self-liquidating project, the returns would be sufficient to pay the bonds with interest.

Mr. COUZENS. Pay them when?

Mr. PITTMAN. Pay them when due, with interest.

Mr. COUZENS. When is it proposed they shall be due?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not see that that is material.

Mr. COUZENS. But I want to point out the language of the amendment. The amendment absolutely puts the Reconstruction Finance Corporation into the business of bidding for loans.

Mr. PITTMAN. Not generally.

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly. The Senator himself just pointed out that these self-liquidating corporations need not be municipal, need not be State, or governmental self-liquidating corporations——

Mr. PITTMAN. Oh, yes; they must be.

Mr. COUZENS. They may be private self-liquidating corporations.

Mr. PITTMAN. Not under that section.

Mr. COUZENS. It provides:

> Such loans may be made through the purchase of securities, or otherwise, and for such purposes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to bid for such securities.

Mr. PITTMAN. But it can not be a private corporation, because it defines right above what kind of corporations the loans may be made to.

Mr. COUZENS. But there is no obligation on the corporation which sells these securities other than to make good the final interest or principal payment of the security which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation purchases.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is absolutely true, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is bound by the character of project it must be, if they bid for and purchase any bonds which are not of a municipal or quasi-municipal corporation performing a public use, and the fund provided in advance to the self-liquidating character of the project that would assure that the interest on the bonds would be paid.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I want to ask the Senator from Nevada if the Senator from Michigan is not correct in assuming that private corporations are to be the beneficiaries of these loans.

Mr. PITTMAN. No, they are not; under the terms of the measure.

Mr. KING. I invite the Senator's attention to line 25, page 100, carrying over to the next page, 101, "to private corporations to aid in carrying out the construction of bridges, tunnels, docks, viaducts, waterworks," and so forth.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; but the Senator should read the rest of it, "and similar projects devoted to public use."

Mr. KING. I understand; but they are private corporations, nevertheless.

Mr. PITTMAN. But devoted to public use.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I wonder that there should be any confusion about this. If the Senator from Utah will give me his attention, he will observe this language, beginning in line 13:

> That (a) the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans (1) to States, municipalities, and political subdivisions of States, public agencies of States, of municipalities, and of political subdivisions of States, public or quasi-public corporations, and public or quasi-public municipal instrumentalities.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation may bid for the securities of those institutions, because they have no other way of making loans. They are required to make loans in that way by the statutes of the States, and perhaps by the constitutions of the States. That disposes of that.

Going on, we come to the provision for loans "to private corporations to aid in carrying out," and so forth. That is quite a different thing. That is another class of loans altogether.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, a very broad discretion is given the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as follows:

> Such loans shall be made under such terms and conditions, with such security, and in such amounts and for such periods (not exceeding 10 years), as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may prescribe.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if I might continue, the Senator from Michigan calls our attention to a situation with respect to municipalities which deserves consideration. I do not conceive that these municipalities and States and other entities of that kind will be putting up any collateral. The corporation must, with respect to those, rely upon the taxing power to meet the obligations of the States and political subdivisions. Of course, bonds will be purchased and must be purchased. That is the only way in which they can borrow. Those bonds may be for any length of time. They may be for five years, or they may be for 10 years, or they may be for 25 years or 50 years. Of course, there is no limitation placed upon the purchase of these securities by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

If after a time they shall still retain them, as in all probability they will, it is then up to Congress to determine what disposition shall be made of them; whether they shall be held and the interest accumulated until maturity, or whether they shall be put upon the market and disposed of. There is no provision in this bill as to how eventually those securities shall be disposed of by the corporation prior to their maturity.

Mr. COUZENS. That is exactly the point I desire to make. In other words, the municipality does not in any sense obligate itself to pay off the Reconstruction Finance Corporation upon the maturity of the security.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It can not do so, because the only way it can borrow is by selling its bonds.

Mr. COUZENS. That does not necessarily follow. It is well known that States and municipalities at this very time are borrowing money for six months, or a year, or nine months——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Anticipating revenue.

Mr. COUZENS. In anticipation of revenue, and they are obligated to pay off the securities, whether they collect their taxes or not. There is a definite due date on which they are obligated to pay off the securities, and that is what I want in this case. I want the municipalities, if they are going to get money from this corporation, to obligate themselves to pay off the corporation at a specific date.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. While the maturity of the bonds may be longer than the 10-year period, it may very well be that the debt will be amortized before that time, because with it will be an agreement to make this particular project self-liquidating, the charging of rents, or tolls, and those particular collections will be dedicated to the liquidation of the debt.

Mr. COUZENS. There is nothing in the measure requiring that, because the Senator says in his amendment that they may bid for them.

Mr. WAGNER. We have to repose some sort of confidence in the body which administers these funds.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield to me?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I say to the Senator that it is quite true there are certain municipalities, there are certain States, which can borrow on short-term credits; but the majority of our municipalities and the majority of our States can not borrow in that fashion at all. In many States it is constitutional, and in many municipalities it is by virtue of the organic law of the municipalities. The only way they can borrow is by the disposition of bonds regularly issued under a procedure prescribed by the organic law. If it were sought to shut out those States and those cities of that character, it would shut out from the provisions of the bill most of the States of the United States and nearly all municipalities.

New York has a system of financing peculiar unto itself under which it anticipates its revenues and issues short-term credits. We can not do that in the municipalities of the West at all. We can not issue short-term credits. We can not borrow in anticipation of revenues. We can not do it by the State and we can not do it by the county and we can not do it by the municipality.

The very object of the bill is that we shall extend aid to self-liquidating projects that are under the control, the construction, the manipulation, and the like of the cities and States and the public corporations and the quasi-public corporations. When we have their credit as evidenced by the bonds duly issued under amortization limitations, as bonds only can be issued in most of our municipalities and States, we have the highest security that can be accorded to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and an absolute certainty, in every instance with which I am familiar in the West, of the ultimate payment of the amount thus borrowed.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator referred to the situation in New York. New York does not need the provision because there is sufficient elasticity in its laws that it may fix the date of the maturity of its bonds at 5 years or 10 years or 20 years; but there are communities which are absolutely bound to issue longer-term bonds. However, as the Senator so clearly stated, we would shut out half of the municipalities and States of the Union unless we make this liberalization as proposed by the amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Of course, the Senator from Michigan will realize that my interest is simply a duplication and repetition of that which I have spoken upon the floor of the Senate in behalf of Chicago, but particularly for the school board of Chicago, which is a municipal corporation in itself, and for the drainage district, which is a corporation in itself.

Mr. COUZENS. Does the Senator consider the schools are self-liquidating?

Mr. LEWIS. I was coming to that. If I may be pardoned in the particular situation, I am responsible for some of the language which has been under criticism. In the city of Chicago the difficulty is not that the bonds are not good and the property wholly reliable, but is in the system of taxation, wherein there is a great deal of confusion as to whether each locality that is now making up the greater Chicago still reserves the right of taxation or whether the body, Chicago, or Cook County as a whole has a right to tax. The legislature has been summoned and has twice, I deplore, failed to reach a conclusion and has taken another recess. When the legislature shall have concluded the system by which the tax can be generally laid or specially laid, there is enough of tax funds to meet every conceivable obligation.

Chicago would then come before the board which these eminent gentlemen have been discussing and place her bonds, either the school-board bonds as such, or the general city bonds, with the contract as to the time they should be paid, that contract to have such length of time stated in it as shall give the legislature the time necessary to pass a final act as to where the tax is to be levied, by whom and when, which is now the confusion. Therefore, without such a situation as the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] has accurately described as applying to his situation and likewise the Senator from New York as applying to ours, there would be no way in the world that we could get any relief. The contract made with the board will recite in it the time of the payment of the loan and reserve the right to appropriate the security for the loan in such a way as to be, under the words of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] "within its discretion." It seems to me that meets the situation of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. That is just what I wanted to develop. It seems to me the Senator from Illinois has the impression that the bill provides for loans to municipalities and States secured by their bonds. I find no such provision in the bill and certainly it was not the intention of the committee that loans would be made from this corporation for anything but revenue-producing activities promoted by the States.

Mr. LEWIS. That is what these are.

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly not. The school system is not self-liquidating. I understand the Senator from Illinois believes that under the provisions of the bill and under the provisions of the amendment Chicago can go to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, ask for a loan of say $25,000,000, and put up its school bonds and other bonds as security.

Mr. LEWIS. I not only recognize it so because ours is not only a municipal organization but a commercial organization with its revenues, and those revenues are applied to the school board, and the school board uses the revenues to pay its debts. It is distinctly a business corporation.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator construes the bill to provide that a municipality can get money under the provisions of the bill and put up its own securities for the loan.

Mr. LEWIS. It is for the use and maintenance and paying of school-teachers, the maintaining of a branch of the Government or division of the Government so necessary to the existence of the State as the school.

Mr. COUZENS. That is not the intention of the bill. It was not the intention of the Banking and Currency Committee, and there is no provision in the bill which contemplates any such thing.

Mr. LEWIS. It seems to me the Senator is without ground for such a statement.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. Before the bill was introduced and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, it was considered quite carefully by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and four other Senators, and it was determined that the language "self-liquidating projects" as applied to municipalities had a meaning. If it did not have a meaning and if it had been only the taxable power to pay the loans which was in contemplation, of course the situation would be entirely different, but we decided the power of taxation was not sufficient to guarantee the loan, and when we used the term "self-liquidating project" we meant something different from a schoolhouse or public building already constructed. We meant exactly what we said, and that is that it shall be a project which does not depend on taxation at all.

For instance, let me refer to the metropolitan water district in southern California. The metropolitan water district of California embraces the city of Los Angeles and a large territory besides, as the Senator probably knows. They are engaged in the municipal distribution of water. They charge certain fixed rates for it. They have estimated the costs of putting an aqueduct into the Boulder Canyon project and operating it for the purpose of supplying southern California with water. The costs were estimated accurately.

The revenues from the sale of water are estimated accurately. Now whether the metropolitan water district can bring that project within this proviso depends on whether or not they can show certain specific revenues that will go toward the payment of the loan, whether it be in the form of a contract loan or in payment of their bonds. That is the distinction we had in mind. I do not know whether the metropolitan water district can do that, but they will have to do it before they can get the loan.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and I had a discussion this morning as to the definition of "self-liquidating projects." After the discussion this morning the Senator from Arkansas seemed to think that it needed no further definition than is set forth in the bill. But here now we have the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] contending that the school bonds and other bonds of the city of Chicago are self-liquidating because they secure revenue from taxation.

Mr. LEWIS. Oh, no.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator from Illinois believes that school bonds may be put up as security with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. PITTMAN. That does not come within the definition of the bill at all.

Mr. LEWIS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I called attention specifically that the school board not only has bonds, but has a large real-estate ownership, which property pays rentals. Out of those rentals they liquidate their debts if they do not collect a cent of taxes or collect a dollar of their bonds.

Mr. COUZENS. But that provision does not give employment. The corporation provision here is not for the purpose of paying the debts or relieving the debts of anybody. It is for the purpose of creating work. The mere collection of rents from buildings owned by the school board of Chicago would not in any way provide work as contemplated in the bill.

Mr. LEWIS. It would pay the school-teachers who do the work of educating the youth of the city of Chicago.

Mr. COUZENS. But they are already employed. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] both know that such an idea is not contemplated at all in the bill.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the senior Senator from Illinois?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. GLENN. I presume the Senator from Michigan would agree that in case it was to finance new buildings which the school board was to erect, it would perhaps come within the classification of "self-liquidating projects" within the meaning of the section; but to take the position that the section would include buildings already erected it seems to me is erroneous. I say to my distinguished colleague that the chances of the Chicago school-teachers under this provision are remote. It is a specific section, it seems to me, which would apply to municipal water works, for instance, and might apply to the proposed subway system in Chicago or something of that kind.

Mr. COUZENS. It would have to be something to be built in the future. It would not be anything now in existence. In other words, the whole project is for the purpose of providing new employment and not for maintaining employment already in existence, such as that of school-teachers.

Mr. LEWIS. That is why I alluded to our drainage district.

Mr. COUZENS. I understand there are no fees in that case to make it self-liquidating.

Mr. President, I want to point out another thing at this point.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds may we have the amendment reported again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New York will again be reported.

The legislative clerk again reported the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, may I point out to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] that a while ago he said this only applies to activities above lines 21 and 22 on page 100, but I will say that in reading the amendment I believe it carries to all, including the amendments beginning on page 101. That is the point.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I will withdraw the amendment temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New York is temporarily withdrawn.

Mr. COUZENS. I understand the Senator withdraws the amendment temporarily?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; so that it may be corrected and put at the place where it should be incorporated.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, while we are on this subject, I want to invite the attention of the Senate to just where we are going. A short while ago the Senate adopted the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD]. I wish to draw the attention of the Senate to just what that amendment is. On page 101, line 13, before the period, it is proposed to insert a semicolon and the following:

> Except that loans may be made under the provisions of this subdivision to aid in financing the construction of any publicly owned bridge to be used for railroad, railway, and highway uses, the construction cost of which will be returned in part by means of tolls, fees, rents, or other charges, and the remainder by means of taxes imposed pursuant to State law heretofore enacted; and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is further authorized and empowered to purchase bonds of any State, municipality, or other public body or agency issued for the purpose of financing the construction of any such bridge irrespective of the dates of maturity of such bonds.

The Senate adopted that amendment. I contend, Mr. President, by the adoption of that amendment anything can be done of this character. There is no provision as to the amount that might be collected by tolls or charges; in fact, 1 per cent might be so collected under the provisions of the amendment and for 99 per cent reliance be placed upon taxes. My conception of this bill is that there is no provision in it—and I am not saying that there should not be one, but I am not discussing that, for the question is not now before us—and no intention that the Federal Government should rely upon taxes for the return of its investment through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, is not that a whole lot better than the provision to loan to all the public utilities in this country?

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator may be right, but I am not discussing that question. I am discussing the question of whether we are going to rely upon taxes or whether we are going to rely upon revenue. There is already a division of opinion in the Senate as to what is meant by self-liquidating corporations.

Mr. DILL. The provision as to public utilities does not even require taxes to provide for the repayment of the loans.

Mr. COUZENS. I do not want it to require taxes.

Mr. DILL. On page 100, in line 25, loans are allowed to private corporations in carrying out any of the various projects mentioned and including projects "devoted to public use."

Mr. WAGNER. Not including such projects, but only projects devoted to public use.

Mr. DILL. But certainly is not a telephone company devoted to public use? Is not a gas company devoted to public use? Is not a power company devoted to public use? Is there any public utility of this kind that can not get money under this provision? If so, I do not know of any. It is the most amazing proposition I have ever seen.

Mr. COUZENS. I may say to the Senator that these would have to be new undertakings, new projects, and what the Senator says was exactly the intention of the authors of the bill and of the Banking and Currency Committee, which reported the bill.

Mr. DILL. It proposes to allow public utilities to borrow money and spend it as they please so long as it is for public use.

Mr. PITTMAN. So long as the project is self-liquidating.

Mr. WAGNER. But, Mr. President, it must be a company which both as to its financial structure and as to its profits is under the supervision of a public regulating body.

Mr. DILL. The Senator knows that the Power Trust companies of America are under public supervision, but what does that amount to? All the telephone companies are under public supervision, but what does that amount to? The rates are kept up and have gone up all during this period of depression because of the watered stocks they have and because of the system of regulation we have.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield in order that I may ask the Senator from Michigan a question?

Mr. COUZENS. One of the Senators is absent who is interested in this matter, and I should like to suggest the absence of a quorum before we go farther into it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Davis	King	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dickinson	La Follette	Shipstead
Barbour	Dill	Lewis	Shortridge
Barkley	Fess	Logan	Smoot
Bingham	Fletcher	Long	Steiwer
Blaine	Frazier	McGill	Stephens
Borah	George	McNary	Thomas, Idaho
Bratton	Glenn	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	Goldsborough	Morrison	Townsend
Bulow	Hale	Moses	Trammell
Byrnes	Harrison	Neely	Tydings
Capper	Hastings	Norbeck	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hayden	Norris	Wagner
Cohen	Hebert	Oddie	Walcott
Connally	Howell	Patterson	Walsh, Mass.
Coolidge	Hull	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Copeland	Johnson	Reed	Watson
Costigan	Jones	Robinson, Ark.	Wheeler
Couzens	Kean	Robinson, Ind.	White
Dale	Kendrick	Schall

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, in view of the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan, which is well taken, I have reconstructed the amendment, and I offer it now in changed form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment, as modified, to the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 100, line 24, after the word "securities" and before the semicolon, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in carrying out the provisions of this act, from purchasing securities having a maturity of more than 10 years.

Mr. WAGNER. That limits that section to securities issued by public bodies, either municipalities, States, or agencies of States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York, as modified, to the amendment.

The amendment, as modified, to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was just adopted, the motion to be taken up at the proper time when we get through with the other provisions of the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator refer to the amendment just adopted?

Mr. COUZENS. To the amendment just adopted.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I offer another amendment. I think the Senator from Michigan is interested in this amendment, and I want to call his attention to it. It is the so-called housing amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 100, line 24, after the word "securities" and after the semicolon, insert:

(2) To make loans to corporations formed wholly for the purpose of providing housing for families of low income, or for reconstruction of slum areas, which are regulated by State or municipal law as to rents, charges, capital structure, rate of return, and areas and methods of operation, to aid in financing projects undertaken by such corporations which are self-liquidating in character.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, the Banking and Currency Committee, after consideration, took out a provision somewhat of that sort. After the committee had done that, the Senator from New York and some of us got together and drafted the proposed amendments, because they are under both State and municipal authority. In other words, every act of theirs has to be approved by a governmental agency; and, in view of that, it seems to me that this is a very desirable amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF REVENUE ACT OF 1932

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 435.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, before that is done, I desire to offer an amendment to this bill which will take no time and can be voted either in or out.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I fail to hear what the Senator from Utah is asking.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, House Joint Resolution 435 was sent over to correct provisions in the revenue bill affecting oil and gas. The wording of the act itself is such that there will be very, very little revenue collected. This is a mere correction so as to take care of the situation as it exists to-day.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, this is going to lead to a fight, because the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has an amendment regarding the tax on electricity which he proposes to offer to this joint resolution; and that means a considerable fight, I think.

Mr. SMOOT. He can offer it, of course.

Mr. DILL. It will lead to discussion here, and a lot of delay, probably.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think it will involve any extended delay.

Mr. DILL. I just want the sponsor of the bill to know that.

Mr. WAGNER. If that is so, Mr. President, I do not think I ought to be asked to consent to laying the bill aside.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I think perhaps the joint resolution ought to be read, so that we will know just what it is.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that if this joint resolution is not passed to-day it will affect the whole structure of the revenue act as to collecting taxes upon gasoline and oil and we will lose $32,000,000. This will save the money for the Treasury.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let us have the joint resolution read.

Mr. McNARY. Is the Senator from Utah asking for immediate consideration?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. And in the meantime he is seeking to have the unfinished business temporarily laid aside?

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I asked the Senator from New York to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to temporarily laying aside the unfinished business?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I ask that the joint resolution may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 435) to amend the revenue act of 1932 was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 617 of the revenue act of 1932 is amended by adding at the end thereof a subsection to read as follows:

"(d) There is hereby imposed on gasoline sold by the person (other than the importer thereof or a producer of gasoline) having title to such gasoline on June 21, 1932 (if such person had title on that date to 25,000 or more gallons of gasoline), a tax of 1 cent a gallon, except that under regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary the tax shall not apply in the case of sales to a producer of gasoline."

SEC. 2. Section 601 of the revenue act of 1932 is amended by adding at the end thereof a subsection to read as follows:

"(d) There is hereby imposed upon lubricating oils sold in the United States by the person (other than the manufacturer or producer thereof) having title to such lubricating oils on June 21, 1932 (if such person had title on that date to 1,000 or more gallons of lubricating oil), a tax at the rate of 4 cents a gallon, to be paid by such person."

SEC. 3. Section 620 of the revenue act of 1932 is amended by inserting after "tube," the following: "Or lubricating oils taxable under section 601 (c) (1)."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah give us a brief explanation of what this joint resolution means, and what the necessity for it is?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NORRIS. Has consent been given for the consideration of this joint resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not intend myself to object to taking it up; but I desire to notify the Senator from Utah and the Chair that if it is taken up I want an opportunity to discuss it and to offer an amendment that is now on the clerk's desk. I do not want it to go through as a matter of formality.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska has given some consideration to this matter. Can he venture an opinion as to how long the discussion of the joint resolution will take?

Mr. NORRIS. It will take some time. I am not informed as to other Members of the Senate; but there are several, I think, who will want to be heard on it.

I will say to the Senator what the amendment is that I want to offer. In fact, I have two amendments. I do not believe one of them will take any time. There probably will be no objection to its going on, because so far there never has been any objection to it; but the one that will probably evoke some discussion is this:

I have offered an amendment by way of a new section to the joint resolution, the effect of which would be to amend the revenue act by striking out the provision that was put in the bill in conference and inserting in lieu of it the tax on electricity as it passed the Senate; so that will probably lead to some debate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Montana, in answer to his question, that the report which has been made on the joint resolution by the Treasury Department shows fully what it is. The report is as follows:

The joint resolution appears necessary to correct a situation that has come to our attention affecting the gasoline tax and the tax on lubricating oils. It appears that during the 15 days between the enactment of the law and its effective date a very large portion of gasoline stocks in the hands of producers will be transferred to selling and distributing companies to avoid the tax. Some of the largest producing companies have affiliated sales companies and can do this through their affiliates in the usual course of business. Other large companies, where the producing company is also the company that sells at retail, will find themselves at a serious disadvantage in competition with the companies having affiliates, unless they organize sales companies, transfer their existing stocks of gasoline, and so avoid the tax in respect to such stocks.

We are informed that the problem relates to some 60,000,000 barrels of gasoline, and that under section 617 of the revenue act, as it stands, the Treasury may lose the tax on as much as 40,000,000 barrels. This would amount to a loss of approximately $17,000,000.

Practically the same situation as outlined above appears to exist in the case of the tax imposed on lubricating oils by section 601 (c) (1) of the revenue act. The revenue looked for from the tax on lubricating oils is also threatened in another way. Upon careful study it appears likely that blenders and compounders of lubricating oils must be held to be manufacturers under the act. We are advised that there are not less than 100,000 blenders and compounders, who would consequently be permitted to buy oils for blending and compounding tax free, and there can be no doubt that there would be a great loss in revenue in being forced to collect a large part of the tax on lubricating oil from any such number of small taxpayers. The administrative difficulty of such collections is obvious. We are advised by representatives of several of the leading oil companies that through transfer of existing stocks of lubricating oil from the producer to selling affiliates, and through the evasion resulting from the ability of blenders and compounders to purchase tax free, the Treasury may lose as much as $15,000,000 of revenue that might otherwise be collected during the coming year.

To remedy the situation that exists, we submit a form of joint resolution herewith. The adoption of the proposed resolution will result in the collection of many millions of dollars which would otherwise be lost to the Treasury. It will also avoid serious discriminations within the industry which will result from the law in its present form.

In stating the Treasury's position regarding the joint resolution, it was made clear in a letter to Congressman RAINEY that the Treasury could make no recommendation which might subject the gasoline tax, the tax on lubricating oil, or any other part of the revenue act to further controversy in Congress. Accordingly we submit the matter for your consideration with the recommendation of the Treasury that it be put through if, in your judgment, this can be accomplished expeditiously.

Very truly yours,

A. A. BALLANTINE,
Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, in view of the very serious nature of the joint resolution, and the prospect of the introduction of another very controversial question, we could scarcely hope to get through with this matter, it seems to me, in less than a day or two. We are making very excellent progress on the bill that is before us, and I hope we will be able to complete it to-day. In those circumstances I think I shall be obliged to object.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I beg the Senator not to object. We must get this joint resolution over to the House. It ought to be acted upon and signed to-day by the President.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator will appreciate, of course, that if we should pass this joint resolution it would be necessary that it go to the House, and quite a protracted time would be necessary in conference.

Mr. SMOOT. There is nothing in the joint resolution now which will require going to conference. Only one amendment is proposed by the Senate committee, and the House may agree to the amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It may, and it may not.

Mr. SMOOT. If it does, the joint resolution will never go to conference.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I must object, Mr. President.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, as I understand, the revenue act goes into effect to-morrow morning.

Mr. SMOOT. To-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VANDENBERG in the chair). The Senator from Montana objects.

LOANS TO STATES—SYSTEM OF HIGHWAYS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12445) to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by authorizing and expediting a public-works program and providing a method of financing such program.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, on page 101, line 2, after the word "and," I move to strike out the words "similar projects."

I do that for the reason that I am satisfied that that might readily be interpreted to authorize the loaning of money to any kind of a public utility; and it seems to me that if we are going into the business of loaning money to public utilities generally, we ought to say so in direct and specific language. I do not believe the Senate wants to provide that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall be permitted to loan money to any public utility that may desire to construct any kind of project.

Mr. WAGNER. I have no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to move to strike out all of line 25, page 100, after the numeral "(2)," down to and including the word "character" on line 3, page 101.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that a perfecting amendment takes precedence.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I offer a perfecting amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 101, line 13, after the word "charges," it is proposed to insert a comma and the following:

And by such other means as may be prescribed by the statutes which provide for the project.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I did not catch the location of that proposal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be restated.

The legislative clerk restated the amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina explain the amendment briefly?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the language of the section in line 20, page 100, authorizes "aid in financing projects authorized under State or municipal law." Then on page 101, in line 13, it prescribes how the self-liquidating project shall be liquidated, and it enumerates "tolls, fees, rents," and "charges." That may or may not cover the method prescribed by the statute authorizing the project which is aided. The only purpose of this language is to make certain that if it is a self-liquidating project authorized by a statute it can be liquidated by the means provided by that statute, whether it be fees, rents, tolls, or some other word which may be contained in the statute and not contained on line 13 of page 101. If it were not authorized by the statute, it would not come under the language.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. KING. I inquire of the Senator what other source of revenue the organization or corporation contemplated would have except rents, fees, or charges?

Mr. BYRNES. I say to the Senator that the amendment is offered solely because without it there might be some doubt. With our diversity of procedure throughout the country in liquidating projects there may be some project authorized to be paid for under a State statute from fees for a while, or in some other way. If the statute should say "payments," and it should be provided that the projects be liquidated by payments being made at certain periods, this amendment would cover that, whereas if payment were not provided for by statute, the matter might not be covered. I offer the amendment simply to make the matter certain.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not rise in objection to the amendment. I simply call attention to the fact that we adopted an amendment, following this very word "charges," offered by the Senator from Louisiana. The amendment now offered is to come at the same place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the pending amendment will be inserted between the text as printed in the bill and the amendment already adopted by the Senate submitted by the Senator from Louisiana.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I offer an amendment on page 101. I have submitted it to most of the sponsors of the bill, and there is no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama offers an amendment, which the clerk will report.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 101, line 3, the Senator from Alabama proposes to strike out the period and to insert a semicolon and the following: "and (3) to private corporations to aid in carrying out the construction of noncompetitive projects which are self-liquidating in character."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to have an explanation. What does the Senator mean by corporations noncompetitive in character?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Corporations engaged in a noncompetitive field, such as a commercial water supply, to supply industries, and that kind of thing.

Mr. KING. As I understand it, provision is already made, in line 2, for waterworks.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That means waterworks under the control of the public, but this is to cover a case where there is no adequate supply, and there is a project to sell water to industries. It would not be a public waterworks. It might apply also to other matters, for instance, to irrigation projects. As I have said, I submitted the proposition and discussed it with the author of the substitute bill and other Senators, and there is no objection to it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is obvious that the pending bill, if I understand some of the amendments which have been accepted or tendered, including the one just tendered, is to be loaded down with propositions for the funds herein provided to be used by private corporations for a multitude of enterprises. The Senator from Alabama says the amendment just offered has not met with the disapproval of the drafters of the measure, and it indicates the scope of the measure and the interpretation which is being placed upon it.

We are to build tunnels, docks, viaducts, waterworks, and, under the amendment now offered, any project noncompetitive in character. The Senator instances irrigation works, and the construction of waterworks to be used by industrial plants. If that is the interpretation to be placed upon this bill, then industries of various kinds, and in one form or another, will dip their hands into this reconstruction fund and avail themselves of loans from the Federal Treasury.

I think that subdivision 2 ought to be stricken out; and if this is the appropriate time—of course, the Senator has the right to perfect the amendment—I move to strike out subdivision 2, which would include the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Couzens	Kendrick	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dale	King	Shipstead
Barbour	Davis	La Follette	Shortridge
Barkley	Dickinson	Lewis	Smoot
Bingham	Dill	Logan	Steiwer
Blaine	Fess	McGill	Stephens
Borah	Fletcher	McKellar	Thomas, Idaho
Bratton	Frazier	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Brookhart	George	Metcalf	Townsend
Broussard	Glenn	Morrison	Trammell
Bulkley	Goldsborough	Moses	Tydings
Bulow	Hale	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Harrison	Norbeck	Wagner
Capper	Hastings	Norris	Walcott
Caraway	Hayden	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Carey	Hebert	Patterson	Walsh, Mont.
Cohen	Howell	Pittman	Watson
Connally	Hull	Reed	Wheeler
Coolidge	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.	White
Copeland	Jones	Robinson, Ind.
Costigan	Kean	Schall

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to inquire whether the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama has been accepted by the committee and voted into the bill. If so, I want to move to reconsider.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, the amendment has not yet been adopted. I think the Senator from Alabama ought to explain it, because the particular project the Senator has in mind, as I understand it, is a gold placer-mining project in California.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is included in it; yes; or is possible under it if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is convinced of the feasibility of it.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, it seems to me that it ought to name the particular kind of project, and not leave the door open to a thousand different things.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There are very few things that are noncompetitive. An industrial water supply or a private irrigation project is noncompetitive. I assumed this bill was to provide employment under self-liquidating projects.

Mr. DILL. The bill names the particular kinds of projects which can be supplied with funds. Why does not the Senator name the particular kind of project he wants covered?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I could not specify them.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I again appeal to the Chair for order. I would suggest the amendment be again reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order, and the clerk will report the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] proposes, on page 100, line 25, to strike out the word "and," and on page 101, line 3, to strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the following: "and (3) to private corporations to aid in carrying out the construction of noncompetitive projects which are self-liquidating in character."

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, in view of the fact that this is public business we are doing, I think the Senator ought to give us some concrete examples of the cases intended to be covered by the amendment. The Senator from California, in connection with his amendment, described his proposal for Los Angeles, and I think the Senator from Alabama has some cases he would like to describe to us which would be covered by this amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I explained to the Senator from Michigan what I had in mind, and for that reason he has brought it forward. I explained it to the Senator from California, and to others. I have in mind a noncompetitive project in which a citizen of my State is interested, which will employ, as he states, 3,000 men a day; and it is a question of whether he can convince the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of its feasibility, and whether or not it is a good project under the unemployment program, which I assume this bill contemplates.

I also know that in my own State there is a movement to construct an industrial water supply for the city of Birmingham. Birmingham is some 15 or 20 miles from a river. They always have a water shortage there. The Steel Corporation has had to build its own water facilities because of the insufficiency of the public water supply. There is a movement there for the construction of an industrial water supply, the water to be sold by the promoters of the plan to the industries in that section. I can imagine a number of other noncompetitive bodies where loans are not made to those in competition with each other.

The amendment has been presented in such shape that the matter is left entirely to the judgment and discretion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I can not see any particular objection to going into the subject of making loans for construction work based upon the desirability of giving as much work as possible under the loans that are made. For that reason I have tendered the amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, it was my understanding that the bill did not contemplate taking care of private corporations which were not under some governmental regulation or supervision. The amendment we adopted a few moments ago, whereby we permitted loans to housing corporations, provided that they must be under some municipal or State regulation, but if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama is adopted there is nothing which provides for Government regulation or supervision. Therefore I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have in mind a suggestion made to me some time ago by letter in which the request was made that if the reconstruction bill or some reconstruction bill were passed funds should be furnished for the purpose of installing power plants, because of the inadequacy of the present power plants to meet the needs of the public. A number of corporations requiring considerable power for mining and other purposes have been unable to obtain the power necessary for the successful operation of their plants. It was suggested that the Government under some reconstruction plan, if private corporations were to have money, should loan money so that a power plant might be installed, a coal mine opened up in order that, by the utilization of coal, electric energy would be developed to be employed in the mining activity referred to. If the amendment of the Senator from Alabama is adopted, it would open the door to all conceivable and inconceivable projects private in character. It seems to me it would be perverting the purpose for which the bill, bad as it is or good as it is, was designed. If the amendment is adopted, or others of like character, with the prejudices which I now have against the bill, I certainly shall vote against it.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I thought the bill was bad when we started with it, but it will grow worse as Senators offer amendments. I have the utmost respect for the great leaders who have worked out this plan. I think the Democrats are to be congratulated on having during this session of Congress a leader, in the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who has proven that he is not only a great leader but a great statesman. He has not been swayed by everything that came along trying to divert us from the path in which we should travel.

But I can not believe that a sober, calm judgment will justify the step that we propose to take in the bill. There is one thing that I will say, however. I do not know who may be responsible for the condition in which we find the country. I do not undertake to charge it up to the Republican Party, although I rather think they are responsible. It may be it is providential and that this trouble has been visited upon us because the people did evil in the sight of the Lord when they elected the Republican ticket, and that it is sent as a judgment or punishment.

But there is one thing I do know, and that is that the Democratic Party can not be charged with the present deplorable conditions which prevail in the country. We have not had control of the Government since 1920. At that time, when we turned things over to our Republican friends, people were happy and prosperous and had their money in the banks, the factories were all running, everybody had a job, and the country was what it ought to be, or at least we thought so. Then our Republican friends tried their hands at it with the result that matters did not turn out right. As I said, I do not charge it up to them. I only say that we on this side of the Chamber are not responsible for what we have confronting us at this time.

It has been my opinion, therefore, that the Democrats have no business trying to solve the situation now. I thought it should have been left to the Republicans. I believe now that the President and his leaders should submit to us a plan that they can say will get us out of the difficulties in which they have placed us, and that as Democrats we ought to support their plan. The people elected Mr. Hoover as President and the people elected Republican Members of the Senate and of the House. They were vested with a trusteeship for the people, and they ought to serve in that capacity until the term for which they were elected has expired. They have made some effort to relieve the situation. They enacted the Smoot-Hawley tariff law, which, I think, is an abomination. But I am frank to confess that the Republicans believe in a protective tariff. The distinguished senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who believes in a protective tariff, has been, so I understand, like the melancholy Dane. When he is in quiet places by himself he is heard to murmur, "Why didn't it work? Oh, Lord, why didn't it work?" [Laughter.]

Well, it did not work. I am frank to confess that the Republicans are absolutely sincere in their belief that a protective tariff ought to save the country. Of course, it will not do so. I think the troubles in which we find ourselves now all grow out of the theory of a protective tariff—not the bill that we recently passed. That was but the culmination, that was but the capstone of the entire structure that we have been building for 100 years. If we had never known of artificial stimulation of the manufacturing business, the people to-day would not be congested in centers in the East and in the North, where they must starve, so it seems. If things had developed naturally, without the artificial help of the tariff, we would have had people scattered all over the country, because manufacturing establishments would have grown up where they were necessary and the farmers of the West would not be complaining that they are broke at this time, because they would not have had to support a number of transcontinental railroads by paying freight so they could get their products to the East, where the people live. But, be that as it may, that plan, which was put into effect with so much hope, has entirely failed. We have no business anywhere now, neither domestic nor foreign.

Then another thing that was tried, which was worked out very thoroughly, I understand, was the plan to relieve the farmer. That was agreed upon by the President and his leaders and was enacted into law without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t." It was going to make the products of the farm valuable, but the result has been that wheat on the world market in the last few months has been lower than it has ever been since 50 years before Columbus discovered America. [Laughter.] That is absolutely true. Cotton is lower than it has ever been in the history of the Nation. So that plan, which was carefully worked out and put forth with so much confidence by our Republican friends, has entirely failed.

I do not propose to take up the many things which have been proposed, all of which have failed, but I can say, with the firm conviction that I am speaking the truth when I say it, that the trouble has been that the Republicans or the Republican Party as represented by those now in power follow false theories of government. The country being prosperous when it was turned over to them, happy and contented, it follows naturally that if the Government had been run as it should have been run, and correct theories of government had been applied, of course it would have continued to be a happy and prosperous country. Something has gone wrong. Somebody in trying to steer the ship of state did not know how to do it. Somebody, in attempting to pilot us over the road which would lead to prosperity, has failed to work the machine as it should be manipulated with the resulting conditions which now prevail. I do not know who are responsible.

Mr. President, I can tell you what brought the trouble upon us. It is not difficult to find the causes of our present predicament. We went crazy, as it were. Everybody was living in a spirit of enthusiasm. They were out dancing around the maypole and having a hilarious time. They spent all their money. They spent it because the big Republicans told them the conditions that prevailed would continue as long as the Republican Party was in power. They themselves believed it. They are patriotic and desire good government just as much as anybody else. They believed that conditions would prevail, such as did prevail during the prosperous years, just as long as the Republicans were kept in power. They told the people that and the people spent all their money. The first thing the people knew they did not have any money. They were in exactly the same condition then that they have usually been when a panic came along, but they did not know it.

When their money was all gone there was yet something that could be used to keep times good, so the big Republicans said, "Your money is gone, but everything is going to be all right in a few days or a few weeks, so you just buy things on credit." So every man who had a washing machine or a radio or a Frigidaire or anything else of that kind to sell sold it on the instalment plan, and the next thing the people knew their credit was all gone, and they had neither money nor credit. Well, they were ready to stop there and readjust themselves, but the Republican leaders said, "This does not mean anything; we will find exactly what we want now in a few days; it has been hovering just around the corner for a long time." [Laughter.]

In Kentucky we have a very high regard for the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], and he is a mighty good man, and we all like him there, but I recall that when times began to look a little bad, and I did not have any money—and my credit never has been any too good—"My dear," my wife said to me, "I want you to buy a Frigidaire." I said, "I can not; I have not the money." And she read me from a newspaper a statement of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] saying that in just a few weeks times were going to be good, and she said to me, "You ought to go ahead and do it." So I bought it, but times did not get any better.

A little later one of my sons very foolishly wanted to buy a Ford. I told him I could not afford it, but he said, "Look, the President says that times are not going to continue as they are very long; that in less than 90 days things will be booming again." So I went to the bank, borrowed the money, and bought the Ford for him.

In a few weeks more my daughter wanted a new radio. I protested, but she produced a statement from Mr. Mellon in which he assured the people that we would be happy again and prosperous and have money in the bank in a few weeks. So I bought that. [Laughter.] That is exactly the history of the entire American people. They were induced not only to spend all their money but to exhaust all their credit upon the assurance that "everything was going to be all right."

The Republicans who gave us that assurance should not be blamed too severely; they actually believe in their party and believe that nothing can go wrong when that party is in power. The distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], when he made his speech at the so-called Republican convention the other day, said that there was not anything wrong with the country; we were still all right; and that there never has been anything wrong with it because nothing could be wrong when the Republicans were in power. [Laughter.] Well, anyway, that is what brought the trouble on us, and now we are trying to get out of it.

I will tell you what I think we are going to do if we start the plan that is proposed in this bill. I am not opposing it; I am just telling you why I am going to vote against it. If we start this plan we are appropriating money which the taxpayers of the Nation must pay sooner or later, because we have voted that we are not going to start the printing presses, and if we are not going to do that, we have nowhere to get the money except from the taxpayers. That is the only place where we can get it. This little dab of money, compared to what we need, $1,500,000,000, would furnish, oh, sufficient money, perhaps, if all the unemployed were put to work to keep them employed for at least two weeks. It might even give them employment for a month, if it were handled very well; but that is about as far as it would go. Then it will be all gone. Winter is coming on after the summer and fall shall pass, and when we meet here again in December there will be the same call for more money to be appropriated out of the Federal Treasury; and the next time I presume we will appropriate $5,000,000,000, and then that will be gone before spring, and we will be called upon to put up still more. How long, Mr. President, can we keep it up? How long can we continue taking money out of the Treasury of the United States in the effort to give men employment?

There is nobody more greatly in sympathy with those who are in distress than am I. As a matter of fact, I am one of them; that is my natural condition, and so I have become accustomed to it. I should like to see something done for them, but this is going to be a deceptive thing, if I am any judge of the facts that I have before me.

Senators talk about loaning money to the cities! Well, nobody has ever been able to do any good for the cities so far, and almost any one of our big cities could take all the money we are proposing to appropriate in this bill, and in six months' time would want that much more. We are proposing to them that they go further in debt. We are asking the cities and the States to borrow money from the General Government. How are they going to pay it back? Most of them are already as deeply in debt as they can get.

If we have to do something, I believe we had better follow the plan that Joseph followed in Egypt. It will be remembered that he went there and interpreted the dream of Pharoah, and he saw the seven fat cattle and the seven lean cattle and the seven poor ears of corn and the seven good ears, and he saw the seven lean years. Then he did that which we can not do. He had the authority from the king, and he immediately levied a tax upon the people, and he put up stores to feed the people. When the seven lean years had come he did not give them a grain of corn; he did not give them a single thing. He said to them, "I have all the corn there is in the world here in the granaries and I have built new ones out in the field and they are all full. Bring your money and I will sell to you." And they brought their money and they bought as long as they had any money. Then he did not propose to give them anything, but he said, "Bring all your livestock and your personal property; you have no money now, and I will swap my corn for your livestock." And he did that until he got all their stock. Then when they came back to him next time he said, "I am not going to give you anything; it will not be good for you; it will ruin you; it will destroy your individuality; it will destroy your ability to stand on your own legs if I give you anything, but I will tell you what I will do, I will take your land and then I will lease it back to you and I will collect an income tax from you the rest of your lives to pay for what I am now selling to you." I do not say that we ought to go that far; we ought to relieve the people if we can; but it would be infinitely better that we do nothing at all than that we establish a precedent here which through the years to come will be around our necks like a millstone.

That, however, is what we are doing when we pass this bill. It looks all right. I know that the people can be convinced that it is a great thing to put out money among them, but it is not so much money, after all, when distributed among 120,000,000 people of the United States. I believe that there ought to be some solution of the problem, but I do not know what it is.

Mr. President, we have had panics just as bad, or almost as bad, at least, as the present one. We had one in 1837. Nobody at that time talked about appropriating money out of the Federal Treasury to feed the people or to give them work. We had another panic in 1858, one of the worst we have ever had, but there was no suggestion that money be appropriated out of the Public Treasury to provide work or to provide food. Then in 1873—and we all know about that—we had another panic. Coming down to 1893, there was another panic, but at that time there was no suggestion that money be appropriated out of the Public Treasury to care for the people. Old Grover Cleveland, although he was repudiated by his party and by nearly everybody in the Nation, I believe, was a rock in a weary land, and he turned his face like flint against any such project. We need another Cleveland or we need another Andrew Jackson in the office of President. I do not know whether we are going to get him or not, but I know that we need him.

The only difference I can see between the panics of the past and the present one is that the people were not so greatly in debt in the previous ones. They are greatly in debt at this time, but we can not pay their debts by making appropriations out of the Public Treasury. We are opening a door that we can never close. We are doing something for which our children and our grandchildren will suffer. We are not dealing with the situation with that courage with which it ought to be met. I believe that we ought to say to the people that we here can do nothing for them so far as providing money or jobs is concerned; that we can only do the best we can to relieve them of burdens that are pressing heavily upon them in the way of taxes and that we can make the Government live as economically as possible. I do not know anything more that we can say to them.

If we allow the cities and the States and others in that class or any other class to look to the Federal Government for money when they need to borrow, we destroy their initiative, we destroy their individuality, and when we destroy the individuality of the citizen we soon destroy the Nation.

I am afraid that I am entirely out of harmony with nearly all of my colleagues, but I can not see as I look into the distant future any good that is to come by what we are proposing to do. I know that we will be greatly criticized if we go home without having done something to relieve unemployment, but we ought not to teach the unemployed or allow them to believe that it is our duty to provide jobs for them. Jobs must come through private industry; jobs must come because business calls for them. I do not know how we are going to relieve them. I know that when we have had such a situation in the past the country has found some way to care for itself. It will do so again; it will certainly do so now if we get it out of the minds of the public that Congress can care for everybody in the Nation; but so long as they entertain that belief they are not going to try to solve their own difficulties.

I regret that I can not think of anything that will do them any good. I know, however, that every time we appropriate money out of the Treasury it has to be paid back by the people. I know that is so. I know that we can not start the printing presses to print money and thus pay the obligations of the Nation. It would be an easy way to settle our entire difficulties if we could do so. I know that we are appropriating an immense sum of money at this session of Congress. It will probably be the greatest sum that has ever been appropriated in peace times. I know the revenues are falling; that we will do well if we collect next year two and one-half billion dollars in revenue, while our appropriations will probably reach six and one-half billion dollars; and on top of that it is proposed that we add this other burden to the people who at some time must pay it.

I can not make up my mind that I would be justified, as much as I would desire to do so, in casting a vote that I believe would be contrary to every sound principle of government. I wish I could agree with those who believe that the plan now proposed will bring relief. I hope it may bring relief, because I think the bill is going to be passed, and I hope that benefits may flow from what we do, but my humble judgment is—and it is my deliberate judgment—that, so far as relief of unemployment is concerned, it will hardly do any good at all, and that after we have passed the bill and after the money has been distributed reports will still continue to come in showing that unemployment is increasing.

It has only been a brief time ago when some of us thought we were going to help the people by placing more money in circulation, and so Congress appropriated something over $2,000,000,000 so that the veterans could borrow on their adjusted-service certificates. They did borrow, as I understand, around $2,000,000,000. Everybody said it would make times good. They said, "It is bound to make times good." But did it? As honestly as I have ever spoken anything in my life, I say that so far as I am concerned—and I tried to observe what was going on—it did not even make a ripple. I saw not the slightest improvement in business conditions by reason of the distribution of that vast sum of money.

If we appropriate this money, the contractors will work a little longer; a few additional men will be given employment, but no great number; and then the bill is unjust because it is discriminatory.

What are you going to do with the ladies—the old ladies and the young ladies who have been working in banks and in stores and in other places—and who are now out of jobs? They can not go out and build roads and build locks and dams and post offices and things of that kind. What are you going to do with the millions of men who have worked in offices and stores and inside jobs—"white-collar" jobs, if you please? They do not know how to do anything else, and they are the most helpless people on earth when they are out of a job. They can not get any benefit at all from this bill.

So there are a few only that may be benefited; but the net result will be that those who have sponsored this legislation will be in the same boat with the splendid statesman from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] when he passed his tariff bill. They will be going about in quiet places and murmuring to themselves "Well, why didn't it work? I wonder why it didn't work." It will not work, because it is unsound. It is not the way to relieve the situation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I am shortly going to offer an amendment to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation unemployment relief bill. I ask unanimous consent that I may have it printed in the RECORD, so that Senators may have a chance to read it if the bill is not acted upon by to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TYDINGS. I also ask that the amendment may lie upon the table.

Mr. TYDINGS's amendment is as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. TYDINGS to the bill (H. R. 12445) to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by authorizing and expediting a public-works program and providing a method of financing such program, viz: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That there is hereby created a special fund in the Treasury to be known as the emergency construction fund and to be administered by the Secretary of the Treasury as hereinafter provided. For the purpose of providing funds to carry out the provisions of this act the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to borrow on the credit of the United States a sum not to exceed $1,500,000,000 and to issue bonds therefor to be known as emergency construction bonds in such form as he may prescribe. Such bonds shall be in denominations of not less than $50, shall mature in not less than 10 years from the date of their issue, as hereinafter provided, and shall bear interest, payable semiannually, at such rate as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but not to exceed 4¼ per cent per annum. The principal and interest of such bonds shall be payable in United States gold coin of the present standard of value, and such bonds shall be exempt both as to principal and interest from all taxation (except estate and inheritance taxes and surtaxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority.

"(b) Such bonds shall be offered at not less than par as a popular loan under such regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury as will give all citizens of the United States an equal opportunity to participate therein. Any portion of the bonds so offered and not subscribed for may be otherwise disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury at not less than par. No commission shall be allowed or paid in connection with the sale or other disposition of any such bonds. All amounts derived from the sale of such bonds shall be paid into the emergency construction fund.

"(c) In issuing the said bonds for said loan the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue certificates, according to what is known as the serial annuity plan, and each series as issued shall be lettered, beginning with the letter "A," and so on down the alphabet until the entire amount of $1,500,000,000 shall have been issued, so that the entire principal shall be redeemable as follows:

"Series A, $150,000,000, 1 year from date of issue; Series B, $150,000,000, 2 years from date of issue; Series C, $150,000,000, 3 years from date of issue; Series D, $150,000,000, 4 years from date of issue; Series E, $150,000,000, 5 years from the date of issue; Series F, $150,000,000, 6 years from date of issue; Series G, $150,000,000, 7 years from date of issue; Series H, $150,000,000, 8 years from date of issue; Series I, $150,000,000, 9 years from date of issue; and Series J, $150,000,000, 10 years from date of issue.

"(d) As soon after the passage of this act as may be practicable the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause said bonds to be prepared and shall advertise them for sale in such manner as he may prescribe: Provided, however, That in the event all of said bonds are not sold promptly upon said offering by the Secretary of the Treasury he shall again offer the bonds remaining unsold at the next earliest practicable date and make such adjustment with the purchasers of said bonds as to interest as the difference between the date of said bonds and the time of purchase shall make necessary.

"(e) Said bond issue shall bear a date to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury and not longer than 60 days after the passage of this act.

"SEC. 2. (a) Notwithstanding the provisions and limitations of the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented, it shall hereafter be lawful to manufacture, sell, transport, furnish, and possess without obtaining permits therefor (except such permits as may be required under the internal revenue laws or regulations made pursuant thereto), beer or other similar fermented liquor containing 2.75 per cent or less of alcohol by weight, but no such beer or other liquor may be sold, transported, or furnished except in bottles of pint or half-pint capacity. The provisions and limitations of section 37 of Title II of such act, as amended and supplemented, shall apply to the manufacture of such beer or other similar liquor; except that where there is developed in such manufacture beer or other similar fermented liquor containing more than 2.75 per cent of alcohol by weight, such liquor may be withdrawn from the factory or otherwise disposed of upon the reduction of the alcoholic content thereof to 2.75 per cent by weight, or less.

"(b) There shall be levied, collected, and paid on all beer and other similar fermented liquor containing one-half of 1 per cent by volume, or more, of alcohol, brewed or manufactured and hereafter sold, or removed for consumption or sale, within the United States, by whatever name such liquor may be called, in lieu of all other internal-revenue taxes imposed thereon, a tax at the rate of 24 cents per gallon, to be collected under the provisions of existing law; except that (1) such tax shall be paid by means of stamps to be affixed to each bottle and canceled or destroyed under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; and (2) the provisions of existing law prohibiting the bottling of fermented liquors on brewery premises shall not apply to beer or other similar fermented liquor manufactured under the provisions of this section.

"SEC. 3. All taxes levied in the preceding section shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and the first $150,000,000 per annum so received, plus an amount equal to such interest as may be due on the bond issue hereinbefore referred to, shall be kept in a special fund for the purpose of the payment of interest due and of redeeming said bonds in accordance with said serial plan hereinbefore provided, and any amount over and above the amount required for said redemption and interest shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

"SEC. 4. (a) The emergency construction fund shall be used for the purpose of providing for the emergency construction of certain authorized public works with a view to increasing employment and carrying out the policy declared in the employment stabilization act of 1931. The following amounts are hereby appropriated from such fund: To the Treasury Department, $33,949,950; to the Veterans' Administration, $20,232,000; to the Inland Waterways Corporation, $815,000; to the Office of Public Buildings and Public Parks, $1,250,000; to the State Department, $1,453,520; to the Navy Department, $25,109,000; to the municipal government of the District of Columbia, $3,535,400; for the construction of roads, bridges, and tunnels, $1,000,000,000; for rivers and harbors improvements and flood-control projects, $300,000,000; for reforestation, $10,000,000; and for planting of trees along improved highways, $5,000,000. All amounts available for highways, bridges, and tunnels shall be apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture among the several States in the manner provided by section 21 of the Federal highway act, as amended, and shall be available for expenditure on highway projects approved by the Secretary of Agriculture in the same manner, so far as practicable, as other funds appropriated for carrying out the provisions of such act, except that no part of such amounts apportioned to any State need be matched by the State.

"(b) The amounts so appropriated shall, so far as practicable, be expended on authorized construction projects covered by the report of the Federal Employment Stabilization Board transmitted to the Senate January 25, 1932, pursuant to Senate Resolution No. 127, Seventy-second Congress, first session, agreed to January 7, 1932, and shall be made available at such times and in such amounts as may be necessary to complete such projects at the earliest practicable date. In the event that an appropriation has theretofore been made for any such project the amount thereof shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. All amounts appropriated for reforestation and for planting trees along improved highways shall be expended under the supervision of the Chief of the Forestry Service.

"SEC. 5. In the employment of labor in connection with any project provided for in this act, preference shall be given to ex-service men with dependents.

"SEC. 6. This act may be cited as the 'emergency construction act of 1932.'

"Amend the title so as to read: 'An act to provide for the emergency construction of certain public works.'"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to submit some observations relative to the plank in the platform adopted at Chicago which deals with the eighteenth amendment. I had intended to refer to some other declarations found in the platform, but upon reflection it seems unnecessary to do so.

It is clear to me that the Republican campaign will not be fought around or upon the singular document which came from that convention. Long before the strenuous October days arrive, the realities of the campaign, the persistent questioning of the voters, the increasing demands of the situation, will cause this platform to be shoved aside as wholly inadequate and wholly unresponsive to the necessities and demands of the people. No one will carry this document before a people weary with nearly three years of economic disaster and still fighting a losing fight against constantly increasing taxes, mounting debts, and falling prices. The platforms upon which the campaign will be fought will not come out of Chicago or out of conventions. They will be written out yonder in the open, with millions of voters looking on and making unmistakable suggestions—written in the light of inexorable realities which of themselves will instruct us in wisdom and inspire us with courage.

Therefore, without questioning anybody's sincerity or challenging anybody's patriotism or stopping to analyze the platform itself, I choose to leave aside a document which, with the exception of one plank, fell dead at the feet of the American people, eliciting scarcely a favorable comment from the party press, and arousing not the slightest concern or attention from the public generally.

The plank to which I propose to address my remarks today particularly is that which deals with the eighteenth amendment.

In discussing this plank, it is important to understand the views of personnel of the convention itself.

It is perfectly clear to anyone who has made an investigation that a great majority of the members of that convention were for repeal of the eighteenth amendment—for naked repeal. Something like 500 voted for repeal, and when we take out the 204 delegates who came from Democratic States—that is, States which will send no electors to the Electoral College for a Republican President, States which will send no Republican Representatives or Senators here to shape legislation or proposed amendments to the Constitution—when we remove those from the list, we have an overwhelming majority for repeal of the eighteenth amendment. Of the Republican States there was a clear majority for repeal without any conditions attached.

In addition to that, there were three hundred and some-odd Federal officials in the convention, and many of those must be counted as having voted as they did, not because of their convictions, but because of what they deemed necessary as a matter of political expediency.

In saying that I do not wish to be understood as being unnecessarily harsh. What I desire to be understood as saying is that there were those who were willing to yield their views as to how the eighteenth amendment should be dealt with in order to formulate a platform which would best serve the party during the coming campaign.

As an illustration of that, the two gentlemen who had most to do with shaping this particular plank in the platform were two members of the Cabinet, both of whom, I have understood, were for repeal. Mr. Brown, the Postmaster General, as I understand, has been an advocate of repeal. Mr. Mills, the Secretary of the Treasury, who perhaps had more to do with it than anyone else, has been for years an advocate of repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. BORAH. I prefer not to be interrupted unless I have said something which the Senator wishes to correct.

Mr. FESS. I think the Senator does not want to say that Mr. Brown has been for repeal. He has been opposed to it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I will leave that with the Senator. I had a talk with Mr. Brown a month ago. I do not wish to urge my view, and I withdraw my statement if the Senator says I am mistaken.

Mr. FESS. Does the Senator say that Mr. Brown was in favor of repeal?

Mr. BORAH. Yes. If the Senator says that is not so, I will withdraw Mr. Brown's name.

Mr. FESS. He has stated all along to me that repeal would mean chaos, and that he was against it.

Mr. BORAH. I will show in a few minutes that Mr. Brown was for repeal in the convention, by showing that the platform is a repeal platform. I will permit the matter to stand solely on his attitude toward repeal as it is revealed by the platform. I do not feel that there is any doubt about the position of Mr. Mills. Mr. Mills declared in 1926 that the eighteenth amendment was a thing of scorn and contempt to millions of patriotic Americans, and that its remaining in the Constitution was not a matter about which there could be any compromise.

Mr. Mills, who had most to do with the shaping of this plank in the platform, as I am informed, as well as being a very prominent factor with reference to other matters, has, as I understand, been in favor of repeal of the eighteenth amendment. So I say that when we take those who voted for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, and subtract, then, those who do not represent Republican States, and take those who supported the plank whom we know to be in favor of repeal, it must be clear to anyone that the convention was overwhelmingly for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. That is a fact which we must accept as a fact. If the voice heard in that convention was the true Republican voice, if the convention spoke the sentiments of the Republican Party, then the Republican Party is for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

The question then arises, if that is true, Why did they not declare for open, naked repeal of the eighteenth amendment? In my opinion it is perfectly clear and perfectly just to say that many of those who voted for the plank as it was adopted, as it finally became a part of the platform, did so to a large extent as a matter of sheer political expediency. It was deemed unwise in this campaign to declare openly for repeal, notwithstanding the fact that many who voted for the plank believed in that proposition. It was not thought that it was wise, as party maneuvering, to declare openly for taking the eighteenth amendment out of the Constitution. The plank was written in this vague, contradictory way not because those who wrote it were incompetent to express themselves, but because they were seeking to please two classes of voters. As a result we have a plank which has been condemned the country over for insincerity, for contradictory and unworkable pledges.

I call attention to that for the reason that no one should misunderstand the situation for a moment; that if the convention expressed the view of the Republican Party, the party is for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, and just as soon as the campaign is over, the reasons for placing that plank in the platform will have disappeared, and the party, in my judgment, will stand unmistakably for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

Mr. President, I contend that this platform has one definite proposition in it, and that is the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. It may be vague, obscure, and contradictory with reference to other matters, but the proposition of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment is unmistakably incorporated in that platform.

First, the eighteenth amendment prohibits the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating liquors throughout the United States. The proposed substitute would permit the manufacture and sale and transportation of liquor throughout the United States. The heart of the eighteenth amendment is the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor. The heart of the substitute is permitting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor. Therefore I say that if the program were workable and could be carried out as it is incorporated in the plank of the platform, it would nevertheless result in the complete repeal of the eighteenth amendment. Repeal is the basis upon which the whole program in the plank rests.

Secondly, the eighteenth amendment prohibits action upon the part of a State; in other words, the eighteenth amendment declares a national policy, by which all the States are bound. The substitute would permit 48 different systems in the United States, if the States desired it. The eighteenth amendment having taken away from the States the power to declare their own policy, the substitute would restore to the States the power to declare their own policy. So, having permitted the sale and manufacture of intoxicating liquor, and having referred the matter back to the States to deal with it as they see fit, there would be absolutely nothing left of the eighteenth amendment. If you permit the manufacture and sale, which the substitute would permit, if you allow the States to determine each its own policy, as the substitute would, the eighteenth amendment is as effectively repealed as if an amendment to the Constitution were proposed as follows, "the eighteenth amendment is hereby repealed."

Third, the eighteenth amendment establishes a uniform, unified policy with reference to prohibition throughout the United States. The substitute, so called, would permit each State to have its own system, its own plan, and its own policy. I ask, What is there left of the eighteenth amendment after you permit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor throughout the United States, after you permit each State to have its own policy, after you break up the national policy and divide it into as many policies as there are States which may desire to announce policies? I say, interpret it as you may, the very basic principle of the eighteenth amendment would be removed, and removed by the substitute proposed in the platform. I say, therefore, Mr. President, that there can be no doubt that this platform is for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. It never could have gone through the convention if it had not been.

There are only two planks in this platform which need to be read. The rest of it is a statement of propositions which nobody will dispute, which in all probability the Democrats will incorporate in their own platform at Chicago.

> We, therefore, believe that the people should have an opportunity to pass upon a proposed amendment, the provision of which, while retaining in the Federal Government the power to preserve the gains already made in dealing with the evils inherent in the liquor traffic, shall allow States to deal with the problem as their citizens may determine.

There is nothing left of the eighteenth amendment after that happens. The affirmative principle of it is gone. It is unworkable, except upon the basis of repeal and the doing away with the eighteenth amendment.

> Subject always to the power of the Federal Government to protect those States where prohibition may exist and safeguard our citizens everywhere from the return of the saloon.

Those two propositions I will come to in a few moments.

My first contention, therefore, is that the plank provides for absolute repeal of the eighteenth amendment. If that is not true, if it is contended that technically the eighteenth amendment is not to be repealed, then what is to happen?

Mr. John J. Raskob some time ago proposed what is known as the "Raskob plan." Under that plan the eighteenth amendment was to remain, but each State was to vote itself out from under the eighteenth amendment when it saw fit to do so. The only alternative to the proposition which I have been urging, that this plank provides for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, would be that technically the eighteenth amendment should remain, and under the Raskob system each State could vote itself out when it saw fit to do so.

I do not think that is the construction which any Republican would contend should be placed upon the platform. I do not think it is the fair construction to be placed upon the platform, but I do contend that it is the only alternative to absolute repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

To my mind, the Raskob plan, or this plan, if it incorporates the Raskob plan, is nothing but legalized secession. It would destroy the uniformity of the Constitution throughout the United States. It would permit us to have a Constitution applying to one part of the country and not applying to another. It is a constitutional monstrosity, and I can not believe that anybody intended that the eighteenth amendment should remain, but that the States should vote themselves out from under the Constitution of the United States whenever they saw fit to do so. But that is the only alternative in my judgment.

Mr. President, now we come to the other proposition, which is very important; that is, the protection of the dry States contemplated, if there are to be dry States. It is my opinion; yes, it is my conviction that the eighteenth amendment would never have been proposed, much less ratified by the States, had it not been for the open, brazen, persistent, corrupt defiance of the laws of the dry States by the liquor interests outside of the dry States. When the eighteenth amendment was adopted, we had 33 States which had prohibition in some form. The people in those States had determined for themselves how they should deal with the matter. They had passed their laws, in many instances by popular vote; they had determined their policies and enacted laws in pursuance of those policies. But were those laws respected? Was the popular will respected? Was the principle of home rule respected? Was State control respected? No.

These States were invaded, the laws evaded and broken up, their officials corrupted by the liquor interests outside of the dry States. The very heart of the fight for prohibition was for the protection of the dry States. For 40 years the fight had gone on for protection of the dry States and 40 years the liquor interests had fought against home rule. The question is, What does the platform assure us in regard to that? The platform provides:

> Subject always to the power of the Federal Government to protect those States where prohibition may exist.

The questions are, What does that mean? How are the States to be protected? I am informed—I may be in error, but it came from a member of the committee—that the view of the committee was that when the eighteenth amendment was out of the way the Webb-Kenyon Act would come back into operation, and that under the Webb-Kenyon Act the States would have sufficient protection to protect them against the invasion of the liquor interests outside of the States. It is subject to that construction. I do not know whether that is the construction which will ultimately be placed upon it or not.

The Webb-Kenyon Act is, in my judgment, very slight protection, indeed, to the dry States. In the first place, the Webb-Kenyon Act was declared unconstitutional by the Attorney General of the United States. It was vetoed by the President of the United States because it was believed to be unconstitutional. Mr. Root declared that it was unconstitutional. Senator George Sutherland, now a member of the Supreme Court of the United States, declared it was unconstitutional. The Supreme Court finally held that it was constitutional, but by a divided court. If we are relegated to protection under the Webb-Kenyon Act, we have an act of Congress subject to repeal at any time, of doubtful constitutionality, and ineffective at its best. The Supreme Court decided, in effect, that while one could not ship liquor into the States under the Webb-Kenyon Act, it could be shipped across a State; and it never gets across. So, as a practical proposition, aside from the doubtful constitutionality of it, it is a slender reed, indeed, and little hope may be entertained if the dry States are to be turned over to the tender mercies of the liquor interests, protected by no other instrumentality than the Webb-Kenyon law.

Of course, Mr. President, the advocates of repeal—and I doubt not that will be the argument in this campaign—contend that carrying out this plank would be restoring local self-government, that we would be turning the question back to the people in the individual States. What I desire to say is that we have never had local self-government, we have never had home rule, we have never had State control, with reference to the liquor problem, except in name. The most successful and the most persistent foe of these vital principles of government have been those who were engaged in the liquor business. They have at all times trampled upon and disregarded those principles when they came in contact or in conflict with their interests. The very forces, the very influences which are now talking to us about the restoration of local self-government were the influences which were breaking down those principles of government.

Mr. President, when it is said that they will protect the States, they are under obligation to the people of the United States to say how, they are under obligation to be specific, they are under obligation to state definitely in order to enable the American people to know whether we are going to be thrown back on the old system where the other States are powerless to protect themselves against the raids of outside interests in the liquor traffic. There is nothing here but a generality which may be construed into nothing and I venture to say that the American people will not be satisfied until they have something specific as to how the dry States are to be protected. When we get to something specific, it will be found to be the most difficult thing in the world to provide for.

Mr. President, let us consider for a moment the clause with reference to the saloon. What does this plank in the platform say?

> But subject always to the power of the Federal Government to protect those States where prohibition may exist and safeguard our citizens everywhere from the return of the saloon and attendant abuses.

Now, what will be the situation when we start in to protect the people against the saloon? In the first place, we will have restored liquor to the position of a commodity which may be legally sold. The sale of intoxicating liquor is provided for in the substitute. I ask, How are we going to control the method and mode of sale after we once concede that the sale may take place? There is not sufficient power or influence in the Government of the United States to control the method by which men shall dispose of it once we grant them the legal right to dispose of it. We could not put enough men into New York City or Chicago to control the method of drinking it or where they could drink it or how they could drink it after we make it legal that it can be sold. It is all right in theory; it would be utterly impracticable in practice. After months of effort to devise some plan by which to prevent the return of the saloon, my judgment is that once the States are given the right to manufacture and sell, the National Government will be utterly powerless to control the method of sale.

Not only that, Mr. President, we have not only made it legal but we have turned it over to the States. The States may dispose of it in the manner which best suits the citizens of the State. Having permitted liquor to be sold, having established the legal right to sell it, and having turned it over to the States, how can the National Government control the method in which it shall be sold? In the first place, no one could draw an amendment to the Constitution which upon paper would do so. In the second place, if we had it upon paper, we never could execute it. Once we restore liquor to the avenues of legal trade that men may manufacture it, that they may sell it, that they may transport it, then the National Government has surrendered its power to control it. There is only one way to control it after that, and that is by the people of the respective States.

Of course all are opposed to the saloon. This institution, with its record of crime and disorder, has no defender. The enemy of good government and of clean politics, the rendezvous for every crime with which society has to contend, the nursery of those stupid, slimy vices which degrade and destroy the souls of men, it is by common condemnation rejected by both those who stand for and those who stand against the eighteenth amendment. Any plan to be proposed to the American people for the control of the liquor traffic should, in the interest of good government and of good citizenship, close every avenue against its return to American life. It would be a betrayal of the manhood and womanhood of our country to leave a chance, the slightest chance, for its return. But I ask again, Where are the specifications? How are we going to do it? How will we execute the will of the National Government? Once the sale is admitted there is no possible way by which the National Government can control the method, manner, and place of its being sold.

What is a saloon? A saloon, in legal contemplation, is a place where intoxicating liquors are retailed and drunk. The State might say, "This place where we have authorized liquor to be sold and drunk is not a saloon." The National Government would say, "We think it is a saloon." Then the State might modify its position to some extent and the National Government would be powerless. The place where it was retailed and where it was to be drunk would still be a saloon for all practical purposes. If we admit the selling, we must admit that they have a right to have a place where it is to be sold and drunk.

Mr. President, I come to the last paragraph in the platform:

> Such an amendment should be promptly submitted to the States by Congress.

"Such an amendment"—what amendment? An amendment which retains all the virtues of the eighteenth amendment? An amendment which discards all the vices of the eighteenth amendment? An amendment which protects all the benefits of the eighteenth amendment? An amendment which discards all the evils of the eighteenth amendment? Will somebody draw that amendment? Will somebody suggest a rule or a principle by which it can be drawn? Are there 10 men who would agree upon the benefits and the losses under the eighteenth amendment? It is a generality. It may have its place in the campaign, but when you and I, Mr. President, come to formulate that amendment here it will be utterly no guide whatever.

> Submitted promptly to the States by the Congress to be acted upon by State conventions called for the sole purpose in accordance with the provisions of Article V of the Constitution and adequately safeguarded so as to be truly representative.

What is to be safeguarded? These conventions? Can the National Government safeguard these conventions? Has the National Government a word in the world to say about these conventions? We may say that such an amendment shall be ratified by conventions, but after we have said that ratification shall be by legislature or by convention, then the State controls absolutely the set-up and the machinery by which the convention is to be called and the delegates selected. It has been said that this was designed to insure a more equitable distribution of delegates from the rural part of the country and the urban part of the country. I do not know what the purpose was, but I venture to say that it is utterly beyond the power of the National Government to have anything whatever to do with the organization and the machinery of the convention which are to ratify this amendment.

Now, Mr. President, just a word about the proposal that such an amendment should be promptly submitted to the States by Congress. Speaking for myself, Mr. President, whether I shall vote for resubmission at all or not, when I shall vote for it, how I shall vote, or what substitute I shall require, I reserve absolutely for myself. I do not think that any self-respecting Senator would permit a political convention to tell him how he should amend the Constitution of the United States, an instrument under which not partisans are to live but 120,000,000 people, regardless of parties, are to live. How I shall vote and under what circumstances I shall vote belongs exclusively to me under my oath, and I openly and avowedly reject this provision of the platform and say now that I shall not be bound by it for a single moment. I shall treat it as it deserves to be treated, as an offensive effort to bind a Senator wherein he must be bound alone by his own oath, his own judgment, his own conscience.

Mr. President, I think the most striking feature of this plank is the proposition that we can not detect from any reading or any study of it where the Republican Party stands on this question. We can not detect whether it thinks the eighteenth amendment was wise or unwise. We can not detect whether it thinks the people would be benefited or injured by its repeal. We can not determine any guide whatever from it for the American people in voting in this campaign. It is thrown out, and there is no suggestion as to whether it was wise to have it or unwise to have it, whether it would be wise to keep it or wise to let it go. This proposition, look at it as we may, engages the hearts and minds of 120,000,000 people. If the Republican Party assumes jurisdiction to undertake to speak upon the question, it should have thrown out a guide to the people of the United States as to what they should do in the coming campaign.

Mr. President, it is now proposed that we again legalize the sale of intoxicating liquor. It is proposed that this great evil shall be made a thing of profit, that out of it men shall gather wealth. That means, as it always has meant, that the home, the family, the education of the child, the physical and moral welfare of the community must contend against the combined appetite for drink and the appetite for gain. One shudders to look upon the poverty, the misery, the broken lives, and ruined homes in that unspeakable hell where man is permitted to commercialize for profit the most insatiable habit with which human frailty has to contend.

In the light of this proposal and in contemplation of all that the proposal means, I ask: What is the program for the future? I ask that those who propose such a program be specific, definite, certain. What restraints are to be drawn about those who shall go forth to make profits out of this business? I insist upon details.

Mr. President, there is a piece of political history far back in the annals of this country which seems to me worthy of our attention just now. It will be remembered that the Democratic Party and the Whig Party, after debating slavery from day to day, from year to year, and from decade to decade, came to the conclusion they would settle it all by resolutions in a political convention. In the language of Stephen A. Douglas, they were not to care whether slavery was voted up or voted down. Both parties met in Baltimore and the platforms were practically identical on the slavery question. They both declared that the slavery question had been settled, that there was no longer occasion to agitate it, and that loyal party members should cease to agitate it. They even went so far—and in this respect the Chicago convention seems to follow them again—as to indicate that those who went contrary to the party platform would be disloyal to the party. When Douglas went home from Baltimore he is said to have declared that he never again would make a speech upon the slavery question—and bless his brave soul, he never made any other kind as long as he lived.

Immediately after this position was taken by the two parties, things began to change politically in the United States, a political revolution started on its way. The great leader of the Whig Party, Mr. Webster, broken-hearted and disappointed, went down to Marshfield to die. The Whig Party soon perished out of sheer political cowardice—of moral inanition. The Democratic Party in a few years went into retirement, bankrupt in principles and in leadership, and it remained in retirement for 40 years. Shortly thereafter there came out of the prairies of Illinois onto the political arena a strange figure who declared that it did make a difference whether slavery was voted up or voted down, who declared that there was a moral purpose in the people of the United States, which could not be killed by resolutions in a political convention. In other words, no question was ever settled until it was settled right.

In conclusion, it is my judgment that you can not settle this question by adopting resolutions in a political convention. You can not stop agitation. The people will decide this question regardless of party and party lines. There are a vast number of people in the United States who do care, and care deeply, about this question. It will have to go back to the people and the people will find a way to determine it without the aid or guidance of political platforms.

Mr. HASTINGS obtained the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HASTINGS. For what purpose?

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to address the Senate. I do not desire to ask the Senator a question. Did the Senator take the floor for the purpose of addressing the Senate?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I desire to make a few observations in reply to the address of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I have listened with great interest to the observations of the Senator from Idaho upon this one plank in the platform of the Republican Party. I am greatly disappointed that he or anybody else should have any doubt as to what it means. I expected, of course, some person on the Democratic side and some Democrats in the country to state that it was difficult to understand, but I felt sure that at least the Senator from Idaho would know exactly what was meant by it.

Mr. President, all of us are interested in this question and have been so for many years. The eighteenth amendment and the subject of repealing it, I have insisted for several years, ought not to be a partisan political question, but ought to be decided by the people of the country. I have maintained that if the amendment was to be taken out of the Constitution, it ought to be taken out by the same method by which it was put into the Constitution. I still insist, notwithstanding this platform, that it ought not to be a partisan question except upon one condition—I can conceive of it being a partisan question if it be insisted, on the one hand, that there be a straight repeal of the eighteenth amendment, and, on the other hand, that there be a modification of the eighteenth amendment. In other words, a clear repeal of the eighteenth amendment means that the Federal Government gives up all effort to control the subject; a modification such as is proposed in this platform contemplates that the Federal Government shall still have some control of the subject. Those two questions might very well be political questions if one of the great parties should take one side and one the other; but I say that the Republican Party in its platform positively and definitely places itself on the side of being against the repeal and leaves the Federal Government in a position where it will by some method undertake to control the liquor traffic. That is vastly different from a straight repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

I do not think the majority of the convention was in favor of a repeal at all. I think the Senator from Idaho is not correct when he says that Secretary Mills was for repeal. It may be that he will be able to go back and find——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I did not say that Mr. Mills was for repeal in the convention; I said that he was for this other proposition; but that he had, as I understand, been in favor of repeal for six years.

Mr. HASTINGS. And I think it may be said that many people have changed their minds with respect to this subject with every week-end, perhaps. It is a question on which people change their minds very quickly, and what one has said at one time may not be what he thinks a few days later [laughter]; but I insist that by this platform, whether it be perfectly clear or not, the Republican Party endeavored to do one of two things in particular. It endeavored to prevent the subject being remitted to the States without any control left in the hands of the Federal Government. That I submit could be easily done by an amendment which would specifically provide what constitutes a saloon, if you please. The object of the particular plank in the platform was to give to the States absolute control of the subject, except on one condition, namely, that a State should not be authorized to open and conduct a saloon within its borders.

I realize, of course, that the Senator is correct in saying that it would be difficult for the Federal Government to go to the State of New York and to say that no saloon shall be opened in that State; I agree with that contention; but we would not have to go that far. I think it must now be admitted that it is impossible for the Federal Government to fully carry out the provisions of the existing Federal statute and the eighteenth amendment with respect to the sale of intoxicating liquor in the city of New York or in any other great city. But there is this difference with respect to it: If there be an amendment to the Federal Constitution which permits the State of New York to manufacture and sell intoxicating liquor but provides that it shall not be permitted to sell except in sealed packages, the contents not to be drunk on the premises—which would be my definition of a saloon—then I say if the State of New York should undertake to authorize any person in the city of New York or elsewhere in the State of New York to sell contrary to that amendment to the Constitution, the Federal Government could by injunction prevent the sale by any such method. Of course, I do not mean that it could not be done secretly, but I mean that such an amendment to the Federal Constitution would make impossible the sale legally in the State of New York of any intoxicating liquors by the saloon method.

Now, I say also that if the Republican Party and the Democratic Party combined—and anything definite which may be done has undoubtedly got to be done by a combination of the two—through the Federal Government can so hold onto this subject as to prevent the sale through the saloon method in any State of this Union, I say that that alone warrants us in going to the trouble of amending the Constitution.

I do not want to be understood as saying that I am personally for modifying the eighteenth amendment at all. I propose, as does the Senator from Idaho, to wait my turn, and, when that proposal shall come to the Senate seriously, to consider it and to say what shall be done with it; but I have no objection, and I am perfectly willing that the Republican Party shall stand as being willing to submit—what? Not the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, but to submit a modified amendment which it may be believed by the American people or by three-fourths of the people of the Nation to be an improvement over that which we now have.

What the Republican Party has undertaken to do by this plan—and that is all we are undertaking to do, and it is being done by the Republican Party, as it will be done by the Democratic Party because of public opinion—is to make an effort to improve the present condition. It is a thing I suppose which the parties are obliged to consider, notwithstanding the fact that I think no amendment to the Federal Constitution has ever been proposed by either of the great political parties of this Nation as a partisan question. It has always been done in some other way. As I have said before, this amendment can not be changed; it can not be repealed; it can not be modified without the aid and the assistance of the very people who urged that the eighteenth amendment be adopted and are responsible for putting it into effect; but it seems to me, with conditions as they now are, it will be perfectly possible to convince the people who helped put the eighteenth amendment over that, after all, in view of the conditions, in view of the impossibility of enforcing the present law, it may be possible to frame some other amendment that will give to the States which insist upon selling liquor legally or illegally an opportunity to do as they please, provided they shall not sell through the saloon method, and at the same time improve conditions there and everywhere.

I do not think the conclusion can be drawn from this platform that all the Republican Party expects to do is to maintain on the statute books the Webb-Kenyon Act in order to protect the dry States. It does not say that at all. What it intends to do is to do what it can to protect the dry States. I admit that it will be difficult, of course; it will be difficult if not almost impossible; but it is impossible now, and being impossible now, if we can construct some other plan, if we can adopt some other amendment which will improve conditions, why should we not have an opportunity, and why should the people complain when the Republican Party has answered this great demand that some effort be made to improve the conditions?

That, Mr. President, I think is a sufficient answer to what the distinguished Senator from Idaho has said in the way of criticism of the platform.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator will agree with me, will he not, when a proposed substitute permits the manufacture, sale, and transportation of liquor throughout the Nation that it is a repeal of the eighteenth amendment?

Mr. HASTINGS. If it did just that and nothing more, that would be true, of course.

Mr. BORAH. Even if we went so far as to preclude the return of the saloon, still if we admitted the manufacture and sale in some way, however it might be sold, that would be a repeal of the eighteenth amendment, because now it can not be sold at all, under the eighteenth amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. It is not a repeal of the eighteenth amendment if there be left in it any of the things that the eighteenth amendment has in it.

Mr. BORAH. But the platform plank has not left in anything that the eighteenth amendment has in it. All the eighteenth amendment has in it is the prohibition of the manufacture, sale, and transportation of liquor in the United States.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is true.

Mr. BORAH. If by a substitute there is permitted the manufacture, sale, and transportation of liquor in the United States that is a repeal, is it not?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not propose to do any such thing, and the Republican Party does not make any such proposal. The Republican Party proposes that where a State and where the citizens of a State insist that they want to do so they may manufacture, transport, and sell in that State, provided they do not do it by the saloon method.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; and that by itself is a repeal of the eighteenth amendment, because now no State can do that thing.

Mr. HASTINGS. To that extent, of course.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator misunderstands my question. I say that the eighteenth amendment prohibits the manufacture and sale without regard to how intoxicating liquor may be sold.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is true.

Mr. BORAH. Then, if it be desired to sell intoxicating liquors, even if it is not permitted to sell them anywhere except in a house, that is a repeal of the eighteenth amendment, is it not?

Mr. HASTINGS. So far as it affects that particular State. [Laughter.]

Mr. BORAH. But when we adopt an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as a substitute for the eighteenth amendment which permits any State to have any system it wants, that is a repeal of the eighteenth amendment, is it not?

Mr. HASTINGS. No. If it were a repeal of the eighteenth amendment I would not go to the trouble to do anything except to say "repeal." If it is necessary for me to do something else other than the short method, that is not repeal. It is very different from repeal, is it not?

Mr. BORAH. No; but the Senator is not doing anything else which is prohibited by the Constitution. The Senator is only proposing to say that liquor shall not be sold in a saloon.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is very different from what the conditions were before the eighteenth amendment was adopted.

Mr. BORAH. Yes, it is different; but if it is permitted to be sold anywhere in any way, in parlors or anywhere else, that is a repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. It is a modification. I can not say that it is a repeal, and surely the Senator from Idaho does not insist that it is a repeal.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, yes, I do.

Mr. HASTINGS. It is a modification.

Mr. BORAH. No; it is not a modification. [Laughter.] It is not a modification, if the able Senator will permit me to say so, for the reason that the sole thing in the eighteenth amendment is the prohibition of the manufacture, sale, and transportation. Now, what the Senator proposes to do is to permit all those things to be done, to manufacture liquor, to sell it, and to transport it—it is proposed to permit all those things to be done. True, the Senator says that the sale shall not take place in a saloon, but it may take place in what are called "parlors," such as they have in Canada—and it would be hard for one to know the difference between such a parlor and a saloon. He says that it may not be sold in a saloon, but still it may be sold. That is a repeal of the eighteenth amendment, because the eighteenth amendment says it may never be sold under any circumstances.

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not quite understand the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LEWIS. I thought the Senator had concluded. I desire to address the Senate.

Mr. HASTINGS. I will be through in just a moment.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes; I will be glad to answer the Senator if I can.

Mr. COUZENS. Does the Senator subscribe to that part of the party platform which refers to party government and in the concluding paragraph says?—

> We earnestly request that Republicans through the Union demand that their representatives in the Congress pledge themselves to these principles, to the end that the insidious influences of party disintegration may not undermine the very foundations of the Republic.

I was rather astonished to see two of my colleagues on the Republican side already breaking that party pledge. [Laughter.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I might say, in answer to the question of the Senator, that I sat in the resolutions committee from 5 o'clock in the afternoon until 7.30 the next morning, and I would not have an opportunity here to answer all the questions that might be asked me as to what occurred during that time. Therefore, I do not think I care to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. COUZENS. Then, the Senator does not care to answer whether he subscribes to that part of the platform?

Mr. HASTINGS. I subscribe to the Republican platform always, regardless of what it says. [Laughter.]

Mr. COUZENS. I am sorry.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I believe the Senator and I will agree upon one proposition. In the last sentence of the last paragraph of this platform it says, speaking of the conventions—

> And adequately safeguarded so as to be truly representative.

Does the Senator agree with me that the States alone may determine how these conventions may be organized and the delegates selected?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do.

Mr. President, in that connection I will say that I think this method that the people of the country seem to think is so important now, in order that they may ascertain whether or not the States approve of the proposal for an amendment to the Federal Constitution—namely, that it shall be done by conventions—is a perfectly new proposal; and they have an entirely false idea about what is necessary before that method shall bring about the necessary amendment. My own judgment is that in order to set up a convention method there must be legislative action on the part of the States; and I do not see why the persons who propose an amendment to the Federal Constitution should insist that it shall be done in a way that is new to the history of the Nation. We know only one plan; that is, by a joint resolution passed by two-thirds of the Congress and approved by three-fourths of the legislatures of the States; but the popular idea during the last several years is that it shall be done through conventions.

I argued against that. I think that is a wrong way to do it; but the majority of the delegates believed that was the proper way to do it. I think it is wrong because I think the proponents of the amendment will have greater difficulty in getting it done. In the first place, it is necessary for them to go before their legislatures to set up the necessary machinery; and if the legislatures be controlled by persons who do not want the Federal amendment made, it is perfectly possible for them to prevent any machinery at all being set up, and thereby perfectly possible to prevent any conventions being called. It is insisted upon the other side that the Congress may do that, and may set up all this machinery. I do not believe it is possible to do it in that way.

Now, Mr. President, just one other thing.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAREY in the chair). Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do.

Mr. MORRISON. Under the platform of the Republican Party adopted at Chicago, the amendment to be submitted could provide for the sale of whisky by private parties, could it not? It would not be confined to sale by the State, but might allow, in the State so desiring, sale by private contract?

Mr. HASTINGS. The platform distinctly provides that it may be done in the way in which the people of that State want it done, except that it shall not be done by the saloon method.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask the Senator if he realizes that that goes far beyond the late candidate for President of the Democratic Party, Governor Smith, as announced by him as his personal platform, and that your party trounced him throughout this country for favoring it. He said that he would never favor the submission of an amendment which would allow the sale of whisky by any private agency.

Mr. HASTINGS. I may say to the Senator, in reply, that when this platform was being framed it was not done with the idea that Governor Smith was to run on that particular platform. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRISON. I understand that; but you did understand, did you not, that the man who beat Smith four years ago, upon a drier platform of his own than Smith advocated, was going to run on it now; and that he was elected President of the United States largely because the President now, the Republican candidate then, and the Republican Party stirred this country and took from the Democratic Party millions of votes for Mr. Hoover because he opposed even an amendment that allowed the States, as States, to put up dispensaries and sell whisky?

Mr. HASTINGS. I am in favor of pretty nearly any kind of a Republican platform that will make certain that we can carry North Carolina for the Republican ticket. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRISON. And that is exactly what you did. Now the President who carried it is running upon a worse liquor platform than Al Smith, as they call him, ran upon.

Would the Senator mind my reading into the RECORD—it is very brief—Governor Smith's utterance? It will take but a minute.

Mr. HASTINGS. I think I do not care to have that done. I do not want to mix up my speech with Governor Smith's [laughter], if the Senator will be good enough to let me finish.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware declines to yield further.

Mr. MORRISON. I did not understand that he declined to yield further, but to yield for that purpose.

Mr. HASTINGS. What else does the Senator want to ask me?

Mr. MORRISON. I just wanted to ask the Senator this question——

Mr. HASTINGS. I hope the Senator is not undertaking to embarrass me in any way.

Mr. MORRISON. To embarrass the Senator? I am quite sure that I could not do that. [Laughter.] I am trying to embarrass his party for having carried my State on a dry platform four years ago, and now repudiating it under the same leadership, and wanting to carry it next time with a wetter platform than Governor Smith's personal platform, upon which he ran for President.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator embarrasses my party, he embarrasses me.

I was about to conclude. I wanted to say something with respect to the complaint that the platform is not specific.

I think it will be conceded that upon this kind of a question—which, after all, must be left to the Congress, and upon which two-thirds of the Congress must agree—it would not be a wise thing for a party platform to undertake to give particular and specific proposals. I think there are great principles involved, and all that could be expected would be that those principles should be established by the party. I repeat that the Republican Party established the principle that it is perfectly willing to submit to the people the question whether or not the eighteenth amendment shall be so modified as to permit the people in particular States to control the liquor traffic, subject, however, to the exception that they shall not do it by the saloon method.

There is a principle involved in that. There may be on the part of the Democrats the proposal of a straight repeal of the eighteenth amendment. If there be, there is a principle established. It will not be necessary to go into specific questions as to how it shall be done or what shall be done. It would be a great mistake to do that. When the Republican Party goes forth showing the principle adopted, it is all that could be expected in a political platform.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, this debate at this particular time touches me in a manner that I confess is rather personal.

I helped prepare—indeed, to write—the platform of the Democracy of the State of Illinois almost three years ago, laying down the theory of returning to the States the right by legislation to direct what shall be any regulations touching food, drink, church, or schools, to the extent that the law should attempt to dominate either of these.

I now remind the Senate that the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] in his manner, quite unparalleled in its efficiency and eloquence, all throughout this Nation did much with his great weight and power to make possible the election of the present President of the United States, favoring national prohibition and opposed the Democracy upon the theory that the Democracy represented repeal of the eighteenth amendment, this being designated by the Senator as nullification. The distinguished Senator was able to convince the State of North Carolina, the State of Tennessee, and similar localities of doubtful politics by his dominant eloquence and power that the present gentleman, now President, was for the eighteenth amendment in its complete fulfillment, also that we, who at the time were opposing the application of it in the oppressive method and corrupt manner in which it was being inaugurated and enforced, were nullifiers of the Constitution.

These States in which the Senator held forth in such power elected the President by following the direction of Senator BORAH.

I should like to ask my able friend from Idaho, since he then supported the candidate who is now President Hoover on the theory that he was the supporter of the eighteenth amendment and opposed the Democratic candidate on the ground that he was a nullifier of the Constitution, how stands he now? Since he has discovered that the platform of the Republican Party now works the nullification of the Constitution and disposes of the eighteenth amendment and practically removes the Federal Constitution from the people by surrendering it to the States, I ask my able friend the Senator from Idaho will he now support President Hoover as the advocate of the eighteenth amendment or does he support him as the nullifier of the Constitution?

Mr. BORAH. Is the Senator putting that question to me?

Mr. LEWIS. I should be pleased to have such response as the Senator cares to give me.

Mr. BORAH. I understood that the Senator asked whether I would support the President of the United States on this platform.

Mr. LEWIS. I did.

Mr. BORAH. I will not.

Mr. LEWIS. The answer is specific; but what one would be expected from so eminent a statesman and from the millions of others who will follow him?

Now, Mr. President, the question which breaks upon me is, knowing my eminent friend from Idaho to be very capable in anticipation and in the philosophy of politics in his party, does he expect the President to change, by any expression of his own, what he will propose as the real meaning of this platform in its assault on the Constitution and by this shift allure the Senator from Idaho to his support?

Since my eminent friend from Idaho says he will not support the President on this platform, I ask, then, what position will my eminent friend take to the whole Republican Party and to its issue? For if on this he can not find, according to his conscience, as a supporter of the Constitution, the right within himself for the justification of the support of the President on this provision, are there any other provisions in this platform upon which he can support him as a Republican?

And now, Mr. President, I demand the consideration of the thought before my eminent friend and his colleagues, I submit to the country the theory with a query: If the President of the United States four years ago could submit to the American people a doctrine upon which he could secure his election by the representation of being the supporter of one phase of the Constitution, and now, four years afterward, consent to its being decimated, strangled, defamed, and destroyed, what are the American people to hope for in any promise for the future? What other provision in this platform has any security to the American mind that it likewise will not be surrendered, defaced, and defamed at any time, whenever the political opportunity suggests success, by adopting any method of trick or deception that the eminent Senator from Idaho is compelled both to decry and to condemn here as a Republican who had been so long a supporter of the President?

Mr. President, the trouble with the present day in the United States is that these eminent gentlemen who are called Republican leaders have put upon this Nation the curse of such hypocrisy, and the general pollution by their deceit of their promises from one point to another. Through these devices they allure the American public at one time, and deceive them at another. Behold that in every promise of relief of the miseries and persecutions of our humble people until the American public have gotten to a point now where they feel there is no trust to be placed in public officials anywhere. They have no hope to repose in an administration in Washington. They regard the President as a shifty politician, gliding from place to place to wherever he is ordered by the combination that is his commander. In the language of present-day sports, every run is entered upon to land him upon a base. The President is both the actor and victim of the machinists of malefaction in Republican politics.

Mr. President, this question of prohibition takes on something different from the mere matter of differences between eminent gentlemen of the Republican Party as to the matter of whisky as a mere intoxicating drink. That is but one phase. This I submit, if the great American public can be deceived by the trick of the convention in a platform of such mazes and confusions that eminent scholars of the Constitution, and great leaders of the party, such as the distinguished Senator from Idaho, can not make from it any kind of meaning to submit to the American public,

The phraseology involves such strategy of confusion and such mixture of deception that it is impossible for an American to know whether the issue is a question of the State against the Constitution or the Constitution against the State. Or is it one where the inquiring citizen shall take his consolation in beverage?

Mr. President, the great question of this day is, Will any of the political parties be faithful to the people of the United States in their need—in answer to their call? Will the Congress come to the rescue of their condition of agony and distress? Will we give give them remedy for the wrongs they are enduring? Sirs, they cry out. Will they continue to be baffled and tricked by those who call themselves Republicans on the one hand, constitutionalists on the other? Have we come to the point that we confess that we are willing to be subdued by the forms of deception and the hypocrisy which have been practiced for four years upon this country? For let it not be forgotten, every theory the President of the United States put forth in the beginning as being the principle upon which he stood then has from time to time been abandoned or denounced. Then his eminent leaders on the floor here have found it agreeable to glide from place to place in seeking some refuge or some excuse in the matters of the proposed relief of the great people who are in distress and misery. Sirs, listen to the cry of those who are seeking to be rescued from hunger, who are shuddering upon the public streets in degrading hunger. Their hands are held out for charity, they are held up as mendicants in the richest country in the world, because of the combinations and confusions practiced by the Republican master statesmen indorsed by the White House, all shown in their method by the eminent Senator from Idaho, who has just spoken upon one phase of this great national wrong upon the country and the land of our home. Deception, hypocrisy, and treason to the trust of the people.

Mr. President, whether the Democratic Party shall take one position or another as to the matter of prohibition does not concern me very much at this moment. I may be pardoned for saying that I was the first in the United States to open this fight on the present basis of platform proposal. It was my fight on the principle in the State of Illinois in the spring of 1930. I am complimented by the correspondence of the Hon. Dwight Morrow, of New Jersey, who, as candidate of his party, sent to me for a copy of my platform. He took the platform as written for Illinois, together with an explanation and addresses, as his direct platform for New Jersey for the Republicans, and without the change of even the punctuation. I think I am complimented by the adoption of the doctrine for New Jersey, and in the result of victory there I find vindication.

Now, I wish to say this: I proclaim now that I defy the Republican Party to execute the purpose that is clearly before my eyes. I defy the Democratic Party to try the same trick and be successful. That is, to bring the mere matter of whisky before the American public in the national election and to engage its whole attention. Sirs, the question of what is called prohibition or antiprohibition as now jutted in the Republican platform is for the purpose of disguising the real position they occupy upon the questions of the day on which rest the fate and lives of millions of helpless sufferers and which now hold in the balance the destiny of the Republic.

I want something more than that these great political parties shall open this war in the sham contest. I deny the privilege of the single and sole question of a little more or less to drink. We shall not confuse the citizens with the idea at this time that the great question before the world and America is, Which shall dominate in matters of temperance or public morals, the State or the Nation? Not by my consent will this trick on the part of these Republican masters, or those of the Democracy that my eminent friend from Idaho described—whether led by Chairman Raskob or any other man—succeed without my protest. I will present my position in protest now.

The great question of to-day, sir, is to relieve this land of the miseries under which it endures; it is to give food to the hungry, to give shelter to the homeless, it is to give employment to the unemployed, to give hope to those who are hopeless. To give some future promise to the Republic that will raise it to the respect of its citizens; that will lift it before the world to the place it once occupied in admiration and praise, while we restore it to that respect which it did enjoy before a present administration of trickery and trumpery removed it from its elevation. Behold it now before the world, the sneer and scorn; at home its own people weep over its fate as something helpless in its relief and shameful in its practices.

Therefore, Mr. President, I insist that while it may be true that the platform of the Republicans literally complies with the scriptural malediction, "A covenant with death and a league with hell," we Democrats still have hope that in the other convention that will soon follow there will be expression that will make promise and give assurance to the great mass of our countrymen that they will not be deserted in their condition of helplessness, and they will not be left to wander throughout the United States of America in the tears of their agony, in the pains of their misfortune.

We, the Democracy, propose to America that this essential thrust on the part of our honorable opponents called the prohibition plank for the purpose is inserted to divert the mind of the public from the artfulness of political crime put upon America, in which her money has been stolen from her banks and her depositors and investors through insidious trickery of the financiers; added to this infamy is employment denied to industries by the manipulation of the monopolists of commerce.

The independence of the citizen has been denied him by the powerful persecutors who, with sinister power, have persecuted him to his helplessness. Senators, the time has come when it shall be known now that there are those in both political parties who, while working out this problem upon the basis of a just morality and a rightful consideration of local self-government, will demand that the parties go forward to the country and say fairly and justly what is their intention as to the relief of the misery the country is enduring. They shall state what steps they will take to remove the hardships from America. They must reveal what refuge they will afford for the rescue of the United States from the dishonor under which she now rests. They must answer by what method relief will be assured to those who to-day are cherishing the dream that somewhere amidst America will be found the American heart that can restore them again to their independence as men and their faith in their country.

The hour is ripe now when the citizens of America shall know who are their friends. The hour is ripe when our countrymen will know to whom they can turn for rescue, and the day demands that if the Republic is to be rescued from the contempt of the world and restored to the confidence of its mankind there shall be some truth and honor put forth in the platforms of the Republican Party, of the Democratic Party, and of those who call themselves political parties looking to the restoration of honor to the Government and justice to the citizens. Here in this revelation we will have the fulfillment of the true meaning of the Constitution—equality and justice. Sirs, American manhood calls out that there be truth before mankind written by these masters of a great Republic—in both platforms of the political parties—and these shall be held responsible by those who are the true citizens of the country, guided by their conscience under God.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, as a document of some historic value in the coming campaign and in the future, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an interview given by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler on the plank of the Republican Party touching prohibition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, June 19, 1932]

DOCTOR BUTLER'S CALL TO REPUDIATE HOOVER'S DRY-WET PLANK

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, fresh from the defeat by White House patronage of the repeal movement at Chicago, predicted to-day that the Republican Party will "go over the dam" in November unless State conventions in wet, industrialized New England and the Middle Atlantic States repudiate the wet-dry prohibition plank.

Granted such official disavowals—unprecedented in the history of the Grand Old Party—President Hoover may, in the opinion of the sage of Morningside Heights, convinced repealist, liberal, and internationalist, have a sporting chance of reelection. Otherwise not.

Moreover, Doctor Butler intends to lead actively a crusade calculated to bring about repudiation by States.

In one of his rare interviews Doctor Butler to-day recapitulated for the World-Telegram his views on the Chicago convention, the repeal fight, the caliber of presidential candidates, and the autumnal political prospects generally. Temperately, yet in graphic, colloquial idioms, now sitting at his desk and now energetically pacing the floor of the book-lined library in the Columbia University president's mansion at 60 Morningside Drive, Doctor Butler exhaustively analyzed the situation.

He regards the prohibition plank—"every word of which was passed upon by the President"—as a "political blunder of the first magnitude." It committed the Republican Party, as Doctor Butler sees it, to "indirect acceptance and indorsement of nation-wide prohibition under Federal control."

The administration steam roller, piloted by Ogden L. Mills, Secretary of the Treasury, and a host of Federal officeholders, provided the "most shocking" exhibition of patronage control of a convention since 1872, when Ulysses S. Grant won his second nomination, according to the veteran educator.

Doctor Butler sternly condemned the use of the patronage whip to steer the convention, 700 of whose delegates, he contends, were for repeal, into indorsement of a plank which he terms the "worst proposal," with one exception, ever offered to remedy the liquor-reform dilemma.

"I was told," he said, "that 6 Cabinet members were at the convention, that 37 of the 97 delegates from New York and upward of 400 of the convention's membership were officeholders.

"This is repugnant to Republican traditions. In 1904 Roosevelt declared against the election of Federal officeholders as delegates. And in 1924, in February, Mr. Coolidge gave a statement to the press deploring the sending of postmasters and other officeholders to the convention which nominated him. But this year the postmasters actually were whipped up by the Post Office Department, as we saw by that scandalous incident in Missouri."

He referred to a bald appeal uttered in behalf of Mr. Hoover's candidacy by an Assistant Postmaster General at a convention of postmasters in Missouri.

Doctor Butler reviewed the process by means of which the administration leaders switched delegates and delegations from repeal to the Hoover plank. His plank, embodied in the Bingham minority report, would have won had the convention "been let alone."

"We had 610 assured votes on Monday night," he said. "Estimates that we could muster 700 votes were made. In any event, we had a majority. And then the administration leaders, taking orders from Washington, got busy. They knew we had them beaten; that the convention, if uninfluenced by the White House, would go for repeal.

"They made inroads in Pennsylvania and Ohio and some in Massachusetts. They were successful in southern delegations, where the delegates are readily reached by patronage considerations. Mississippi's delegation held out, but elsewhere they changed votes materially. In effect, they said: 'We expect to be in power, dispensing patronage for another four years. What jobs can these repeal fellows hand you?' It worked.

"I saw an interesting analysis in a Cleveland newspaper, which showed that, eliminating the southern delegations, we had a majority. One of the most gratifying incidents was the fact that we had 5 of the 13 votes from Maine, the pioneer prohibition State."

The New York delegation voted on Tuesday night 4 to 1 for repeal. Doctor Butler believes that proportion represents the Republican line-up in this State. However, the delegates voting for the administration plank included Secretary Mills, Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Seymour Lowman, and other officeholders—some sincerely wet.

Doctor Butler suspects that millions of nominal Republicans are prepared to desert the Hoover ticket on the prohibition issue.

"I have been deluged, at Chicago and since I reached home, with telegrams from all over the country, from men and women alike, the general tenor of which is: 'We're through. No matter what the Democrats can do, it can't possibly be as bad as what the Republicans have done.'"

Declining to specify his own intentions in November, Doctor Butler did not close the door on a personal bolt to the Democratic nominee provided the prohibition plank of that party is honest.

The Democrats, he observed, have a virtual monopoly of presidential timber. It is their duty to submerge "private" feuds and nominate their wisest man.

Alfred E. Smith is "the best public servant this country has produced since Theodore Roosevelt—broad-gauged, honest, and highly capable." Owen D. Young is "a natural-born statesman, with a broad, calm, unprejudiced vision." Newton D. Baker, with a "wide political experience in Ohio and Washington, has a very fine mind and a very great gift of speech and appeal." Gov. Albert C. Ritchie is "a cultivated gentleman and a scholar." Melvin A. Traylor, Chicago banker, "has a fine position in Chicago and his native State, Kentucky, and has an international point of view." Senator CORDELL HULL, of Tennessee, is an able leader whose recent speeches on the tariff recalled the "great debating days in the Senate."

A wealth of material he finds in the Democratic party and a dearth in his own. He and the venerable Elihu Root discussed that point a couple of years ago.

"What has happened to our party?" Mr. Root, in a speculative humor, inquired. "Twenty-five years ago we had all the talent. Now the Democrats have it all."

He did not refer to Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt, leading Democratic candidate in point of pledged delegates. He refused to discuss the governor when the omission was pointed out.

"Franklin and I are friends; his father and mother and my father and mother were friends. He is the governor of our State and I prefer not to discuss him in this category," said Doctor Butler.

"The great trouble," he said, "is that the Democrats have an almost incredible habit of running their train off the track just as it gets near the station.

"I should hope that, with this crisis in the history of the world, they will realize that this is no time to be playing the ordinary political game and they will give us a man of outstanding character and outstanding intelligence. The American people are entitled to the best they have, and the party leaders ought to sink minor and small considerations to that end."

Doctor Butler dealt severely with the Republican prohibition plank, which he asserted he would not accept "under any circumstances, as it offends all my principles and violates every tradition of the Republican party."

The plank, he said, was "sired by Muddlehead out of Cowardice."

"Instead of having got out of the prohibition muddle we are deeper in than ever. The only redeeming feature is that there is no possible chance of it being adopted by the people."

He took the plank up section by section.

"With the exception of the plank the Secretary of Agriculture took to the Missouri State convention, this is the worst proposal yet made by anybody," he said. "It starts out with a perfectly banal pledge for law enforcement.

"That means, if it means anything, an indorsement of 'lawless law enforcement.' The language is that of the New York Court of Appeals. It means an indorsement of what Holmes called this 'dirty business' in the notorious wire-tapping case.

"Then we are told that inasmuch as the repeal question divides people, it should not be a partisan question. How about slavery, how about the tariff, woman suffrage, the gold standard, and all the other controversial issues which historically we have fought over?

"In section 8, which is the nub, the plank denies the people the one thing they wanted most, a chance to vote on repeal.

"For the first time in history and in violation of every Republican tradition the party is put in the position of accepting Federal prohibition. We didn't do that in 1928. We are assured that there have been 'gains' under prohibition, that the eighteenth amendment is a 'step forward.' And we have indirect acceptance and indorsement of nation-wide prohibition under Federal control.

"But the plank does not stop there. It goes a step further and passes over the concurrent jurisdiction clause which the Supreme Court has largely nullified. It would send the Federal Government into States, whether prohibition or antiprohibition, to protect the citizens, presumably from themselves."

"That," said Doctor Butler with great emphasis, "is a new grant of Federal power in terms so vague and indefinite that they might lead to anything."

He illustrated his point, raising the hypothetical case of a dispute over the definition of the word "saloon."

"What is a saloon? Is it a Raines's law hotel, a pharmacy, a restaurant? Suppose a State says it isn't any of these things. Suppose the Federal Government makes a contrary definition."

"The Government then would say, 'We are going to protect you in Chicago, New Orleans, and Milwaukee against your inability to tell what a saloon is.'"

However, Doctor Butler found another source of consolation in his doubt that anyone could write a constitutional amendment embodying the plank's terms.

"I shall await the phrasing of that amendment with pleasure," he said.

"The trouble with the prohibitionists and those who shy away from repeal is that they are so wrapped up in thoughts about liquor that they can not see that the real question is one of government.

"What they set out to accomplish at Chicago was to prevent a vote by the people on repeal. They accomplished it. The only mention of the word 'repeal' in the plank is in that part where they deny the people the right to vote on it."

Doctor Butler, continuing his candid comments on the proceedings in Chicago, asserted he had been told that the plank was written by Mr. Mills, Ray Benjamin, of San Francisco, known as Mr. Hoover's "Colonel House"; E. A. Van Valkenberg, of Philadelphia, and Charles F. Scott, of Iola, Kans.

"But every word was passed by the White House," he added.

Doctor Butler's only hopeful outlook is that the State conventions in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Vermont, Maryland, and elsewhere will repudiate the national convention's prohibition utterance this fall. That would be revolutionary, he conceded, but he hopes to see it brought about. He is cutting short his annual visit abroad, on which he sails next Tuesday, in order to return within a month for the fight.

He had hoped, he disclosed, that the Republican and Democratic conventions would adopt similar repeal planks. "In that case," he said, "the repealists would have gone to Congress and asked forthwith for legislation enabling the States to call conventions at which the people might express their will on one issue only—whether to retain or delete the eighteenth amendment from the Constitution.

"We might then have got at this business next year. The Republican action slows us up materially."

He denies that any further sanction, constitutional or statutory, is needed to empower the Federal Government to deal with the liquor problem.

"The eighteenth amendment anesthetized all the Federal and State laws passed theretofore," he said, "but when the anesthesia is withdrawn from the patient he will have 31 States with their own prohibitory laws. We will have the Webb-Kenyon Act, or can have it within 30 minutes, affecting interstate shipments into dry territory; we will have all the decisions of the courts protecting dry areas from liquor invasion. We do not need another amendment to grant powers already in full force and effect."

Doctor Butler views the unwillingness of the White House and congressional leaders to tap legalized wine and beer as a source of revenue with sentiments approaching disgust.

"Here is Congress," he said, "looking all over for money and with the greatest difficulty finding $980,000,000 in excise and nuisance taxes when they could collect, by the lowest estimate, $1,500,000,000 in beverage revenues from the 17 wet States.

"It just beats my understanding; and especially in view of the fact that the national convention, unhampered, was for repeal.

"There would be a tax cheerfully paid."

Doctor Butler sees as an added worry to the Republican campaign managers a disposition on the part of the people this year "to turn out whoever is in."

"Because of that," he said, "a great many gentlemen in the Senate and the House also will be strewing the ground with their remains this fall."

Doctor Butler, who heartily disputes the notion that this country and the world will recover automatically from the depresssion, believes the reason the paramount economic issues were not ventilated at Chicago is that the convention was "nonplussed by the gravity and magnitude of the country's plight."

Secondly, he said, the delegates had "no penetrating analysis of the situation to guide them."

The educator is called abroad each summer by the demands of his duties as head of the Carnegie Peace Foundation. He goes reluctantly this year, regretting the absence of his devoted friends, former Foreign Minister Stresemann and Foreign Minister Briand.

WAR VETERANS' TERM INSURANCE

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, out of order I submit a report (No. 845) on the bill (H. R. 8173) to provide for the renewal of 5-year level premium term Government insurance policies for an additional 5-year period without medical examination, and I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill. I may say for the information of the Senate that the bill, which has passed the House and which has the unanimous approval of the Finance Committee, simply extends the time for the further extension of the 5-year level premium life insurance policies issued by the Government to the veterans, for another like period of five years, upon the payment, of course, of the premium at the attained age and without examination. It also permits a reinstatement of the 5-year term insurance held by a veteran which has lapsed if the lapse occurred within five months of the passage of this bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I believe the Senator stated that the report is unanimous?

Mr. GEORGE. It is a unanimous report.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, is this the House bill, may I ask the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; it is.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. There have been several similar bills considered by the Finance Committee, and I hope the bill will be favorably acted upon.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Georgia if this is the so-called Cooper bill?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; it was introduced by Representative COOPER of Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection, but am very much in favor of the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I understand this measure which the Senator wants to take up relates to World War veterans' insurance?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. I hope the Senator is able to get the bill favorably considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 301 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 38, sec. 512), is hereby amended by adding the following proviso at the end thereof: "Provided further, That at the expiration of the 5-year period a 5-year level premium term policy may be renewed for a second 5-year period at the premium rate for the attained age without medical examination; and in case the 5-year period of any such policy has expired prior to and within five months of the date of the enactment of this amendatory proviso and the policy has not been continued in another form of Government insurance, such policy may be renewed as of the date of its expiration on the same conditions upon payment of the back premiums within five months after such date of enactment; and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall cause notice to be mailed to the holder of any such policy of the provisions of this amendatory proviso."

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask that the report of the committee, which incorporates the House committee report, may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Finance, submitted the following report (No. 845), to accompany H. R. 8173:

The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8173) to provide for the renewal of 5-year level premium term Government insurance policies for an additional 5-year period without medical examination, having considered the same, report thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Following is a copy of the report to the House of Representatives by the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation:

[House Report No. 1144, Seventy-second Congress, first session]

AMEND THE WORLD WAR VETERANS' ACT, 1924, AS AMENDED

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee, from the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 8173):

The Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8173) to provide for the renewal of 5-year level premium term Government insurance policies for an additional 5-year period, without medical examination, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House and recommend that the bill do pass.

This bill proposes an amendment to the first paragraph of section 301 of the World War veterans' act, as amended, by adding thereto a proviso that at the expiration of the 5-year period for the 5-year convertible term contract of insurance, such policies may be renewed for a second 5-year period at the premium rate for the attained age without medical examination. Provision is also made that in case the 5-year period of any such policy has expired prior to the date of the enactment of this amendment, and the policy has not been continued in another form of Government insurance, such policy may be renewed as of the date of its expiration on the same conditions, upon the payment of back premiums within four months after such date of enactment.

The legal authority for the issuance of the 5-year level premium term policies is found in section 301 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended June 2, 1926, and May 29, 1928 (title 38, U. S. Code Annot., sec. 512).

Under the present law the 5-year term policy must be converted to a higher-premium policy at the expiration of that term. While the veteran who is in good health and can pass a medical examination may obtain a new 5-year term policy under section 310, World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, the veteran who is disabled faces forfeiture of his policy.

The average age of the veteran in July, 1932, when most of these 5-year term policies must be converted, will be 41 years.

The monthly premium upon the 5-year term policy at that age is $0.87 per $1,000, so that for the average-sized policy of $6,800 the premium is $5.91 a month, or $71 a year. The lowest issued policy to which the 5-year term policy may be converted is the ordinary life policy. For the ordinary life policy at the age of 41 the premium per $1,000 is $2.09, or $14.21 a month on the average policy of $6,800. That means that the ordinary life policy will cost $171 a year, or exactly $100 a year more than the 5-year term policy at the same age. There are approximately 97,000 veterans affected by this bill, and this is an extremely serious matter for them, because so many are unemployed and unable, perhaps, to make their premium payments. They will be unable to carry their insurance unless they can have this extension of five years and thus will be forced to drop their insurance and so deprive their families of the protection, or will be compelled to materially reduce the amount of insurance they are able to purchase at a higher premium rate, which will in turn, greatly diminish the amount of protection which they should give their families.

The information furnished by the Veterans' Administration indicates that the expiration time on these policies is as follows: January 1, 1932, 600; February 1, 1932, 630; March 1, 1932, 1,220; April 1, 1932, 3,200; May 1, 1932, 6,100; June 1, 1932, 19,700; and July 1, 1932, 55,500.

It is understood that no renewal of a 5-year term policy which has expired will be granted where permanent and total disability has intervened between date of expiration and renewal.

In compliance with clause 2a of Rule XIII there is herewith printed the preceding section of the existing law in roman type and the proposed amendatory provisions in italics:

SEC. 301. Except as provided in the second paragraph of this section, not later than July 2, 1927, all term yearly renewable insurance held by persons who were in the military service after April 6, 1917, shall be converted, without medical examination, into such form or forms of insurance as may be prescribed by regulations and as the insured may request. Regulations shall provide for the right to convert into ordinary life, 20 payment life, endowment maturing at age 62, 5-year level premium term, and into other usual forms of insurance, and for reconversion of any such policies to a higher premium rate or, upon proof of good health satisfactory to the director, to a lower premium rate, in accordance with regulations to be issued by the director, and shall prescribe the time and method of payment of the premiums thereon, but payments of premiums in advance shall not be required for periods of more than one month each, and may be deducted from the pay or deposit of the insured or be otherwise made at his election: Provided, That no reconversion shall be made to the 5-year level premium form of policy.

All yearly renewable term insurance shall cease on July 2, 1927, except when death or total permanent disability shall have occurred before July 2, 1927: Provided, however, That the director may by regulation extend the time for the continuing of yearly renewable term insurance and the conversion thereof in any case where on July 2, 1927, conversion of such yearly renewable term insurance is impracticable or impossible due to the mental condition or disappearance of the insured.

In case where an insured whose yearly renewable term insurance has matured by reason of total permanent disability is found and declared to be no longer permanently and totally disabled, and where the insured is required under regulations to renew payment of premiums on said term insurance, and where this contingency is extended beyond the period during which said yearly renewable term insurance otherwise must be converted, there shall be given such insured an additional period of two years from the date on which he is required to renew payment of premiums in which to reinstate or convert said term insurance as hereinbefore provided: Provided, That where the time for conversion has been extended under the second paragraph of this section because of the mental condition or disappearance of the insured, there shall be allowed to the insured an additional period of two years from the date on which he recovers from his mental disability or reappears in which to convert.

The insurance, except as provided herein, shall be payable in 240 equal monthly installments: Provided, That when the amount of an individual monthly payment is less than $5, such amount may in the discretion of the director be allowed to accumulate without interest and be disbursed annually. Provisions for maturity at certain ages, for continuous installments during the life of the insured or beneficiaries, or both, for refund of premiums, cash, loan, paid-up and extended values, dividends from gains and savings, and such other provisions for the protection and advantage of and for alternative benefits to the insured and the beneficiaries as may be found to be reasonable and practicable, may be provided for in the contract of insurance, or from time to time by regulations. All calculations shall be based upon the American Experience Table of Mortality and interest at 3½ per cent per annum, except that no deduction shall be made for continuous installments during the life of the insured in case his total and permanent disability continues more than 240 months. Subject to regulations, the insured shall at all times have the right to change the beneficiary or beneficiaries without the consent of such beneficiary or beneficiaries, but only within the classes herein provided.

If no beneficiary be designated by the insured as beneficiary for converted insurance granted under the provisions of Article IV of the war risk insurance act, or Title III of this act, either in his lifetime or by his last will and testament, or if the designated beneficiary does not survive the insured, then there shall be paid to the estate of the insured the present value of the remaining unpaid monthly installments; or if the designated beneficiary survives the insured and dies before receiving all of the installments of converted insurance payable and applicable, then there shall be paid to the estate of such beneficiary the present value of the remaining unpaid monthly installments: Provided, That no payments shall be made to any estate which under the laws of the residence of the insured or the beneficiary, as the case may be, would escheat, but same shall escheat to the United States and be credited to the United States Government life-insurance fund.

The bureau may make provision in the contract for converted insurance for optional settlements, to be selected by the insured, whereby such insurance may be made payable either in one sum or in installments for 36 months or more. The bureau may also include in said contract a provision authorizing the beneficiary to elect to receive payment of the insurance in installments for 36 months or more, but only if the insured has not exercised the right of election as hereinbefore provided; and even though the insured may have exercised his right of election the said contract may authorize the beneficiary to elect to receive such insurance in installments spread over a greater period of time than that selected by the insured. This section, as amended, shall be deemed to be in effect as of June 7, 1924: Provided further, That at the expiration of the 5-year period a 5-year level premium term policy may be renewed for a second 5-year period at the premium rate for the attained age without medical examination; and in case the 5-year period of any such policy has expired prior to the date of the enactment of this amendatory proviso and the policy has not been continued in another form of Government insurance, such policy may be renewed as of the date of its expiration on the same conditions upon payment of the back premiums within four months after such date of enactment; and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall cause notice to be mailed to the holder of any such policy of the provisions of this amendatory proviso.

FORMER SENATOR FRANCE AND THE REPUBLICAN CONVENTION

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I send to the desk an editorial from the Baltimore Sun entitled "The Double Outrage" and ask that it be inserted in the RECORD. Likewise, I send to the desk, to be inserted in the RECORD after the editorial, the nominating speech for Calvin Coolidge which former Senator France tried to deliver at the Hoover Republican National Convention at Chicago, June 16, 1932, had he not been ejected and arrested when he tried to deliver it. I ask that the editorial and the speech be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Baltimore Sun, June 18, 1932]

THE DOUBLE OUTRAGE

Lest we be charged with a natural partisanship in behalf of our Doctor France in the altercation between him and Chairman SNELL at the Republican National Convention, we quote from the New York Times its correspondent's version of the affair:

"Doctor France was visibly declaiming, but there was an uproar on the floor and no one could hear him. It appeared, however, that he told Mr. SNELL that he had come to withdraw his name as a candidate. Mr. SNELL told him that he was not a delegate and had no standing in the convention except as a candidate. When he explained that he wanted to place Mr. Coolidge in nomination and stampede the convention, they called in the police."

As Doctor France explained and could have proved to the chairman, he held the proxy of the national committeeman from Maryland and of a delegate from Oregon and had, therefore, a perfect right to address the convention in behalf of Oregon, which still had the floor. He was far more in order than was Mr. SNELL later in the proceedings when he recognized himself, though out of turn, in order to turn down a nomination for Vice President. Doctor France was treated with rudeness and denied his plain right to speak. It was a steam-roller performance well in the 1912 tradition, and the victim comes out better than his ejectors.

And why was Doctor France subjected to this unnecessary and unjustifiable humiliation? Because he told the chairman of a Republican convention that he intended to nominate Calvin Coolidge. Since when has it become a breach of order and a justification of rough measures to mention in a Republican convention the name of Calvin Coolidge? What ground is there for the belief that it is more absurd to nominate Calvin Coolidge than to nominate Herbert Hoover? Very well; Chairman BERTRAND H. SNELL has his brusque victory. But let the 16th day of June stand blackened forever in Republican hearts as the day upon which it could be written in a great newspaper: "When he explained that he wanted to place Mr. Coolidge in nomination, they called the police."

As for our doctor, it may assuage his indignation to know that the rough constabulary hands laid upon his resisting arms were impious hands which threw down an icon and ended an epoch.

ADDRESS OF FORMER SENATOR FRANCE NOMINATING CALVIN COOLIDGE

Mr. Chairman, delegates, ladies, and gentlemen, I am grateful to the people of the State of Oregon, to the delegates from that State, and to my friend who has offered my name in nomination. I am grateful for their support of those principles of republicanism which we all so truly love. Oregon, one of the three beautiful, dutiful, and loyal queens of the Pacific, from my heart I greet you; I thank you. I love you for your beauty and fidelity.

I ask your indulgence. Pause! Deliberate! Take time! Do not be precipitate! Shall the days of this convention be limited to the conventional number when such vast issues lie within your hands? You sit here, clothed by your sovereign States with authority, trustees of the sacred heritage, arbiters and guardians of future destiny.

I wish that I possessed the power to portray to you the panorama of the profound events which have brought us to this fateful hour. Then I might make you see that these days of your deliberation are pregnant with supreme significance for all future time. Then I would be able to give expression to the immortal truths of the Eternal God of this Republic, those truths so deeply, so sacredly enshrined in every beating heart of this convention. Then I would have power to uplift you above that cynicism and hopelessness born of the feeling that in these vital hours you must be bound by some dead and decayed traditions of conventional political action.

"Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of the world," and not after the living truth which is your holy heritage and sacred trust.

BIRTH OF PARTY

Here upon the free soil of Illinois, under the overshadowing power of the spirit with which Jefferson and Washington were imbued, the Republican Party was conceived, formed, and brought forth for the emancipation and elevation of men. Here the inspired Lincoln breathed into that party the living spirit of his own great soul, made it under him the conservator of the Republic, and created it the progressive political instrumentality through which this Republic was to be full high advanced to the forefront of the nations, the first in wealth, power, and spiritual influence, as the exemplar before the world of the transcendent excellency of the institutions of ordered liberty.

THREE CONVENTIONS

Three great political conventions must live forever in American history. The convention of 1776, which adopted the immortal Declaration of Independence. This declaration, repudiating the ancient and oppressive heresy of the divine right of kings, laid the foundations of moral government, dedicated to the proposition that all men are endowed by their Creator with the right of self-sovereignty, life, and liberty; that men must be the sovereigns over, not subjects under, government. This was the convention of the liberators.

At the Constitutional Convention of 1787 Washington, Madison, and the founding fathers reared the fabric of this moral Government, which in its form and substance conforms to the moral government of God. This was the convention of the creators.

In this city on May 16, 1860, there met the third momentous convention of our history. The convention of the conservators of the Republic.

Although the Republican convention of 1860 was that of a party in its pristine youth, yet even then was to be found blindness, cynicism. On the night of May 17, Horace Greeley telegraphed the Tribune:

"That the opposition to Governor Seward can not concentrate on any other candidate and that he will be nominated."

Giddings, of Ohio, offered an amendment to incorporate in the resolutions a phrase from the Declaration of Independence. But the immortal words of liberty were voted down. One said, "I believe in the Ten Commandments, but I do not want them in a political platform." And Giddings, with broken heart, left the convention hall. There were some pussyfoot Republicans even then.

But the hand of God was there. He removed the veil from the eyes of that convention, gave it vision, rebaptized it in "the fountain whose waters spring close to the blood of the Revolution," and reconsecrated it with a sublime courage for the truth.

George William Curtis sprang to his feet, and in a burst of inspired eloquence, renewed the plea of Giddings for the words of the declaration. They were adopted. A long period of compromise, confusion, and chaos had been ended. Lincoln had found the way by the stars of eternal truth and those delegates and the Nation had hearkened to his call to rededication and renewed obedience, and the Republic was saved from dishonor and disruption.

Thus the great crises in our national life have summoned to leadership men with faith in the moral order and power to persuade the people to a return to obedience of its laws; leaders with names recorded in the glorious annals of the Republic, and enshrined within every American heart.

INSTRUMENT OF PRECISION

Since the time when Jefferson wrote, the fathers of the Constitution wrought, and Washington delivered his Message of Farewell, government by experiment, by the method of trial and error, was no longer necessary or to be tolerated. Government by king's opinion and superman's superior wisdom must henceforth give way before government by the precision of law and the revealed reason of the moral order, incorporated in the form and substance of an institution of human government. The instruments of precision, chart, compass, sextant, and stars were discovered. Henceforth depression, peril, disaster, the wreckage of States, must not be charged to fate or accident, but to the disobedience, ignorance, blindness, stupidity, incompetence, or corruption of statesmanship.

Washington, in contemplation of universal law, in his message of farewell, had clearly pointed out the proper application of these moral principles of our Government to our domestic concerns, and formulated a foreign policy which proclaimed the necessity for an "exalted justice and benevolence" in the intercourse of nations. Well aware of the fact that this new form of moral government founded upon justice and reason, would excite the jealousy and animosity of European empires founded upon the law of coercion, Washington warned against the "insidious wiles of foreign influence" and Monroe enunciated the doctrine that the old system of empire could not be permitted to gain a foothold in the Western Hemisphere.

We may not hope to equal these great men in their ability to expound and eloquence to defend these principles, but we may each one of us emulate these men in fidelity of obedience.

To-day we face a crisis as grave as that in which Jefferson wrote, Washington wrought, and Lincoln, with matchless logic and eloquence, persuaded the people to return to the ancient faith.

CONVENTION OF RESTORERS

We are here assembled in what may be the fourth momentous convention of the Republic. As the first convention was that of the liberators, the second that of the creators, the third that of the conservators, so this convention may be remembered, if it shall be the will of God, as the convention of restoration. The convention which ended an era of repudiation. The convention of the restorers of the Republic.

VALIDITY OF PRINCIPLE

We may return to the principles of the fathers and find a solution for every problem. This is no time to discuss issues or to attempt to trace the course of disobedience of principles which has involved the present disaster. This is no time to point out the application of the principles of the Republic to the problems of the present. A great expounder of the American system of government declared: "There is no problem of human government which was not either solved or put in process of solution by the principles enunciated in the Declaration of Independence." It was in this faith that Lincoln cried out at Lewiston.

Any citizen of America who will deeply and reverently study the Declaration of Independence, the original Constitution, the Farewell Message of Washington, Interpretative Words of Lincoln; who will become imbued with their spirit and swear, for life or death, absolute fidelity to their every truth, is fitted to be President of the United States and meet in a masterful manner the responsibilities of that exalted office.

No superman, no superb intellect, no unsupported opinion can find the proper way in this world turmoil, or at any time, without recourse to the faith of the inspired fathers. Listen to the ringing golden words of Lincoln, let his living spirit speak again. He said at Lewiston:

"Now, my countrymen, if you have been taught doctrines conflicting with the great landmarks of the Declaration of Independence, if you have been inclined to believe that all men are not created equal in those inalienable rights enumerated by our chart of liberty, let me entreat you to come back. Return to the fountain whose waters spring close by the blood of the Revolution. Think nothing of me—take no thought for the political fate of any man—but come back to the truths. I charge you to drop every paltry and insignificant thought for any man's success. It is nothing. I am nothing. Judge Douglas is nothing. But do not destroy that immortal emblem of humanity—the Declaration of American Independence."

CONFESSION

How shall we meet the difficult campaign before us? Shall we point with pride to our fidelity to the principles of the Republic and declare that we did the best we could under the circumstances and that conditions might have been worse under other leadership, but that we had discovered that the principles of the declaration of the fathers of the Constitution, of the Farewell Message of Washington, of the truths reaffirmed by Lincoln were not adequate to meet the situation? The people of America, if you so declare, will ridicule and repudiate you. Or, shall we confess our failure to defend the faith, and then reaffirm, reaccept, readopt, and promise to reapply the infallible truths, and promise a restoration of the Republic, a reconciliation, a rehabilitation of a discordant, divided, and bankrupt world?

DESTROYERS OF THE REPUBLIC!

I must speak a word to the delegates from certain States. Delegates from New Jersey, delegates from Pennsylvania, delegates from West Virginia, delegates from Illinois, delegates from Nebraska, delegates from North Dakota, delegates from Oregon; will you join the destroyers or will you be defenders and restorers of the Republic? To-day we have, because of cowardice, incompetence, corruption, and disobedience of principles, two governments upon American soil. The visible, imperishable, righteous Republic of the United States and the repudiators, the grafters, crooks, kidnapers, and stick-up men who make up the powerful invisible republic of racketeers and crime. The republic of the racketeers is in revolt against the republic of righteousness.

It has always been so. Reaction breeds revolution; autocracy hatches anarchy.

The issue before this convention is lawlessness; disobedience by high officials in foreign and domestic policy of the principles of righteous American action; disobedience of spiritual Americanism by the abuse of Federal patronage; disobedience of the laws of efficiency, economy, and decency by bureaucratic graft, waste, and incompetence; disobedience of the laws of the States and of the Federal statutes.

I am a Republican, not from convenience or ambition, but from conviction and devotion. I am a member of the Republican organization. I am chairman of the Republican State central committee of Cecil County in the State of Maryland. As a Republican I entered the Republican presidential preference primaries in your States. I had faith in the laws of your States which constituted those primaries. I had faith that the organization Republicans who might be delegates to this convention would feel bound by the decision of the Republicans who voted in those primary elections. By the laws of rectitude and honor, which bind one Republican to another and all of us into one great party, by the laws which maintain the integrity of our institutions of the States you are bound to obey the directions of the Republican voters of your several States.

Are you to be blinded by dishonorable tradition, dazzled by the artificial light and glory shed from the newly created throne? Have they thrown into your eyes the dust of lust for power and office, and dimmed your vision? Are you still a bit indoctrinated with the imported, imperial heresy of the divine right of rulers, and the folly of the superman, self-advertised at public expense? Are you to be seduced from the purity of your Republicanism by promises of place and power never to be fulfilled? May God grant you vision to see that when you vote for these, your public servants, who have assumed the rôle of masters, in violation of the will of a sovereign people, in disobedience of the laws of your sovereign States, you have joined the despoilers and repudiators of the Republic. And you place upon this convention and our candidates the stain of dishonor.

So long as America lives no man can be elected President of the United States who seeks to reach that office by paths of evasion, cowardice, compromise, corruption, or dishonor.

If the 19 delegates pledged by law to my opponent should come to me and say, "We have carefully polled this convention and we find that with our 19 votes you can be nominated to the presidency. Will you accept our votes?" I should certanly answer, "No, I shall not join the despoilers of the Republic; my work is to cleanse and restore it."

But let us turn from the contemplation of those possibilities of dishonor and defeat and let me point you the way to rectitude, hope, restoration, victory.

A MIRACLE

Let us suppose a miracle: Suppose I should now be interrupted by a sudden commotion! A man rushes to the platform and cries: "A miracle! Gen. George Washington has just alighted from his coach and is about to enter the convention hall!" Or, suppose one should shout: "Abraham Lincoln, gaunt, bowed, sad of countenance, with tall silk hat and long frock coat, carrying his ancient carpet bag, is approaching the auditorium! Lincoln has come back from the dead!"

Can any doubt that, if either of these should enter this convention, he would be the nominee of the Republican Party? Would there be any danger of the Republican Party writing a platform not in conformity with the principles of the Republic? Would there then be any avoidance or evasion of vital issues? Would office holders and office seekers then control? Quick as a wave of the electric ether, the news of the miracle would be flashed to the remotest quarters of the Republic. Men bowed beneath burdens of anxiety, grief, despair, would spring up and shout with joy and gratitude: "We are saved! The Republic will be restored! God has sent Washington! We shall escape dictatorship and disaster," or "The living Lincoln will deliver us!"

But one objects: "This is impossible! These men are dead! They can not save us!" But I answer this objection with the truth. There are no dead. All men are immortal. But those are twice immortal, of heaven and earth, who live in the immortality of words of living eloquence uttered by them in defense of principles of everlasting righteousness. These are the "Sceptered sovereigns, who still rule our spirits from their urns."

They live in the imperishable principles which they expounded, explained, applied. They builded discordant colonies into an invincible nation. They met successfully the jealousy of European powers. They maintained America's neutrality and dignity amidst the storm and conflict of Napoleon's imperial wars. They rehabilitated a bankrupt colonial treasury and defeated an empire on the fields of battle. They found their course amidst the black storms of civil war and built a divided republic into an indestructible union. They were tried as we have never been. Trial upon trial came to them that the truths which they expounded might be proven for all time to be infallible for every critical emergency.

If it were flashed over the world that Washington or Lincoln would be the next President, the panic would end. Quietness and confidence would be our strength. The flame of hope would be lighted in every breast. Commodity prices would advance. Security prices would be enhanced. The wheels of industry would begin to turn. The unemployed would be called to productive work. Why would confidence come? Because the mind of the American people, the common mind of mankind, with deep, infallible intuition, knows full well that, since 1914, the policies of human government have not conformed to the laws of the moral government of God.

The American people sense that there has been, at many times and in devious directions, flagrant violations of the moral law which is the form and substance of this imperishable Republic of which Washington, under God, was the creator, and Lincoln, his disciple, the conservator.

We may not have the mortal Washington or Lincoln for our President, but we may have perpetually an administration of their spirits through men faithful and obedient to their immortal words.

I yield to no man, living or dead, in fidelity to these principles. No man can charge that I ever compromised in my obedience to them. In the records of the Congress is written the story of my struggle, sometimes a single-handed fight, against the dictatorial power of Woodrow Wilson and his coworkers; I need not name them here. They subverted the Republic. They were the builders of the bureaucracy, the perpetrators of autocracy, the repudiators of the covenant.

I began this fight for the restoration of the Republic alone. I stand here almost alone, yet supported by 1,120,000 voters in 9 States who have instructed 231 delegates to vote for me. I call you to make this convention the convention of restoration, and I shall show you the way. I ask no consideration for myself or for the political fate of any man, as Lincoln cried: "It is nothing! I am nothing! Judge Douglas is nothing!" but do not destroy the covenant.

I offered my leadership because no other would lead. I said that I would seize the flag and lead the charge of the shock troops up the slope. I realized that probably another would place the ensign upon the battlements. I knew that I might fall before I reached the objective. After these months of prodigious labor and nameless sacrifice I see the need of a leader with name illustrious, rather than an obscure one like my own, to stem the sluggish drift toward disastrous mistake and destructive defeat.

I arise to call that illustrious name, a name known to all Americans, enshrined in every American heart, and blessed by countless millions of mankind. Need I recount his history, written as it is in the annals of peaceful, abundant, and prosperous years? I need not give you the story of a life so known that by every fireside mothers tell their sons the patient steps of this strong, silent, godly American, round by round, fidelity upon fidelity, industry upon industry, until he reached the topmost of distinguished fame.

There is but one argument that can be raised against his nomination, and that is that again he might not choose to run. They may arise when I yield the floor and try to deceive you by stating he would decline.

This faithful follower of Washington would be as unwilling to leave his peaceful home as was Washington to leave the charm and peace of Mount Vernon for the field of battle and strife of public service. But the unwilling Washington responded to the country's call.

I know this man whose name I name. He will accept because not glory, not fame, not advantage call, but because his country's need cries out to him. The millions of unemployed, miserable, bankrupt call him. The greatest emergency of history and the greatest opportunity compel. He is of patriot blood. He is of the lineage of the minutemen of Massachusetts. He is of the immortals of Bunker Hill, Lexington, and Concord. The Nation calls, the millions of mankind in desperate need call upon him for deliverance.

We summon him to his duty, to his destiny, to the glory of having his name live with those three greatest immortals of the Republic, for our children's children, and all future generations will repeat with reverence—Thomas Jefferson was the liberator, George Washington the creator, Abraham Lincoln the conservator, and Calvin Coolidge the restorer of the Republic. I nominate Calvin Coolidge of Massachusetts.

OIL INVESTIGATION

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a short editorial which appeared in the Wheeling (W. Va.) Register, of June 15, 1932, entitled "One Profitable Inquiry."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

ONE PROFITABLE INQUIRY

The Nye committee in the Senate, following up the original oil scandals inquiry, has certainly proved to be a profitable institution from the taxpayers' standpoint. As a result of that committee's work, the United States Treasury has collected over $3,000,000 from H. M. Blackmer for evaded income tax, another $60,000 for contempt of court, and more than $600,000 from him and other principals of the Continental Trading Corporation for corporate income taxes. Another million and more has been collected from unnamed individuals whose incomes were discovered during the major investigation. Additional income taxes amounting to one and a quarter million are to be collected from two more men and the estate of a third man involved in the oil matter.

The full beauty of this $7,000,000 gain to the Treasury is appreciated when one learns that the investigation has cost only $25,000.

BONUS LEGISLATION

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD six telegrams and a letter with reference to the veterans' bonus legislation which was recently rejected in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegrams and letter are as follows:

WHEELING, W. VA., June 11, 1932.

Senator M. M. NEELY:

Our 600 employees strongly oppose passage of bonus bill and are reluctant to believe rumor current in Wheeling that your support is pledged to it. We believe passage means disastrous economic consequences and urge you listen to the respectable responsible majority rather than the disreputable, irresponsible, minority.

WHEELING, W. VA., June 15, 1932.

Hon. Senator M. M. NEELEY,

Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: We note from the press that you will cast your vote for the bonus bill when it comes before the Senate. We would like to point out our unalterable opposition to this pending measure.

In our opinion this measure is of more importance to the national welfare than any other single measure on which the lawmaking bodies are called upon to legislate. We have always been a Democrat, but if, for instance, the Republican Party should have an antibonus plank in its platform and the Democratic Party would have a probonus plank in its platform, we would most certainly vote Republican. That is how strongly we feel on this proposition. It is hard for us to see how a legislator can consistently be an advocate of a balanced Budget on the one end and of a bonus payment to-day when there are no means available for the collection of the moneys involved in a bonus payment. Or if they are available, the incidental taxes would fall with such crushing weight on property owners and business houses, etc., that a great many of them could not survive much longer. The crippled man fares better under a lightened load.

We don't wish to impute to you any snap judgment on this question, but we do believe this, that 95 per cent or more of the people in this State that have it within their power to help in the return of the prosperity we are all seeking feel the same as we do on the bonus question.

The best way to have a genuine prosperity is not via the spending of money donated. The prosperity that counts in a substantial way is the prosperity that grows from gradual and continuing profits and earned wages. I am sure the last several years have seen a universal adjusted compensation amongst all the business houses and coworkers throughout our State. To get back on our feet we must save, effect economies wherever possible, including adjusted compensation for labor, to bring it down to the low general price level.

These are our sentiments.

Yours very truly,

MARK H. KENNEDY.

INVESTIGATIONS BY TARIFF COMMISSION

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk six Senate resolutions favorably reported from the Committee on Finance, directing the Tariff Commission to make certain investigations. I ask unanimous consent for their immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what is the report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado stated the report to be in the form of resolutions from the Finance Committee making certain requests upon the Tariff Commission for information under the tariff act of 1930. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Let the resolutions be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first of the resolutions will be reported for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 242), as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is directed, under the authority conferred by section 336 of the tariff act of 1930, and for the purposes of that section, to investigate the differences in the costs of production of the following domestic article and of any like or similar foreign articles: Plate glass, dutiable under and as provided for in paragraph 222 (a) of such act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Colorado to say there were six of the resolutions.

Mr. COSTIGAN. There are—the one just read and five others.

Mr. SMOOT. The committee not only reported this one, but reported five others, and they were all reported favorably.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report the next resolution submitted by the Senator from Colorado.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 243), as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is directed, under the authority conferred by section 336 of the tariff act of 1930, and for the purposes of that section, to investigate the differences in the costs of production of the following domestic articles and of any like or similar foreign articles: Linseed or flaxseed oil, and combinations and mixtures in chief value of such oil, dutiable under the provisions of paragraph 53 of such act.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Colorado whether these applications indicate a desire for increases in the rates imposed, or reductions?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Answering the learned Senator from Arkansas, it is my understanding that in the case of each of the articles specified, except Senate Resolution 246, which is not a rate-changing investigation, the imports have been decreasing and the inference is, though the question is open, that the duties may need to be readjusted downward.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The imports have increased.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Imports are reported to have been decreasing.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well. Then I have no objection to the consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest that the Secretary merely read the article to be investigated. We all understand the formalities.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was just about to suggest that that procedure be adopted.

The Chair feels justified in submitting the remaining resolutions en bloc.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator with respect to the resolutions. My recollection is that in the tariff hearings when we had the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill under consideration the evidence showed that the duties imposed under the preceding law were almost an embargo with respect to a number of these commodities. I ask the Senator whether since the passage of that act there has been a reduction in the imports of the commodities referred to in these several resolutions?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I regret to say that I am unable to advise the Senator from Utah as to the exact changes since these items were considered by the Senate. However, it is my understanding that as to the items specified in each suggested rate-changing investigation under section 336 imports have been declining. If so, the facts may indicate the necessity for a readjustment in accordance with the standard laid down in section 336.

Mr. KING. Notwithstanding the depression in a number of countries in Europe and the lower wages by reason of the depression, the Senator's understanding is that the imports have been less than they formerly were?

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is my understanding.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, perhaps we had better put it in this way: Notwithstanding the depression here and in the world, there has been a decrease in the imports of all commodities compared with those of 1930. I think these articles are on exactly the same footing. There is no harm, I will say to the Senator, in having the Tariff Commission make the investigation, but one item can not be selected, and it be said as to it alone that importations have decreased, because that is true both of commodities on the free list and of those on which duties are imposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolutions will be considered and be regarded as having been agreed to en bloc.

The resolutions agreed to are as follows:

Senate Resolution 241

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is directed, under the authority conferred by section 336 of the tariff act of 1930, and for the purposes of that section, to investigate the differences in the costs of production of the following domestic articles and of any like or similar foreign articles: Gloves, made wholly or in chief value of leather, dutiable under paragraph 1532 (a) of such act.

Senate Resolution 244

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is directed, under the authority conferred by section 336 of the tariff act of 1930, and for the purposes of that section, to investigate the differences in the costs of production of the following domestic articles and of any like or similar foreign articles: Cast-iron pipe of every description, and cast-iron fittings for cast-iron pipe, dutiable under the provisions of paragraph 327 of such act.

Senate Resolution 245

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is directed, under the authority conferred by section 336 of the tariff act of 1930, and for the purposes of that section, to investigate the differences in the costs of production of the following domestic articles and of any like or similar foreign articles: Cocoa, chocolate, and cocoa butter dutiable under subdivisions (a), (b), and (c) of paragraph 777 of such act.

Senate Resolution 246

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is hereby directed, under section 332 (g) of the tariff act of 1930, to investigate, and to reply thereon to the Senate as soon as practicable, with respect to the articles classified in paragraphs 354 to 358, inclusive, of such act (1) whether the facts as to imports, production, exports, wholesale prices, and such costs or other statistically measurable factors as are available, indicate the necessity of a readjustment of the duties on any of these articles; and (2) whether any of the duties specified in such paragraphs have resulted in the practical exclusion of imports of any such article.

WAGES OF LABORERS AND MECHANICS ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. METCALF. I send to the desk a conference report which has passed the House, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The report was read and considered, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3847) to amend the act approved March 3, 1931, relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on public buildings having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to S. 3847, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

Page 2, line 6, strike out the comma after the word "States" and insert in lieu thereof the word "or."

Page 3, lines 21, 22, strike out "or said commissioners, respectively."

Page 4, line 1, strike out ", if the contract be with the United States, or to the credit of the District of Columbia if the contract be with the District of Columbia."

And the House agree to the same.

JESSE H. METCALF,
WALLACE H. WHITE, JR.,
ROYAL S. COPELAND,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WILLIAM P. CONNERY, JR.,
R. A. GREEN,
ROBERT RAMSPECK,
RICHARD J. WELCH,
W. F. KOPP,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does the conference report represent a complete agreement?

Mr. METCALF. It does.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The adoption of the report will pass the bill?

Mr. METCALF. It will.

The report was agreed to.

PRINTING OF FEDERAL LAWS RELATING TO VETERANS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 29) authorizing the printing and distribution of copies of the Federal laws relating to the veterans of various wars.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. SHIPSTEAD, Mr. MOSES, and Mr. FLETCHER conferees on the part of the Senate.

NOMINATION OF ERNEST A. BURGUIERES

Mr. WHEELER obtained the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I desire to leave the city and I wish to ask unanimous consent that the appointment of Mr. Burguieres may go over and may not be considered in executive session to-day. I desire to ask that unanimous consent in order that I may leave the city.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As in executive session and out of order——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think the Senator from Louisiana should suggest the absence of a quorum before making the request.

Mr. LONG. I thought all the Senators who were interested were present.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not see the senior Senator from Louisiana in the Chamber. Has he any objection to the request of his colleague?

Mr. LONG. I have discussed the matter and I was advised by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that he thought my request would be all right.

Mr. McNARY. May we have the request stated?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana, out of order and as in executive session, asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the confirmation of Mr. Burguieres as commissioner of immigration at the port of New Orleans shall not be considered at the executive session to be held this day. Is there objection?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is recognized.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I want——

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have no right to appeal to my friend the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], but I think, in view of all the circumstances under which the nomination was reported, and the fact that the junior Senator from Louisiana is compelled to leave the city to-day, the request which he has made should be granted. Of course, it is a matter for the senior Senator from Louisiana himself to decide.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I made a request of the Senator from Utah the other day which he did not grant me.

Mr. KING. I did not grant the request because I thought—and I esteem my friend very highly—the request ought not to have been granted.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I have not changed my mind at all.

Mr. KING. And I think now the request which the Senator's colleague makes should be granted, but, of course, the Senator is in a position to refuse.

LOANS TO STATES—SYSTEM OF HIGHWAYS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12445) to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by authorizing and expediting a public-works program and providing a method of financing such program.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to page 100 of the bill, and I desire to move to strike out on line——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment now pending.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McNARY. Is not the pending amendment that offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is that offered by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. WHEELER. I understand that, but I think there will be no objection to my amendment. I hope I may offer the amendment, because I am anxious to get away in a very few moments. So I ask unanimous consent that I may offer this amendment now, and I wish to invite the attention of the author of the bill [Mr. WAGNER] to it. The amendment is on page 100, in line 18, to strike out the words "or quasi-public," and likewise at the end of line 18, page 100, to strike out the words "or quasi-public."

I will say to the Senate that the term "quasi-public" as defined by the courts of the land includes public utilities of all kinds and character; and if that provision were left in the bill, it would give the Reconstruction Finance Corporation authority, under the language of the bill, to buy even stocks and bonds of public utilities. I understand from the Senator from New York that that was not the intention of the authors of the bill. I have talked to other members of the committee who have told me that that was not their understanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana can be considered only by unanimous consent, which will necessitate first setting aside temporarily the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I will dispose of the necessity for that proceeding. Pending the settlement or adoption of some policy by the Senate on the subject of the character of loans to be made under this bill, I will withdraw temporarily my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn. The Senator from Montana offers the amendment which he has stated.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I was about to state that the committee and the authors of this bill did not intend the words "quasi-public corporations" to include public utilities, and, if there is any apprehension that it may be interpreted to include public utilities, I am sure that the other members of the committee who drafted this bill, as well as myself, have no objection to the proposed amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. I will say to the Senator that Ruling Case Law, Volume 30, lays down the general rule as follows:

> Quasi-public corporations: There is a large class of private corporations which on account of special franchises conferred on them owe a duty to the public which they may be compelled to perform. This class of corporations is known in common parlance as public-service corporations, and in legal phraseology as quasi-public corporations, or corporations affected with a public interest.

Then there are cited numerous cases from courts in various sections of the country. I am quite certain that that interpretation would be put upon it by the courts, although that was not the intention of the committee. For that reason I ask that the words to which I have referred may be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, in the preparation of this bill the committee took the substance of the emergency highway legislation heretofore considered by the Senate and included it in the measure. The text is included in the bill as reported to the Senate. When the emergency highway bill was before the Senate, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] offered two amendments which were merely to clarify the text. He has had them printed, and in his behalf I offer them now and ask for their consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The clerk will state the amendments.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 105, at the end of line 7, it is proposed to insert the following:

> In the Federal highway act as amended and supplemented.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. KING. I ask that the amendment again be stated.

The amendment was again stated.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I will suggest that for the sake of clarity the clerk also read the second amendment, because the two are related.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The second amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The second amendment is, on page 105, line 9, to strike out all after the word "municipalities," and also all of lines 10 and 11 and line 12 down to and including the word "supplemented," and insert the word "and."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the effect of the two amendments will be that the proviso will then read:

And provided further, That in the expenditure of such amounts the limitations in the Federal highway act as amended and supplemented upon highway construction, reconstruction, and bridges within municipalities, and upon payments per mile which may be made from Federal funds shall not apply.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I presume the amendment just adopted was in order, but it does not follow that we have agreed to everything up to that point in the bill. I desire to offer an amendment to come in on page 102, at the end of line 25. I send the amendment to the desk and ask that it may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 102, line 25, it is proposed to strike out the period after the word "act," to insert a semicolon, and add the following:

Provided, That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized to purchase equipment trust certificates, the terms of maturity of which do not exceed the provisions stipulated in section 1 of this act, of American railroads secured by new equipment and the building of which new equipment will provide immediate employment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it is perfectly well known that the equipment business—that is, providing locomotives and other equipment for railroads—has fallen off to where the production now is about 4 per cent of normal. That has been testified to by witnesses before the committee handling this bill.

Railroad-equipment-trust certificates have heretofore been regarded in the market as good negotiable paper; they bear a low rate of interest, and have been acceptable to banks, and have been regarded as high-class security. There never have been any losses on the part of investors in such trust certificates. Now, however, the banks are not taking such equipment-trust certificates; investors are not taking them; the money does not seem to be available at all, although they are perfectly good security.

The amendment is a mere authorization and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will determine whether they are adequate security or not; whether they will accept these equipment-trust certificates issued for the purpose of constructing locomotives and other equipment for railroads, which, of course, means the supplying of demands which will give employment.

It was testified before the committee that probably 100,000 or 150,000 men would be set to work and employed if they could go on with the construction of railroad equipment, such as locomotives; and I think it is well to put in this bill some such provision as that, because one of the main purposes of the bill is to provide such measures that the industries may give employment to people.

This business has fallen off because they can not negotiate these certificates in the open market. Bankers are not taking them; investors are not taking them; but they are perfectly good security, and this amendment would open up this business of constructing locomotives as they may be needed. It is estimated that the life of a locomotive is some 20 years, I believe. We must have the locomotives if we are to continue to operate the railroads; and this is a means of enabling the railroads to construct these locomotives and put people to work.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret to differ from my friend from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], but I can not support his amendment.

Under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, important loans have been made to the railroads. When the act creating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was brought before us for consideration, it was suggested, it was claimed that one of its chief purposes was to aid the railroads. It was stated that their credit was somewhat restricted, if not impaired, and that the banks, because of their large indebtedness and small earnings were reluctant to extend needed credits. Accordingly, liberal provisions were placed in the act under which loans might be obtained from the corporation.

Congress dealt generously with the railroads and many persons think that the Reconstruction Corporation has been too generous in extending credits to some of the railroads. I am unwilling to extend further credits to railroads or their subsidiaries or affiliates, either by amending the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act or by the means of the pending measure. Loans to the railroads must have the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission before the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will affirmatively act. No application for loans has been denied by the Reconstruction Corporation that had the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission. In view of the generous provisions already made, and the tens of millions of dollars already loaned to the railroads, there is no reason for Congress to provide additional credits to auxiliaries or ancillaries of the railroad corporations.

If loans are to be made to private corporations engaged in the construction of cars or locomotives, I see no reason why similar privileges should not be provided for other corporations. It is certain that if the Government provides loans for corporations engaged in building cars and locomotives and other railway equipment, demands will be made by industrial and business corporations for loans.

The Senator from Alabama a few moments ago offered an amendment by which private corporations—and he instanced a placer-mining company that was to operate in California—might obtain loans. He stated that the corporation to which he referred, if it functioned as anticipated, would furnish employment to several thousand men.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. What are equipment-trust certificates?

Mr. KING. As I understand, there are corporations manufacturing equipment for railroads which issue trust certificates or obligations in various forms.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Why could not a bill for machinery be paid by issuing equipment-trust certificates?

Mr. KING. I see no reason why.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. If we get into this field of loaning on equipment-trust certificates, where are we going to end?

Mr. KING. Why not loan to mining companies? I know a number of mining and smelting companies whose equipment and machinery have deteriorated by reason of the fact that they have been shut down for some time, and they now desire to resume operations, and in order to do so on a proper plane improvements and new machinery must be had. They are as much entitled to governmental credits as corporations that supply locomotives and railroad equipment.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I do not think we want the Government to go into the banking business. As I understand, the purpose of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act was to help banks to liquidate their frozen assets, not to put the Government into the banking business.

Mr. KING. Exactly.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. These movements are in the direction of making the Federal Reconstruction Finance Corporation a national, Federal bank.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I hope to be able to vote for a fair and just measure; but I may state now, as I stated to the Senator from New York, that if this bill is loaded down with provisions to loan money to private corporations and with other unsound and improper features I shall vote against it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. For the information of the Senator from Massachusetts, I desire to call his attention to the fact that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is in fact and in law a bank and that the depositors are not voluntary depositors. The depositors are the taxpayers of the United States. The Government of the United States, through law, is taking the deposits for this bank out of the pockets of the taxpayers and loaning them to private industry, to corporations, to bail out paper that banks will not take.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It at least has some limitations under the present law, and these proposals are to remove the limitations.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Well, the question of extending or limiting its functions and field of loaning is another matter.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Fundamentally the Senator is right, of course.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. But I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that private banking credit is paralyzed and that the only credit that is left is the Federal Government's credit, and to use this credit we have established this Federal Government bank, making the taxpayers the depositors. I believe we had better go a little carefully in that direction. I think we are on very dangerous ground in this bill or in any other bill that will provide for the extension of the loaning field of this Government bank.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I think any such bill had better be very carefully examined before we extend it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator is absolutely right.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do not mean to cast any reflection upon those who manage it; but there is a policy involved here that is so revolutionary in its character, and is in a direction that is so dangerous, that I look upon it as being far more dangerous than if the Government itself were to use its own credit and own funds wherever possible under the specific direction of the Congress. I can not see, however, how anyone can defend loaning the taxpayers' money to private individuals and to private industry.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator said that the American people were the depositors. As a matter of fact, they are the indorsers as well as the depositors.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes; that is right.

Mr. KING. They are not only the depositors but indorsers. We wring the money from the pockets of the taxpayers and put it into the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and proposals are submitted that it be loaned to private corporations and for purely private enterprises. There may be instances—and this is one—that are appealing and seem to call for aid from the Government; but if the precedent is established, the results will be serious. These investment securities may possess value; but if we open the door, we will have a veritable Pandora's-box problem before us. If we open it for sound and solvent corporations, corporations that may serve the public indirectly, we will have a multitude of corporations that, like vultures, will be upon Congress and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation demanding legislation and loans.

Mr. President, it seems to me so obvious that this amendment should be rejected that I shall pretermit any further discussion.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Florida if, in his opinion, this amendment might be construed as giving the Reconstruction Finance Corporation authority to loan money to railroads to enable them to take up their underlying bonds, if they could purchase them at a bargain.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I should not think it would have anything to do with the underlying bonds.

Mr. WALCOTT. That point was discussed in this connection, and I was wondering what the Senator thought about it.

Mr. FLETCHER. This amendment is simply intended to authorize them to purchase these equipment trust certificates, which have been heretofore offered in the open market.

Mr. WALCOTT. But new issues rather than old? Is that true?

Mr. FLETCHER. Probably so. If they want to issue equipment trust certificates for building locomotives, for instance, they would have to have a new issue. I do not suppose it has anything to do with the old issues.

Mr. WALCOTT. That is the point I am trying to make. It does not seem to me clear that this amendment specifies that it must be for new construction. I think this amendment would permit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation either to purchase existing or old certificates of indebtedness, or perhaps to loan money to the railroads to take up their own certificates.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; that was not my purpose. My idea was to open the way for giving employment to people and supplying this much-needed facility.

For instance, before our committee I asked Mr. Houston:

> How many people do you think would be employed if that plan could be carried out?

That is, if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had authority to take up these certificates.

Mr. Houston said:

> We have made some general estimates along that line. I would say that $150,000,000 a year spent in railroad equipment would employ directly in excess of 100,000 men, which, of course, would result in a larger indirect employment through the disbursement of the earnings of such men.

Then he was asked by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND]:

> What would you estimate the indirect employment would run?
> Mr. HOUSTON. I would say that that would make a substantial effect upon the income of 500,000 men.

Then the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] asked:

> You stated a while ago that the present locomotive production was 2 per cent of normal—

I think generally railroad equipment is estimated at about 4 per cent, but as to locomotives it is estimated at 2 per cent of normal now.

> How much would this production of 2,500 locomotives bring it up?
> Mr. HOUSTON. I would say that it would bring it up to 75 or 80 per cent of what the country would normally need.

That is to say, if they had this facility now, and could arrange to construct 2,500 locomotives, it would bring the production end up to 75 or 80 per cent of what the country needs. That would give employment to some hundred thousand people, and that is the reason for offering the amendment. I have no idea of having them go back to the old certificates, or anything of that sort. I refer just to new construction, so as to give employment to the people, and at the same time supply a need.

These locomotives can not be constructed at present, although the construction is down to 2 per cent of normal. They can not build it up unless there is some way of disposing of these trust certificates. That is the whole object—to deal with new construction.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does the Senator contend that this new construction is needed now?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes. They say they need 2,500 new locomotives in order to bring up the production to about 75 or 80 per cent of normal needs. That is what they claim.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Who is it that claims that?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the people generally concerned—the manufacturers, the American Locomotive Works, the Baldwin people, Mr. Houston.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The railroads?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have not asked the railroads about it; I do not know; but I think that is the situation.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I should think the railroads would be consulted.

Mr. FLETCHER. Necessarily it stands to reason that these locomotives can not last forever. I think the estimated life of a locomotive is about 20 years.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. My information is that the sidetracks of the country are full of locomotives which are not being used. I may have been misinformed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then they must be obsolete, or out of repair, and unfit for use on that account.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, Mr. George H. Houston, president of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, appeared before the Committee on Banking and Currency on the 11th of June and was followed by others proposing this scheme. It was developed during the hearing, and by statistics filed with the committee, that there are over 750,000 cars idle now, and over 10,000 locomotives idle now.

The vice president of the Pennsylvania Railroad in a public statement made the assertion that not only did the railroads have now equipment greatly in excess of what they could use but for a long time after return to normal conditions they would not require any new equipment. Yet this proposed amendment is for the purchasing of equipment notes secured by new equipment and, of course, does not cover the bonds referred to by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. President, a reading of the hearings, the report of which has just been laid on Senators' desks, dated June 2, 7, 11, and 13, 1932, will disclose the colloquy which took place between the proponents of this measure and members of the committee; and I am quite sure, without taking up the time of the Senate to read the testimony, that Senators studying that testimony could not help reaching the conclusion that this amendment should not be agreed to. In view of all the other things which are provided in section 1 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, I submit that there is no justification for this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move to strike out, on page 101, beginning at line 18, all the rest of the page, and on page 102 the paragraph beginning with line 1 and ending with line 7.

This is a provision which authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation—

> To advance to the Secretary of Agriculture, in addition to the amounts allocated and made available to him by section 2 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, not to exceed $40,000,000, of the amounts made available under section 2 of this act, for the purpose of financing sales of agricultural products in the markets of foreign countries in which such sales can not be financed in the normal course of commerce, but no such sales shall be financed by the Secretary of Agriculture if, in his judgment, such sales will affect adversely the world markets for such products—

And so forth.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit, I should like to ask the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, whether a bill in substance like this part of the bill under consideration did not have the approval of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a bill was introduced providing for the appropriation of $100,000,000 to supply avenues of credit so that we might export our surpluses to foreign nations which do not have the credit to enable them to purchase surplus agricultural products from us, but we never got to the stage of consideration of that measure, and no action has been taken by the Agricultural Committee.

I think a bill was introduced in the House providing for the appropriation of a fixed sum, as specified in this measure, and that that measure has passed the House. It is thought that some of the nations, China and Germany particularly, and some of the other central European nations which have not the credit with which to purchase surplus agricultural products from us, through a provision of this kind may be enabled to come into the market and become purchasers; and if that were accomplished, of course, automatically the price level of agricultural products would ascend immediately. That is the theory on which the bill heretofore introduced and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was presented, and I assume the same argument applies in support of the provision of this bill now under discussion.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was evidently in error. It was my impression that there was a bill making just exactly this appropriation, $40,000,000. Apparently that bill originated in the House and was passed there. It must, then, be before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry now.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator must have in mind that when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act was passed it contained provision for the appropriation of $100,000,000, with the possibility of the sale of debentures up to $300,000,000, to be used for this purpose. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] offered an amendment, which was agreed to, making available the maximum amount of $300,000,000, and that bill is in conference now. The House did pass a bill, I may say to the able Senator from Montana, carrying $40,000,000; but I do not recall that the Senate ever passed a similar measure, although such a measure was introduced and referred to the committee.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I was wondering whether the Senator from Utah would be more favorable to this section if, on page 102, line 6, the words "or without" were eliminated. I recall in several conferences in respect to the bill the thought was expressed that this was a pretty good provision in the bill, because we would be secured either by warehouse receipts or bills of lading for the shipments of these agricultural products. Frankly, I would not object, but rather would favor this provision, if the language on page 102, line 6, "or without," were taken out of the bill. Then we would secure bills of lading or warehouse receipts for what would ordinarily be good marketable products.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. KING. Before answering the Senator from Michigan I am glad to yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is my impression that the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] himself intends to offer an amendment striking out the language "or without." In any event, it was discussed by members of the special committee which framed the original bill, and I think that course was agreed upon.

Mr. McNARY. In the phrase "with or without security" the words "or without" should be stricken out.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I add to what has been said by the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Oregon this, that it was represented that this authorization for the appropriation of $40,000,000 for financing the sales of agricultural products would enable the Secretary of Agriculture to reach markets which are not accessible to the producers of or the dealers in agricultural products, new markets, in large measure.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think it is preferable, and needs no explanation or assertion upon my part that many of the exporters of our staple agricultural commodities are unable to supply the wants of foreign nations because of the want of credit, and a provision of this kind is inserted so that the Department of Agriculture, operating through the Secretary, may provide credit to foreign countries, under adequate security, for a period of time, so that it will be possible for those countries to take up surplus holdings of the Federal Farm Board which we are all so anxious to see absorbed. That is the only argument I can see favorable to this provision. I think that if it is included in the bill and wisely administered, it will have an elevating effect upon the price level in the domestic market and will permit the Farm Board to find outlets for sales of products which are denied now.

Mr. KING. One objection which I have to this provision grows out of the persistent efforts of the Farm Board, after it has squandered $250,000,000 or $300,000,000, perhaps more, to obtain another appropriation of $100,000,000 to enable them, as they claim, to dispose of their surplus wheat.

They have already sold to China more than 15,000,000 bushels of wheat on bonds of a government which is not meeting its obligations, which is beset with enemies—I will not say foreign, but certainly domestic—and it is obvious that that security is almost valueless if it were now to be offered to the public.

The same Farm Board exchanged $25,000,000 worth of wheat for a vast amount of coffee down in Brazil. I have been unable yet to ascertain whether the board came out even or not. There was very serious complaint that instead of American ships carrying our wheat and bringing back the coffee, foreign ships were employed for that purpose.

The Farm Board by its unwise, impolitic, unsound policies has now a large amount of wheat on hand, considerably more than 100,000,000 bushels, and it has a great many bales of cotton on hand. I have data here in my desk showing the mismanagement, the unsound policies of the Farm Board, and the enormous losses which have been sustained and which, of course, have to come out of the taxpayers of the United States. The Farm Board having this wheat on hand, and its costing millions of dollars almost monthly for storage, for insurance, and other incidental expenses—and there was some testimony that it was deteriorating in value—is very anxious to find some avenues by which it may release that wheat, dispose of it, and thus minimize the losses which it has sustained, and which, of course, the American people have sustained.

I am unwilling to vote one cent to the Farm Board to aid it in its further exploitation of the American people. I am unwilling to give it the $100,000,000 which it asks, or to make it a conduit through which this $40,000,000 will be passed out for the purpose of disposing of wheat which it now has in its possession.

I am unwilling to vote to give to the Secretary of Agriculture the authority to dispose of this $40,000,000. His administration has not been satisfactory, it seems to me. The amount which has been expended by the Agricultural Department has reached monumental heights. I think the agricultural bill as originally passed carried nearly $200,000,000, not all of which, of course——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator has gone far enough in that. It does not carry $250,000,000, it carries $173,000,000.

Mr. KING. Nearly $200,000,000.

Mr. McNARY. That is a great difference between that and $250,000,000.

Mr. KING. I do not recall the figures, but I was going to say that something like sixty or seventy million was for roads, so that the appropriation for the Department of Agriculture was in the neighborhood of a hundred million. If I am wrong, I would be glad to be corrected.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator is very, very wrong.

Mr. KING. If it is not a hundred million, I will be glad to have the Senator correct me.

Mr. McNARY. It is about $53,000,000 for departmental activities. The balance is for roads, and cooperation with the States, in the national forests, for the protection of our national forests, enforcement of the food and drugs act, cooperation with the States in the land-grant colleges. Only $53,000,000 of the $173,000,000 goes for agricultural activities, in every State in the Union, and that, by the way, is the smallest sum appropriated for any of the departments, with the largest governmental institution in the country. If the Senator desires to dispute that proposition, or argue the virtues and activities of the department, I shall be glad to enter into a discussion with him now.

Mr. KING. I did not understand the last remark of the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. I say that if the Senator desires to discuss the work the Department of Agriculture is doing, in that spirit of criticism which he often exhibits toward it, I will be very glad to debate it with him now.

Mr. KING. The Senator may take such course as he wishes. If he desires to discuss the Agricultural Department, I have not the slightest objection. I do assert that the Agricultural Department has increased its appropriations very greatly during the past 10 or 15 years, as have the other departments. The Department of Agriculture has had $133,000,000, as I am advised, for activities not purely within the purview of its work, for seeds and relief.

Mr. McNARY. And fertilizer.

Mr. KING. I was going to say the Department of Agriculture, as I am advised by a representative of the department, has had $133,000,000, including appropriations for the corn borer, the purchase of seeds, and so on. I am making no complaint. I am merely stating that the Department of Agriculture has received, not because it sought it but because Congress conferred upon it, $133,000,000 to aid the farmers in the purchase of seed, and so forth.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator is confused in that matter. The item about which he speaks now is not an integral part of the Agricultural Department appropriation bill.

Mr. KING. I did not say that it is.

Mr. McNARY. It is a wholly different matter, carried on quite locally and seasonally, because of conditions brought about by nature, in order to relieve the farmers from their distressed condition.

Mr. KING. I said it was not strictly within its purview, but Congress had devolved upon it this duty and this responsibility. I am challenging attention to show the generosity of Congress in dealing with the agricultural situation throughout the United States. It was not by way of any criticism whatever of the Agricultural Department.

We have sold to China, as I said, some $15,000,000 worth of wheat without getting any compensation except the bonds of China. Whether there is a market in Europe for our surplus products I am not able to say. Undoubtedly there are many people throughout the world who would buy upon credit. The Bolshevik Government would buy hundreds of millions of dollars of American products and commodities if we would extend credit, the same as some of the European nations have extended credit; but I am unwilling now to tax the American people to extend credit to European or oriental nations to enable the Farm Board to get rid of some of the wheat which it has. There is owing the United States to-day billions of dollars of credits which have been extended to foreign nations and municipalities and corporations. The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] quite recently had a resolution before the Committee on Finance and that committee made an investigation and it was ascertained that billions of dollars had been loaned to South American and European countries and it is quite certain that the American people will lose hundreds of millions and billions of dollars as a result.

We read in the papers that there is a revolution in Chile. We have more than $300,000,000 loaned in Chile. Competent authorities, like Dr. Max Winkler and others, have said that the securities which we have of Chile are not worth more than $15,000,000 or $16,000,000, notwithstanding the amount which we loaned to that Government is more than $300,000,000. I think before we begin to loan more money to foreign nations and extend credit to them by taxing the people of the United States, we had better relieve our people more of the burden of taxation.

I insist therefore upon striking out the entire paragraph to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, is the motion for the elimination of the entire paragraph?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has worked out perhaps a better amendment, if the Senator from Utah will permit him to offer it.

Mr. KING. Very well.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I am indebted to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] for this suggestion. I move to amend, on page 102, line 5, by striking out the word "may" and substituting the word "must"; in line 6, to strike out "with or without security, as the Secretary of Agriculture deems advisable"; after the word "made," in line 6, insert the words "upon adequate security," so that the sentence would read:

Any loan or advance made by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purposes of this subdivision must be made upon adequate security.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, does that meet the criticism of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KING. First let me inquire who is to determine whether the security is adequate?

Mr. WAGNER. The Secretary of Agriculture. Somebody must pass upon that question.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The loans are to be made by the Secretary of Agriculture, and it must be determined by him as a matter of course.

Mr. KING. From where are the agricultural products to come? In other words, are they to consist of commodities now in the possession of the Farm Board or new commodities that may be produced this year or during the coming year?

Mr. McNARY. The Federal Farm Board has within its possession hold-over crops of 1931. This section does not limit it to those crops, but to any agricultural commodities that may be grown at any time during the existence of the measure.

Mr. KING. The amendment which is offered, of course, improves materially the text of the bill and removes some of the objections which I had.

Mr. COUZENS. With that amendment would the Senator insist upon his motion to eliminate the entire paragraph?

Mr. KING. I would prefer to strike out the entire section, but I shall not insist upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan withdraw his amendment?

Mr. COUZENS. I accept the amendment of the Senator from Utah instead of mine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendments which the Senator from New York has stated.

The amendments were agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah withdraw his motion to strike out the paragraph?

Mr. KING. I withdraw it temporarily.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 103, after line 13, insert the following new section:

SEC. — (a). The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make advances to any State on the security of the bonds of such State and on such terms and conditions as the corporation deems advisable for educational or hospitalization purposes within such State.

(b) For the purpose of providing funds for carrying out the provisions of this section the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to issue its notes, bonds, debentures, or other such obligations, in an aggregate of not to exceed $300,000,000. Such notes, bonds, debentures, or other such obligations, shall, so far as practicable, be issued in the same manner and be subject to the same terms and conditions as the notes, bonds, debentures, or other such obligations, issued pursuant to section 9 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, it will be recalled that when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill was being considered in the Senate the Senate first adopted a provision that authorized the organization to take from States their bonds. Then it was broadened by inserting cities, and I think it finally got down to counties and drainage districts, and then the whole provision was stricken out. There are certain States in which, because of the present precarious market for bonds, it is impossible to sell bonds to finance State institutions. Consequently teachers are going without pay, hospitals are closing down, sanitariums are being forced to close their doors, and many people are being thrown out of employment. There can be no question as to the security behind these loans. It seems to me in the peculiar circumstances, as an emergency proposition only—because under normal conditions I certainly would not favor the proposal—we ought to authorize, in the discretion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the taking over of the bonds of those States where the funds are to be used for hospitalization or educational purposes.

I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will accept the amendment, so something along this line can be worked out.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. COUZENS. Does not this in part duplicate the purposes of the $300,000,000 bill which we recently passed and which has gone to the House?

Mr. HARRISON. There is a great deal of doubt as to whether the $300,000,000 or any part of it would be available for this purpose. I asked the question when that bill was being considered. I remember the Senator from Michigan was interested in seeing that none of these institutions closed. It developed there was some doubt as to whether that money could be used for these purposes. It is in order to clarify the situation and at least assure some opportunity for those States that are making every effort to sell their bonds to carry on the State institutions, that I have offered this amendment in the hope that they may be able to find some place where they can sell their bonds.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the bill which we passed, appropriating $300,000,000 to be loaned to the States, of course, included States that could under their constitutions issue bonds. It also included States that could not, but which had been pledged Federal aid to roads. This, however, is limited exclusively to States that have authority to issue bonds, giving them a double advantage of getting money from the Federal Government. I would not object to this amendment if the Senator would add "or municipalities," because then all would have the same opportunity.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection, may I say to the Senator, to adding those words except that before, when we adopted it as to States, the Senate approved it, and then it was loaded down with some other propositions and the whole idea was defeated.

I would not like to see an amendment such as this defeated. In answer to what the Senator suggested, it seems to me it would be wise to tack the bill, which we passed some days ago and which is now in the House, onto this bill so that the whole matter may be in conference. If this proposition shall be in conference, and the bill referred to shall likewise be in conference, then with what the House has already done the conferees could work out something that I am sure would take care of the situation.

Mr. COUZENS. I think that is a good suggestion if we add the bill that has already gone to the House to this bill. Otherwise the Senator will see that his State, for example, will get twice the opportunity for obtaining money that the State of Michigan will get.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think that should be permitted, may I say to the Senator, and I hope that those in charge of the legislation will consider it wise to adopt the bill which we have already passed as an amendment to the pending bill, so that the whole matter may go to conference and be worked out fairly to everybody.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not see any objection to that suggestion. The Senate has passed by an overwhelming vote the $300,000,000 measure for the relief of destitution, and that bill is pending in the House. We separated it from the other measure on the theory that that provision would certainly pass in some form, while the more controverted features might run the risk of delay if not of rejection. However, since no action has been taken in the body at the other end of the Capitol on the $300,000,000 provision, and since it would give the House the option of passing that bill and of dealing with the provisions of this bill separately or of including them all in one measure, I think it is sound strategy and is a very reasonable request. If some other Senator does not do so, I shall offer the amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from New York consented to offer the identical bill which we have passed as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. Will not the Senator withdraw the amendment so that we may weld the two together in one bill?

Mr. HARRISON. I am perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. COUZENS. Then it would be $600,000,000 instead of $300,000,000. So if the Senator will withdraw his amendment temporarily we can see if we can weld the two together.

Mr. HARRISON. I withdraw the amendment for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi withdraws his amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does the Senator intend that there shall be an appropriation of $600,000,000 for States and municipalities?

Mr. COUZENS. What we thought we would do was to get together and try to weld together a large amount, or some amount, to cover both purposes proposed by the Senator from Mississippi and proposed by the bill that has heretofore passed the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, speaking for myself only, I should be opposed to a measure providing any such stupendous sum. This bill, as I understand, was for the purpose of aiding the unemployment situation. There were to be constructed self-liquidating projects, roads, and so forth, which it was supposed would furnish employment to people. It looks from this amendment, though it is tendered by one of my best friends on the floor, as if we are to unfreeze some of the frozen assets of States and to enable them to find credit.

When was it that the Federal Government put the sovereign States under its wing? If States may not handle their own affairs, it seems to me the day may soon come when they will have to surrender their charters and say, "We are incompetent to handle our domestic affairs and we will have to come in under the wing of the Federal Government." Speaking for myself, I am opposed to the amendment offered by my dear friend from Mississippi, and I should vote against the proposition of authorizing $600,000,000 of liabilities upon the Federal Government for the purposes indicated.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I understand the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi has been withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been withdrawn.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I desire to offer an amendment. On page 106, in line 24, after the word "authorized," I move to insert "and for projects recommended by the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army."

Mr. President, this amendment does not propose any increase in the appropriation. There is provided in the annual appropriation $60,000,000 for river and harbor projects, which have been authorized. It is proposed in this measure to increase that sum by $30,000,000. I do not propose to increase that amount, but I am informed by the office of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army that there is little planned work to be done this year that will absorb the additional $30,000,000, which has been authorized. In the House text there are authorized projects that will require up to $30,000,000.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I will yield as soon as I finish my statement. The Chief of Engineers informs me that if this amendment shall be adopted he can spend $18,551,200 on projects which have been investigated, recommended, and approved, but not authorized, except in the House text of this bill; that he could undertake, if this amendment were adopted, work at once, spend the money this year, and employ, according to the figures which I have before me, 5,949 additional workers. These projects are well scattered throughout the States of the Union. The table which I hold in my hand indicates the amount which can be spent in each State and the number of persons that probably could be employed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. In just a moment I will be glad to yield. The States in which the work can be done are Alabama, California, Florida, Indiana, Louisiana, Maryland, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, Washington, and Wisconsin.

This table shows that the total amount of money he can spend this year on authorized projects is $66,490,000. There are $60,000,000 authorized and appropriated for, and he can spend $66,490,000. If this amendment shall be adopted, he can spend, in excess of the $60,000,000 authorized and appropriated, $18,501,200. My amendment proposes to enable him to go ahead on these projects which are projects which are ready so that men may be put to work upon them in addition to those which are already authorized.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, do I understand that these are projects which have been recommended by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors to Congress, but which as yet have not been authorized by Congress?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Exactly; and which are authorized in the House text of this bill which has been stricken out by the Senate committee.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Do I also understand the Senator to say that of between $300,000,000 and $400,000,000 of projects already authorized by Congress itself the rivers and harbors engineers can find no work to be done; yet they can find work to be done on projects that have not been authorized?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That is exactly what I understand, and here is a table that shows it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It is a perfectly amazing contemplation to me.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That is work they can undertake this year, which is in shape to be undertaken this year, and is limited to the sum of $66,490,400.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I make one other inquiry? I am sure the Senator would not want to depart from the orderly procedure of rivers and harbors work if it were not necessary to depart from it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Certainly not.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It seems to me that to inject into this bill a list of unauthorized projects, so far as Congress is concerned, is to go back directly—unmeditatedly, of course, so far as the Senator from Massachusetts is concerned—to the old pork-barrel method of doing rivers and harbors work.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I have no such desire at all.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am sure the Senator has no such desire, but his amendment contemplates exactly that net result, in my judgment.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. My amendment contemplates using the $30,000,000 that is in this bill by providing projects recommended and upon which employment can be had.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; but it contemplates projects that have not been authorized by Congress.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That is true.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Michigan for just a moment. As an example, let me say that some of the surveys which are positively necessary have been completed, as I understand.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Exactly.

Mr. LONG. Congress is not a board of experts, but the Board of Army Engineers has completed some very important and necessary surveys, not in any particular State but throughout the country. Congress has authorized the Board of Engineers to go ahead with certain work for which there were no surveys and for which there can be no work done this year. We certainly are not putting the cart before the horse, but, on the contrary, are putting things in proper order, to let the Board of Army Engineers proceed upon work for which there are plans and surveys which make the work possible rather than to tell them to submit plans and specifications for projects on which they can not put any men to work. I have not the list that the Senator has there, but I am familiar, I think, with some of these projects. There are none of them that are not vitally necessary to this country.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. And they are all authorized in the House text.

Mr. LONG. Every one of them is authorized by the House.

If we are going to do anything at all, certainly what the House has investigated and has found to be proper, and what the Board of Army Engineers has investigated and found to be proper, should be done. They have the plans and the specifications ready. They can go to work on them; whereas, without this amendment, putting this appropriation in this bill does not mean that we are going to employ a single man. It is a mere idle and empty gesture, because there are no plans and specifications that can be had to do any work on.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, without intending any disrespect to the House, I should say that the mere fact that these projects find an authorization in this particular House text is no particular warranty of their utility, in view of the fact that this is the same House text which includes a post office at every crossroads in the United States. Surely we are not proposing to proceed with our river and harbor projects on the basis of the post-office building program which is in the pending bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am a little surprised that there should be any kind of controversy at all about this particular item. We have long followed now the course of making lump-sum appropriations for rivers and harbors, the amount to be expended being left in the discretion of the Board of Engineers. It is true that they usually indicate about how they propose to expend it. The chairman of the Committee on Commerce will be able to speak more definitely.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But let me continue, Mr. President. My understanding about the matter is that the Board of Engineers have already a plan, extending over a period of years, for the development of rivers and harbors.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like to correct the Senator just a moment. The Senator's statement is a little too broad.

The engineers can not use any part of this lump sum upon any project that they may have recommended, but that some Congress has not approved. In other words, they must expend every dollar that we appropriate upon projects approved by Congress.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly. That is just the point I wanted to make. They have outlined a plan of expenditure, covering a period of years, for the improvement of rivers and harbors approved by the Congress; and for the purpose of carrying out that program a lump-sum appropriation is annually made. This year the lump sum was $60,000,000, and they apply that only upon projects heretofore authorized by the Congress.

I am a little surprised at the information given to the Senator from Massachusetts. I called him up myself. I talked with him, and asked him what amount could be economically expended during the current year upon rivers and harbors over and above that which had been appropriated in the general appropriation act, $60,000,000. He answered that they could expend economically during the current year 50 per cent more, $30,000,000 additional; and that is the explanation of this item in the bill. It never was intended that a dollar of this money should be spent on any projects that have not heretofore been authorized by the Congress.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But that is not the Senator's amendment. The Senator specifically states that his proposed amendment deals with projects not authorized by Congress, and that is my whole quarrel with it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I find myself utterly unable to concur in that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is my whole opposition.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, at the time the Chief of Engineers gave the Senator from Montana the information, the House may have authorized these projects. The matter was in the House bill. Under existing law the bureau is ready to spend about $60,000,000, but he can expend $30,000,000 more on these projects if he is given permission to do so. I do not understand that he is prepared to spend $30,000,000 on authorized projects.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I understand the Senator from New York to be told that.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I want to reiterate, if I may—although what the Senator says does not need reiteration—but, just to state my own position, we wanted to make this bill absolutely unassailable from every standpoint; and we limited the appropriations to projects which had already been authorized and approved by Congress. The Senator from Montana took the trouble to communicate with the general in charge of this work. It was as a result of the information which he gave us that $30,000,000 could be used to put people to work at once upon these authorized projects this year, that this item was included. I would resist any efforts to put into this bill any appropriation for projects not yet authorized by Congress.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, just a moment. In this table are the amounts of money and the projects that that money can be spent on under existing authorizations. On this table he has prepared what the House bill would authorize. He has prepared what in the House bill they could undertake to begin work upon now, how many men would be employed, and what the total amount would be. That amount is $18,551,200; and the amount of money that the table shows as to projects that he is prepared to go forward on, that have already been authorized, is $66,940,450.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I have not looked it up for some little time, but I know that a year or so ago there were river and harbor projects that had been approved by Congress but had not been taken up yet by the engineers amounting to over $200,000,000. They have been passed on by Congress. If we do appropriate any additional money, it seems to me that additional money should be appropriated for those projects that have been approved by Congress.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The table shows that there are such projects, but the table also shows that the engineers can only spend on those projects this year $66,000,000.

Mr. JONES. Why provide for the expenditure of more money on the projects that have not been approved by Congress? We can increase the amount of money that he can expend upon projects that have already been approved by Congress over the $65,000,000.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. If he is not prepared to go forward with them, what good is there in appropriating the money?

Mr. JONES. Then what is the good of appropriating any money in this bill for this purpose if he is not able to go over the projects that Congress has not yet approved?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I promised to yield to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD].

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator from Minnesota will pardon me, I think the situation might be cleared up if I should state that the conversation that I had in the presence of the Senator from New York with the Chief of Engineers occurred prior to the time that the House bill had been even introduced. He did not know anything at all about what was in the House bill. There was not any House bill at that time.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Is the Senator referring to the so-called Rainey bill?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; the so-called Garner bill, which is the bill under consideration—H. R. 12445.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That is the very bill referred to in the table before me.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly. The point I am making is that when we had our conversation with the Chief of Engineers there was not any H. R. 12445. The Speaker of the House had just come over and talked with us about what kind of provisions we were going to put in our bill, and he suggested what he was going to put in, in a general way, in the House bill. So that, at the time this conversation was had there was not any House bill. There was not any authorization of any project other than those that had theretofore been authorized by Congress. So there is no escape from the conclusion that the Chief of Engineers understood perfectly well that we were asking him what amount of money could be spent on projects heretofore authorized by the Congress; and the $30,000,000 is what he gave us, and that is included in this bill.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I will say that this table appears to be dated June 7, 1932.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota permit me to say, before he begins, that General Brown, testifying before the Commerce Committee within the month, has testified that he could do about $100,000,000 of work within the next fiscal year on projects already authorized; so that I am totally at a loss to understand the Senator's analysis of the situation.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the table speaks for itself. He says he can spend $66,000,000. We have already given him $60,000,000, and he says that he can spend on projects that are not yet authorized but approved $18,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am unable to understand why, with $350,000,000 of fully authorized projects as yet unfinanced, we should invade any new field of unauthorized projects until we have completed the contracts to which we are already committed.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I confess to the Senator that I myself was surprised to find that; but it appears that each year, as has been stated by the Senator from Montana, the departments prepare work that they can do the next year, and they prepared that work, and that amounts to $66,000,000, and we have given it to them. Now, the point I wanted to make is that we are appropriating $30,000,000 here, and it should be spent to relieve unemployment.

Mr. WAGNER. This statement to which the Senator refers is dated May 19, 1932; and it is the information given by the Federal Employment Stabilization Board of how much more than is provided now in the appropriation bill could be expended under authorized projects by the different departments at once. Under "rivers and harbors" we have the item of $30,000,000. That was the information given on that date by the head of the bureau having that work in charge—that $30,000,000 could be expended at once in the prosecution of river and harbor improvements. That simply confirms the statement which was made to the committee by General Brown, in charge of this work.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I should like to ask the Senator from New York a question.

As the bill provides on page 106, how much does the Senator claim that that will provide for rivers and harbors work if his amendment is added to the amount already authorized in appropriation bills?

Mr. WAGNER. How much all together?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. Ninety million dollars all together; $60,000,000 provided in the general appropriation bill and $30,000,000 provided——

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. For construction?

Mr. WAGNER. For river and harbor work.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. But $23,000,000 of the $60,000,000 for rivers and harbors is for maintenance, and only $37,000,000 is for new work. Of the $60,000,000 in the Army appropriation bill, $23,000,000 is for maintenance, and only $37,000,000 for construction. If this amendment is adopted, it will total for construction $67,000,000 instead of $90,000,000; and if the Senator will permit me, I want to read General Brown's own testimony before the Commerce Committee.

He was asked by Senator VANDENBERG:

> Do you think, for instance, you could handle $150,000,000 worth of work in the next fiscal year?
> General BROWN. Not in the next fiscal year; but when once the work is laid out to do, I think $150,000,000 would be handled just as easily as we are handling $60,000,000 now.
> Senator VANDENBERG. You say "not in the next fiscal year." What I am trying to get at is, how much could you actually put into ultimate work in the next fiscal year?
> General BROWN. We could certainly put in $75,000,000, because that was carefully estimated by the local officers.
> Senator VANDENBERG. Could you put in any more than $75,000,000?
> General BROWN. Yes; I think we could.
> Senator VANDENBERG. How much?
> General BROWN. $100,000,000. There would be no trouble about that.

Previously to that, General Brown had made this statement:

> General BROWN. I am not afraid of any reasonable limit; no, sir.
> To give you a little more concrete idea of what we could do, not directly connected with the constructive force of the country, but looking at our end of it, we have over 40 districts in the United States properly organized to conduct work, and some of them spend easily $10,000,000 a year at the present time when the work is there for them to do. Our organization can certainly take care of a very large amount of work. There is no practical limit to what we could handle.

I do not want to take the Senator from the floor to speak in his time.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I do not care to push the amendment. I do not believe in "pork barrel" appropriations. I have no sympathy with such a proposal. But I was moved to offer this amendment because it was represented to me that this $30,000,000 might not be used.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I assume that what the Senator has in mind is that this bill seeks to relieve unemployment, and that there are certain projects which have not yet been passed upon by the Congress.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The thing would not have been thought about except that I wanted to have this $30,000,000 used to give employment, and it appeared that there was a question whether it could be used without some such amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. I can see exactly what the Senator has in mind. The engineers have worked out certain projects with which they are prepared to go forward. It may well be, since we have not had a river and harbor bill for two years, that some of these projects have not been presented to the Congress, but which, in the light of present conditions, are more important to the welfare of the country and more productive of labor employment than some of the projects which have been authorized. Am I right in that?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana rose.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I am not going to press the amendment, and there is no occasion for any further debate, in view of the fact that the members of the committee reporting this bill assert that this $30,000,000 is going to be spent. I have no pride in any one of the proposed projects, and what I wanted was to be assured that the $30,000,000 would be spent for unemployment.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have no doubt of the Senator's entire good faith. What I object to is continued appropriations for rivers and harbors under a "pork barrel" method that we pursued for 40 years without completing the development of the inland waterways. We have spent $470,000,000 in 40 years, and the only project that has been finished is the Ohio River, where the Steel Corporation had enough political influence to overcome the influence of the railroads, so as to have the Ohio River project finished in order that they might have coal brought to their smelters for 21 cents a ton.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, in order to end the matter, and upon the assurance of the committee reporting the bill that this $30,000,000 will be spent upon authorized projects and used for employment purposes, I do not care to press the amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I desire to say a further word. Much agitation has taken place concerning the prosecution of an extensive program of public works, and if we are correctly informed, an amendment will be offered to this bill providing for public works to cost a total of perhaps three to five billion dollars.

That necessarily would include projects not yet authorized by Congress. The committee framing the bill deemed it wise to confine the appropriations made by it to projects which have already been authorized by the Congress. If we go beyond that, we immediately enter the "pork barrel" field. Every man will want to get an appropriation for the particular project in which he is specially interested.

If we yield in this particular, we shall find no ground upon which we can oppose the extension of this program of public construction to all manner of works never authorized by Congress at all.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I want to say that I am in sympathy with the action of the committee in limiting the field of this bill to authorized projects, but the reason for the amendment was that there did not appear to be a means of spending this $30,000,000 except by some such amendment.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I wonder if there is not some confusion in using the words "authorized projects." I have an idea that what is really meant is projects adopted by Congress upon the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers of the Army. That is an entirely different thing from projects for which appropriations have been authorized.

Some projects have been authorized and necessary appropriations to complete the projects have not been authorized in the full amount. I am not aware that any of the projects of the House text have not had the approval of the Chief of Army Engineers.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. They all have, according to this table.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is my understanding. I want to say a word in favor of a comprehensive program of completing the inland waterways and the already adopted rivers and harbors program.

The testimony of the Chief of Engineers shows that if it is done in a comprehensive manner 20 or 25 per cent of the estimated expenditures will be saved; that he can economically spend $100,000,000 this year, and after this year, if the work is laid out to-day, he can spend $150,000,000 until the projects are all completed.

He has testified he will employ 160,000 men for a season of 120 days. With an estimated expenditure of three or four hundred million dollars, there is a possible saving to be made, as an economic proposition, of from seventy-five to a hundred million dollars, if we substitute a business-like method of financing and letting contracts for the completion of this work, rather than the present and past piecemeal, "pork barrel" method of constructing these works, resulting in no development of any channel heretofore except for the benefit almost solely of the contractors, never finishing a channel so that the people could have economic relief from the existing exorbitant freight charges. As a result no freight is moving, because of the charges being so exorbitant at the present price level that freight can not move throughout the country because the rates are confiscatory.

I am very sorry the committee in preparing the substitute saw fit to limit this part of the bill. I have tried to find out how much employment would be furnished throughout the United States through this relief bill, as it is a relief bill. I wish some one would give us some information about that. If this is a relief bill, is there some one who can say what this money is to be spent for, where it is to be spent, how it is going to be spent, and how many men can be employed? On a comprehensive program of rivers and harbors we had the Chief of Engineer's own testimony as to how many men he would employ, how long he would employ them, and how much money he could spend. He knows exactly where he would spend the money. He knows from the records what the expenditure of money would be, and there is no doubt about the economic relief to be afforded; there is no doubt but that the entire country would be benefited, and there is not a question of doubt about the economic benefit that would result to the country. Is there any other part of this bill that can be placed upon such a sound foundation as an immediate, comprehensive program of developing the rivers and harbors, and particularly the inland waterways?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I think it can be estimated that the number of persons who would be employed under the amendment providing for the expenditure of $30,000,000 would be 9,000 people, according to the figures of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have here the report of the hearings before the Committee on Commerce. I have before me the testimony of W. A. Klinger, who is on the executive committee of the Associated General Contractors of America. He said:

> The river contractors inform me that a full season's work means six months. My construction experience of some 22 years will prove to me that of that six months almost one-fifth is lost because of inclement weather. We therefore find that the season's actual work on the part of this labor is something like 120 days, and we think 100,000,000 men a day will employ about 160,000 men for five seasons. If you check that mathematically, I think you will find it to be correctly calculated on that basis.

That is on the basis of spending about $400,000,000 over a period of five years.

I do not care to delay the passage of the bill for the purpose of discussing this item, but if it is the intention to vote on the measure to-night, I wish some one who has figured out these items of these vast expenditures of money would explain how many men can be employed if the bill is passed. I do not say that in criticism; I am asking for information.

Of course, I want to vote for a relief bill, but I want to know how many people are going to be relieved, how many people are going to be given employment, and I trust we may have a little more detailed explanation.

If the other items in the bill are based on the economic soundness of that part of the bill that has to do with rivers and harbors, I would want to have some further explanation of it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if there is no other amendment to be offered, I desire to offer the following.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. What disposition was made of the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was withdrawn.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I withdrew the amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 112, after line 16, insert a new section to read as follows:

SEC. —. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans to bona fide financial institutions organized under the laws of any State or of the United States and having resources adequate for their undertaking for the purpose of enabling them to finance the carrying and orderly marketing of staple commodities produced in the United States. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation may make any such loan in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as it may determine, subject to the limitations of section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act as to the period in which it may make loans and the amounts and maturities thereof, and also such loans shall be fully and adequately secured.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief explanation of the amendment. I may say it was prepared and submitted to the committee by the very able governor of the Federal Reserve Board and director of the War Finance Corporation. It will be remembered that Mr. Meyer handled the affairs of the War Finance Corporation and effected some very great good, at least in the western country in the stock business, through its operations. It was his idea that the principle there applied might be applied with excellent effect to other branches of business, and that a similar arrangement might be made.

The War Finance Corporation act, as it originally was enacted, embodied the idea which was utilized in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, and authorized loans to livestock-loan companies. But it was contended that manufacturing establishments, for instance, might find it impossible to get the loans that they ordinarily make in ordinary times from the ordinary sources, and that they might be able to associate themselves in a similar cooperative loan association and loans could be made to them for the purpose of holding their goods until the market improved and they could make a sale of them or arrange for the orderly marketing of them. The argument was that now the banks are forcing the holders of these stocks of goods to sell them in order to liquidate obligations at the banks. This is intended to permit the organization of financial institutions which would thus loan the money for the purpose of carrying and marketing stocks of staple goods.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I should like to ask the Senator why he is willing to propose this amendment when this morning I wanted to have some consideration shown to insurance concerns of a mutual nature which was intended to carry or make possible the orderly marketing of the American manufacturer.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I shall be glad to answer the Senator. I read from section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act as follows:

To aid in financing agriculture, commerce, and industry, including facilitating the exportation of agricultural and other products, the corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans, upon such terms and conditions not inconsistent with this act as it may determine, to any bank, savings bank, trust company, building and loan association, insurance company, mortgage loan company, credit union, Federal land bank, joint-stock land bank, Federal intermediate credit bank, agricultural credit corporation, livestock credit corporation, organized under the laws of any State or of the United States.

It will be observed that this provides for loans to only those organizations which are financial institutions and they make loans. This is simply intended to extend the provision to another class that would make loans.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, in connection with the portion of the law the Senator has just read, may I state that the insurance companies and indemnity companies are having great difficulty in getting loans under the act where indemnity insurance is included as one of the agencies?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; but the indemnity companies are something quite different. There are all sorts of guaranty companies. There are companies which guarantee construction contracts and which guarantee fidelity on the part of employees. The company the Senator speaks of is a corporation which guarantees the full and faithful performance of contracts for the sale of commodities.

Mr. COPELAND. From the fact that the Senator has presented the amendment I take it he feels that it accords perfectly with the provisions of the act.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. With the spirit of the act as originally passed.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. HEBERT. As I listened to the reading of the amendment presented by the Senator from Montana it struck me that "financial institutions" might be interpreted to mean existing institutions such as banks, and that they would be permitted to borrow money to help them furnish funds for carrying livestock owners, for instance. Is that correct?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. They are authorized to do that now.

Mr. HEBERT. I understand they are authorized to do it now. What does the amendment propose in addition to that?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. This is proposed, as I suggested, to make loans to credit corporations which are organized practically upon the plan of the livestock credit corporations except in this case it would be manufacturing establishments. They would organize themselves into a cooperative association to make loans to their members for the purpose of carrying their commodities and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would make the loans to them. This does not originate with the committee. It is suggested, as I said, by the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, the directing officer of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. HEBERT. Then in the case of industries such as we have in New England they could associate themselves into some form of organization and advance money to their members and upon the security of the promises of those members receive advances from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly; that is the idea.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I was out of the Chamber when the amendment was offered and perhaps explained. Did the Senator from Montana define what he means by "commodities" in his amendment?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I tried to do so in reply to a question. It was represented to us that the purpose was to accord to manufacturers the same opportunity that is accorded, for instance, to livestock producers. Under the bill as we passed it we authorized the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to any bank, savings bank, trust company, building and loan association, insurance company, mortgage-loan company, credit union, Federal land bank, joint-stock land bank, Federal intermediate credit bank, agricultural credit corporation, or livestock credit corporation.

The livestock credit corporation was utilized very effectively by the War Finance Corporation to help out the livestock business in the West. They organized cooperative livestock credit associations for the purpose of loaning money to the members of the cooperative organization. That money was loaned to them by the War Finance Corporation. The act as we passed it permits that work to continue so that the livestock business has been taken care of, but it occurred to Mr. Meyer that it worked so well that he thought it would be valuable to apply it to stocks produced by manufacturers as well, who could associate themselves together.

Mr. COUZENS. Manufacturers of what?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of anything.

Mr. COUZENS. Automobiles and tractors?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Staple commodities.

Mr. COUZENS. This goes a very long way. It was a matter which the Committee on Banking and Currency considered and upon which we had a vote. By our vote it was rejected. We rejected the proposal that we should lend to manufacturing institutions who are engaged particularly in competitive industry. I think this is a very unusual proposal and a very broad amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Undoubtedly it is, but I will say to the Senator that it is not intended, as will be observed, to loan to the manufacturing institutions themselves. They are to associate themselves in something in the nature of a cooperative organization for the purpose of loaning money to the manufacturers, and they may borrow money for that purpose from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. COUZENS. But there is nothing in the amendment which makes any reference to a cooperative organization.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; but financial institutions that loan money.

Mr. COUZENS. If the Senator means in the same respect as the other loans were made and wants to make it cooperative, it seems to me that the amendment should be made to read "bona fide cooperative institutions."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is true.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the amendment should not be adopted at all, but if it is going to be adopted I would like to ask the Senator to insert before the word "financial" the words "bona fide cooperative," so it would read "bona fide cooperative financial institutions."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is agreeable to me. I ask leave to modify my amendment accordingly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be reported for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Montana as modified to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. COUZENS obtained the floor.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

Mr. COUZENS. Does the Senator desire to speak to the pending amendment?

Mr. BLACK. I was going to offer an amendment. I did not know there was an amendment pending.

Mr. COUZENS. There is an amendment pending.

I should like to ask, now that we have a quorum, to have the amendment read; and then I should like to ask for the yeas and nays, because it departs very far from the contemplation of the original legislation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of those in charge of the bill how long they intend to continue the session this evening? It is a very important amendment; we had just a bare quorum before the roll was called. It does seem to me that the bill, which is of importance, should not be passed on without proper consideration, and it is certainly not getting it at the hands of the Senate at this late hour after we have been in session since 11 o'clock this morning.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, of course, the matter is entirely in the hands of the Senator from Oregon. I am quite willing at this stage to take a recess until to-morrow.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his compliment and confidence, but I do not feel that the matter is wholly in my hands. So far as I am personally concerned, I want to stay here this evening and work on the pending bill and other matters coming before the Senate.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well.

Mr. McNARY. I may add at this time that if we are to carry out our own desires we must have some evening sessions and go forward with the work of the session if we are to adjourn in a reasonable length of time. I think, Mr. President, a number of Members of the Senate on the other side desire to get away next week for the Democratic convention, and nearly all Senators in the body are weary and desire a rest and a change. I think, more than that, the country itself needs quiet and rest from the session of Congress, and if we are to conclude our work and do it well and faithfully, we ought to stay here; and, so far as I am concerned, this evening I want to stay here and work on this bill.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I think the Senator is rather strenuous in his desire to keep us here, but I believe it is poor policy to legislate with 49 or 50 Senators present on an important bill such as this, and particularly on an amendment that has gone so far astray from what was proposed by the committee that drafted the so-called Wagner bill and so far astray from what the Committee on Banking and Currency intended when it reported the bill. If the Senator insists upon our staying here, I want the yeas and nays on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. This matter is quite impersonal with me. Of course, excepting, as I have stated, what I think is best for the Senate and the Members of the Senate and the country generally. If we have only 51 Members present no one is responsible but the absentees, and, so far as I am concerned, I should be willing to see an order adopted by the Senate authorizing the Sergeant at Arms to see that Senators are present.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. As I understand, we have a special order for 7 o'clock to-night to consider the Philippine independence bill.

Mr. McNARY. No; a proposal of that kind was made on Friday, but the able Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] objected to it. There is no order of that kind pending.

Mr. LONG. I was going to ask if we are going to continue the session to-night—I have tried to get away from here all day long—if it is not possible to hold an executive session, if it is contemplated one shall be held at the end of the day's business, so that I may make a motion to recommit a nomination? What I am trying to do is just to succeed in getting before the Senate a motion to recommit the Burguieres nomination.

Mr. McNARY. I do not know whether that inquiry is addressed to me or not, but the Senator must know under the rules that in legislative session he may ask unanimous consent to submit such a motion as in executive session.

Mr. LONG. I made that request earlier in the day.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if an executive session is contemplated to-day?

Mr. McNARY. On Saturday the question was discussed and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] desired to take up a nomination on the calendar; but the Senator from Utah was indisposed this evening and went home and by consent the nomination goes over until another day. Consequently unless some other Senator makes a motion, and unless it is the desire of the majority, there will be no executive session to-day; but I may remind the Senator from Louisiana again that he could ask unanimous consent of the Senate, as I mentioned a moment ago.

Mr. LONG. In accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon, I ask unanimous consent that, as in executive session, we take up a motion to recommit the appointment of Mr. Ernest A. Burguieres as Commissioner of Immigration at the port of New Orleans. I ask unanimous consent to take up that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I objected to a similar request this afternoon, and I renew the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. While I appreciate the diligence of the Senator from Oregon and understand his desire to proceed with this bill, I wish to express it as my opinion that there is no more important bill which can be considered by the Congress than the one that is now the unfinished business. I wish to reiterate what I said a moment ago, that questions of vital public policy are being determined in connection with some of the amendments. The one now tendered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] raises a very vital question of public policy, and I do not think it should be determined by a bare quorum of the Senate, many of whom, as the Senator has said, are fatigued. We have been in session since 11 o'clock this morning; many of us had committee meetings prior to the meeting of the Senate, and it is my opinion that the Senate can not transact business and pass upon the questions which are involved in this measure by being held in continuous session for these long hours. If the Senator from Michigan will yield to me, I will move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. McNARY. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HEBERT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. I do not know how he would vote, and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WAGNER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON]. I am not informed as to how he would vote if he were present. Therefore, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], which I transfer to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HEBERT. I am informed that the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], with whom I am paired, would, if he were present, vote as I intend to vote. Therefore, I am free to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BINGHAM. I understand that I may transfer my pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LOGAN (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. WAGNER. I am informed that I can transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON] to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL]. I do so, and vote "nay."

Mr. BRATTON. I have a pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MORRISON];

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY];

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK]; and

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR—ERNEST A. BURGUIERES

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have endeavored throughout the day to get unanimous consent to vote to recommit the appointment of Mr. Burguieres as commissioner of immigration of Louisiana and whatever territory is affected; but there has been objection made by my colleague, which has prevented that from being done.

I announced here on the floor of the Senate this morning that I must necessarily leave this evening. I can not wait here any longer. I have been advised by more than one member of the Committee on Immigration that they were not present when this nomination was ordered to be reported to the Senate. I have also been advised by at least one member of the committee—if I might make the statement, by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]—that he will move to have that appointment recommitted to the committee.

I wish to say, gentlemen of the Senate, that had I had the slightest doubt that the objections which I made against the confirmation of this appointment were sufficient, I would have produced any other necessary proof that might have been required to prove that this appointment should not have been made. When I was here—and I was here for some time after the appointment was made—I produced what I thought was sufficient proof for that purpose; and I was assured by members of the committee, from such understanding as I had, that there was certainly no further need for me to worry about the committee reporting the nomination favorably.

The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] were not present when this matter was brought up during my absence from the Senate.

I have undertaken to-day to secure unanimous consent, as in executive session, so that I might present to the Senate a motion to recommit this nomination in order that we might have a fair chance on this matter. I can not be here after to-day. It is impossible for me to be here.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the Senator intend to object to this nomination on the ground that the nominee is personally objectionable to him?

Mr. LONG. That is one objection, Mr. President.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then, Mr. President, I shall support the Senator's contention; and I suggest to him that he move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. LONG. I move, then, in line with the Senator's suggestion, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana.

On a division, the motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we proceed to the consideration of the matter proposed by the Senator from Louisiana, and that thereupon the Senate rise and proceed to the consideration of legislative business.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I object.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States nominating FREDERICK W. DALLINGER, of Massachusetts, to be a judge of the United States Customs Court, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. ODDIE and Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, each reported favorably sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. REED, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Albert H. Ladner, jr., of Philadelphia, Pa., to be collector of internal revenue for the first district of Pennsylvania in place of Joseph S. MacLaughlin, deceased.

Mr. HEBERT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the following nominations:

Lester O. Gore, of Alaska, to be district judge, district of Alaska, division No. 2, to succeed G. J. Lomen, whose term expired February 16, 1930; and Philip Forman, of New Jersey, to be United States district judge, district of New Jersey, to succeed William A. Runyon, deceased.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nominations will be placed on the calendar.

TREATIES

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read Executive A (71st Cong., 3d sess.), protocols concerning adherence of the United States to the Court of International Justice, transmitted by the President of the United States on December 10, 1930.

Mr. REED. Let the protocols go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The protocols will be passed over.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of T. V. O'Connor to be a member of the United States Shipping Board for a term of six years from June 9, 1932.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, after conference with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] and the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], the Senate proceeded to the consideration of this nomination on Saturday, but its consideration was not concluded. I hope we may go forward now and conclude it, and get it out of the way before we take up any other matter.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one minute?

Mr. McNARY. I am very happy to yield.

Mr. KING. In view of the fact that the junior Senator from Louisiana——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, we are unable to hear the proposition of the Senator.

Mr. KING. I think my friend from Nebraska desires to understand the proposition of the able Senator from Oregon, and I yield, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am simply stating the historical fact that on Saturday, before the recess, we were considering the nomination of the chairman of the Shipping Board, Mr. O'Connor. At that time it was agreed that we would not reach a vote because the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] desired to rest after a long speech. The matter now is the first on the Executive Calendar. It will require unanimous consent to take up another matter; and I suggest that we go forward upon this nomination where we left off on Saturday.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McNARY. Very gladly.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR—ERNEST A. BURGUIERES

Mr. KING. In view of the fact, as I was about to observe, that the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] is compelled to leave the city this evening, and this executive session was called at his instance, it occurs to me that it would be a proper act of courtesy if we could take up his matter first; and when that is disposed of I have not the slightest objection to the consideration of the matter referred to by the Senator from Oregon. Would the Senator object to that?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have no desire to inconvenience the able Senator from Louisiana. If it is agreeable to his colleague that the matter come up out of order, I have no objection to it.

Mr. KING. Then, Mr. President, I move that the nomination of Mr. Burguieres be recommitted to the Committee on Immigration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD], who is chairman of the committee, I think it is only fair that I should make a statement as to why this nomination was favorably reported by the committee. I myself never heard of the man or the appointment until it was brought up in the last meeting of the Immigration Committee. I do not know the man. I know nothing about his merits or demerits, and I do not want it thought that this is a matter in which I am particularly interested.

The statement was made to us by the Senator from West Virginia at this committee meeting that he had a great volume of testimony favorable to this man who is nominated; that the only thing against him was the personally-obnoxious objection made by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]. The committee took the position then, and subsequently the statement has been made on the floor, that if this were an office to be exercised wholly within the State of Louisiana the objection of the Senator would be conclusive, and we would report adversely on the nomination; but the committee took the position that as this is not such an office, as its functions extend over many States and affect many States, no Senator from any one of those States ought to be allowed to interpose that objection successfully, just exactly as we have said several times before with regard to nominees for Federal commissions or nominees for courts whose jurisdiction extended over several States.

That was why the committee did not regard the Senator's objection as conclusive when he said that this nominee was personally obnoxious to him; and as all the testimony, according to the Senator from West Virginia, was in favor of the nominee, the committee voted to report the nomination favorably to the Senate.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I just want to advise the Senator—because I am sure he was not present, and there is bound to be some mistake—that I presented some telegrams from the various interests opposing this man, particularly the laboring people, at the time I appeared there. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] was there; the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] was there; and I was given to understand beyond any question that there was not any need of going further.

Mr. REED. I do not know who gave the Senator that advice. I was not present at that time.

Mr. LONG. I was seeking to convey the information that it was not solely my objection at the time. I did present these telegrams, and I think the Senator from Utah can tell the Senator that I did.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have no interest whatever in this matter. I desire, however, always to be fair to Senators, no matter whether I agree with them or not.

I am a member of the Committee on Immigration. This nomination was called up before the committee several weeks ago. Senator LONG appeared and stated that this man was personally obnoxious to him, and that he objected to his confirmation. At the same time he called our attention to two letters or telegrams, I have forgotten which, purporting to come from labor organizations of Louisiana, New Orleans, as I recall, in which it was stated that this man was unfavorable to labor, and that they were very much opposed to his confirmation.

There was not a full attendance of the committee. After hearing Senator LONG, and after the telegrams were presented for our consideration, I have forgotten who made the motion, or whether it was only a suggestion, but at any rate there was an understanding that the matter was shelved, and Senator LONG was advised that no further action would be taken.

Some time later I attended a meeting of the committee, but the matter was not brought up during my presence. I was compelled to go to a meeting of the Committee on Finance, and after remaining in the Committee on Immigration for perhaps half or three-quarters of an hour, during which time a number of measures were disposed of, I excused myself and went to the Committee on Finance. I am making no criticism whatever, but after I had departed, I understand that the name of Mr. Burguieres was again brought to the attention of the committee. Of course, I do not know what occurred. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] has just stated what occurred in regard to the matter. I knew nothing about the action that was taken until I saw the nominee's name upon the Executive Calendar, and when it was reached, I think the Senator from Pennsylvania moved the confirmation.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I had never heard of it before. The matter was laid before the Senate by the Presiding Officer. I did not know it had ever been up before, and I did move for the confirmation of the nominee, after the nomination was laid before the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. KING. In just a moment. I found that Senator LONG was not here; and I then called attention to the fact that he was absent, and insisted that the matter go over until he returned. After some colloquy, that understanding was reached and the matter went over. That is all I know in regard to this nomination, and I have felt that in view of the action first taken, and the understanding which Senator LONG received from what we said and what we did, he ought to have been advised as to when it would be taken up again and an opportunity afforded him to present his views. That is the reason why I have championed his cause, so to speak, particularly during his absence, and why now I have made the motion to recommit.

I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wanted to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether there was an actual quorum of the committee present, or whether the members were simply put on the list being counted for a quorum, as is done in so many of the committees during these days?

Mr. REED. It was just as happens in so many of our committees, members coming in and going out.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wanted to know whether there was an actual quorum present when the nomination was voted to be reported to the Senate.

Mr. REED. I do not know.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania, having heard the statement made by the Senator from Louisiana, and also the verification of it by the Senator from Utah as to what happened at a meeting when the Senator was not there, and as to the understanding had by the Senator from Louisiana, does not the Senator think the nomination should go back to the committee?

Mr. REED. It has been in the committee twice, as I understand it. This is the second time it has been reported, is it not?

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. REED. Is this the first time it has been on the calendar?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me, without expressing any opinion about the merits, because I have none, with the understanding the Senator from Utah seems to indicate was had, it being understood by him at that time that the matter was ended, and it coming up again when the Senator from Utah was not there and the Senator from Louisiana was not there, it seems to me in real good faith we ought to send this nomination to the committee.

Mr. REED. I do not know. If the Senator from Louisiana expects to produce evidence tending to show that the nominee is unfit, of course he ought to be given a chance to produce it, but if he merely wants this matter to go back to the committee so that he can claim that the nominee is personally obnoxious to him, and rest on that, I am going to oppose sending it back to the committee.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I want to do both. I think that there are a number of Senators here who will not support the Senator on the jurisdictional point he is making, but I propose to show that there are over 13,000 men who object to this nominee. I thought the matter was settled.

If this matter goes back to the committee, I do not believe the committee will ever report the nomination again. As a matter of fact, the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] was at the meeting when I attended it, and he was not at the other meeting when the nomination was ordered reported. He was favorably inclined to my position at the time, and others were as well. But I had left town when the matter was reported, and I received a telegram from the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] while I was down in Louisiana which said, "Do you still object to the confirmation of Mr. Burguieres?" I wired him back that I still objected. I thought he simply wanted to know whether I still objected to the nomination, but the next thing I knew it was reported out. I was not at the meeting and knew nothing about it, and I venture the assertion that except for the technical quorum there were very few men at the meeting, because I am quite positive that with a quorum the committee would not have reported the nomination in view of the understanding I had at that time.

Mr. REED. Surely the Senator from Louisiana is not reproaching members of the committee for not being present?

Mr. LONG. Not at all—nor any other committee. I am not going to call the pot black. What I am trying to do is to let the committee have its day in court.

Mr. REED. We have to get along with the public business. I am not disposed to delay this. It ought to be decided

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, in order that my position might not be misunderstood, I am one of the old-fashioned Senators who believe in State rights and in the right of a State to be represented by the Senators who sit here. I believe that when a Senator from a sovereign State stands up on the floor of the Senate and states that a nominee is not fit to hold a certain office, is personally obnoxious to him, that it is my duty, believing as I do, to vote with him, no matter how many of my friends may feel differently about the matter——

Mr. BROUSSARD rose.

Mr. BINGHAM. Even though the other Senator from the same State who is a personal friend of mine believes differently. The States are represented here by two Senators, and if one of those two representatives makes such a statement as was made on this floor by the junior Senator from Louisiana, no matter how much I may disagree with him on every position he takes—and I think it fair to state that probably there are no two Senators on this floor who are more divergent in their views on public questions than the junior Senator from Louisiana and I—nevertheless, when he takes the position he has taken regarding this matter it seems to me that the only fair thing to do is to send the nomination back to the committee for further consideration.

I yield to my friend from Louisiana.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Did the Senator from Connecticut hear the junior Senator from Louisiana to-day express that objection?

Mr. BINGHAM. On the floor this evening, in response to a question of mine, he suggested that the nominee is personally obnoxious to him, and it has been my practice during the seven and a half years I have been here always to vote in accordance with any such preference expressed by a Senator, no matter on which side of the aisle he might be.

Mr. BROUSSARD. My understanding of the statement made two or three times by my colleague was that the nominee was obnoxious to the labor people.

Mr. BINGHAM. I asked the junior Senator, the Senator's colleague, whether the nominee is personally obnoxious to him, and he stated that he is. Then I suggested that I should vote with him, although he knows as well as any Senator on this floor that he and I rarely vote on any question on the same side of the issue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit.

The motion was agreed to, and the nomination was recommitted to the Committee on Immigration.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD—T. V. O'CONNOR

The legislative clerk read the nomination of T. V. O'Connor, of New York, to be a member of the United States Shipping Board.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, on Saturday this nomination was discussed, and I stated then, and I wish to state again now, that I regard Mr. O'Connor as unfit to hold this office.

I expect every Senator here knows Mr. O'Connor, and I imagine most of us know the peculiar things about him which render him unfit. One of those is not to be said in disparagement of Mr. O'Connor; it was his misfortune and not his fault, no doubt, but we all know that Mr. O'Connor is not an educated man, and we all know that Mr. O'Connor is the kind of man who can be influenced very easily by those who desire to influence him. He has never had the experience which would fit him for a place like this. He has never had any business experience which would qualify him for a position of this kind. To turn over a great corporation, with ships which had cost billions of dollars, and with almost unlimited sums of money under the control of the board of which he was chairman, puts him in a peculiar position where the Government might be taken advantage of, and I want to say that this record of Mr. O'Connor shows that the Government has been taken advantage of time and time again.

I pointed out on Saturday that $22,000,000 had been lost by the grossest kind of inefficiency and carelessness, by disregard of the law.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield while I suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Copeland	Howell	Patterson
Barbour	Costigan	Jones	Pittman
Barkley	Davis	King	Reed
Bingham	Dickinson	La Follette	Robinson, Ark.
Black	Fess	Lewis	Robinson, Ind.
Bratton	Frazier	Logan	Sheppard
Brookhart	George	McGill	Steiwer
Broussard	Glenn	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Byrnes	Goldsborough	McNary	Townsend
Capper	Gore	Metcalf	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hale	Moses	Wagner
Carey	Hastings	Neely	Walsh, Mass.
Cohen	Hatfield	Norbeck	Watson
Connally	Hayden	Norris	White
Coolidge	Hebert	Oddie

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Shipping Board has been a very unsuccessful institution, as we all know. During the war we spent on the Shipping Board in 1917 the sum of $50,100,000; in 1918 we spent $1,067,533,816.55; in 1919 we spent $1,810,190,032.80; or a total of $2,927,883,849.35. There were certain reappropriations which went back into the Treasury of $4,000,000, which reduced the total net appropriation during the war period to $2,922,953,640.49.

After the war was over the shipping interests got busy and got control really of the Shipping Board. I digress there long enough to say that in my judgment one of the greatest mistakes Congress has ever made was in not having long ago abolished the Shipping Board and everything that pertains to it. The Government would have been a great deal better off, our shipping would probably have been a great deal better off, and the constant outpour from the Government Treasury to the big shipping interests would have been discontinued long ago, and the entire country would have been better off.

I want to call attention to some of the appropriations which have been made during the incumbency of Mr. O'Connor. I would include also those made just prior to his going into office. I shall read only the round numbers, because I intend to have the letter from which I read inserted in the RECORD in full, and it will give the figures in full.

For the fiscal year 1920, $357,000,000; for 1921; $37,000,000; for 1922, $103,000,000; for 1923, $70,000,000; for 1924, $50,000,00; for $1925, $30,000,000; for 1926, $24,000,000; for 1927, $24,000,000; for 1928, $22,000,000; for 1929, $18,000,000; for 1930, $16,000,000; for 1931, $11,000,000; or a total for the 10 years after the war, in large part while Mr. O'Connor was chairman of the board, of $707,000,000.

What have we received for that sum? We have sold our ships. They are gone. We have paid enormous salaries. We have paid to the members of the Fleet Corporation for a while salaries of $35,000 a year each. I think we paid one or two attorneys $35,000 a year and then after a hard fight we got it reduced to $25,000 a year, and one remains now at $18,000. He is still drawing $18,000 a year, yet the Shipping Board, when confronted with a loss of $22,000,000, did not even consult that attorney and ask for his opinion. When confronted with one of the most important contracts they ever made, they did not even call him in.

There was some $74,000,000 reappropriated from the Treasury, so that the net appropriations from 1920 to 1931 were $692,000,000.

Mr. Sandberg, the vice chairman, wrote me a letter under date of June 20, 1932, and I shall ask permission to have it inserted in the RECORD in full at the close of my remarks on this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit A.)

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Sandberg wrote in part as follows:

In connection with the second paragraph of your letter, I wish to advise that the appropriation acts for the fiscal years 1921 and 1922 authorized sales receipts totaling $70,000,000 and $55,000,000, respectively, to be used for administrative expenses of the Merchant Fleet Corporation for payment of claims, losses from operations of vessels, and completion of vessels under construction. The records of the Merchant Fleet Corporation indicate that the total amount of sales receipts used under this authority was $107,619,426.55.

There was $4,000,000,000 expended, ships costing millions of dollars sold for a song, and the total turned over to the Shipping Board was $107,000,000 plus.

Furthermore, the appropriation acts for the fiscal years 1925 to 1931, inclusive, authorized the use of sales receipts totaling $22,325,000 to defray expenses of liquidation.

That was under this man, wholly unfitted to perform his duties, as every Senator knows. There is not a man who knows Mr. O'Connor who will rise in his place and say he believes he is a man fitted for the position. Under his administration $22,000,000 were expended for expenses of liquidation.

The total amount authorized has not been used, however; $5,476,219.19 having been transferred to the Construction Loan Fund instead of being used to defray liquidation expenses.

Instead of being used to defray liquidation expenses, that fund was transferred as stated, making upward of $17,000,000 used for liquidation. They had a lawyer they were paying $35,000 a year for quite a while and then we reduced his salary to $18,000, and, I think, the Economy Committee had reduced it again—and all this under the administration of the man whose name has been sent here for confirmation.

Listen to this:

These appropriations, since the fiscal year 1927, include $10,000,000, for one year and $5,000,000 for four years, or since 1928, and represent a special fund designated as fighting fund and are not to be used for operations by the Shipping Board.

What is that? Do we know? What does Mr. O'Connor use the fighting fund for? Can any Senator answer the question? I shall be glad to yield to him if he can.

This amount is still in the hands of the Treasurer and can not be used except for the purpose for which it was appropriated.

Who knows for what it was appropriated?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. COPELAND. Did the Senator say that this large fund was to pay the expenses of litigation?

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator refer to the $17,000,000?

Mr. COPELAND. I ask was that fund to be used to defray the expenses of litigation?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; to defray the expenses of liquidation.

Mr. COPELAND. That is quite different.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know; it is pretty nearly the same. I will refer to the way they liquidate. I am glad the Senator from Utah called attention to it.

Under Mr. O'Connor's administration, which we are asked to indorse by confirming his nomination, a ship which is known as the City of Eureka, which cost the Government $1,894,000, was sold for $64,800. Then before it was delivered it was repaired at an expense of $44,500. The man responsible for such transactions as that we are called upon by our votes to confirm as the head of this great institution with all this money at its disposal.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HOWELL. Do I understand that the vessel in question was sold for $64,000?

Mr. McKELLAR. It was sold for $64,800, but before it was delivered, after the sale, $44,500 was expended in repairs, the Shipping Board getting net for the ship $20,300.

Mr. HOWELL. How is it possible to explain such a transaction?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is not explainable. "Mr. O'Connor is a good fellow, just confirm him." He is a man who will do what the shipping interests want done.

Mr. HOWELL. Where is that vessel now?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know; I can not tell the Senator; but it cost the Government $1,894,000 and it was sold for $64,800. It was then repaired before it was delivered at a cost of $44,500, the Government getting $20,300 net for it. That hardly paid the expenses of the sale. I doubt if the Government received a cent; but that is not a very unusual thing, for ships were practically given away. As the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] suggests to me, what the Government received would not have gotten the barnacles off the vessel. The truth of the business is the most ideal man that could be found in America by the shipping interests when there were such things to be done, in my judgment, was Mr. O'Connor, and we all know that. Every Senator knows it just as well as I do. He is not the kind of a man to have charge of this enormous trust fund belonging to the American people. In addition to all this money that has been appropriated every year, he has a revolving fund of $325,000,000 that he lends out as heretofore shown at the most ridiculous rates of interest.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. Was it a part of the contract of sale of the vessel to which the Senator from Tennessee refers that the ship was to be conditioned before the sale was completed?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know what the contract was. Here is the record. What difference does it make? "Part of the contract!" The board made any kind of a contract the shipping interests wanted. As the Senator from Oklahoma suggests to me, the Government was lucky that the repairs did not exceed the price of the ship; and I am not so sure but that they did. Who knows what has happened about it? With unlimited sums of money, with almost billions of dollars worth of property in the hands of this man, with large appropriations in his control every year, it has been one of the most lamentable, indefensible activities that has ever been established by the Government at any time; and I am not so sure that it is not worse even than the Farm Board.

I am not sure that there is any charge that Mr. O'Connor and those associated with him gambled on the exchanges. They sold ships for nothing; they gave up the Government's property for nothing; they loaned the Government's money for rates of interest that brought practically nothing.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall yield in just a moment. However, I do not believe they gambled. I am not sure, but I do not think there is anything in the record to show that they gambled. The members of the Farm Board, through their cooperative associations, went on the wheat-gambling market and the cotton-gambling market, and lost the Government's money, but here it was just like pouring it in a rat hole, and all that with the Government $3,000,000,000 behind in its running expenses for this year. I now yield.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of proposing a unanimous-consent agreement. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate shall have concluded its business to-day it take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have brought out the fact as to one ship. I now want to call the attention of Senators who are still here to the fact that notwithstanding the low sale prices at which these ships were sold, the board also, after the contract was made and pursuant to it, made repairs on 18 vessels at a cost totaling $280,722. That is entirely apart from the two vessels sold at $1,000 each, which had cost hundreds of thousands of dollars. Yet we are asked to approve the nomination of this man.

Mr. President, I was asked the other afternoon about how the board arrived at these remarkable rates of interest, one-fourth of 1 per cent, three-eighths of 1 per cent, one-half of 1 per cent, and various other infinitesimally small rates of interest. I did not give the information as fully and as accurately as I now want to give it to the Senate.

I wish to invite attention to a very remarkable situation. I think the responsibility of the Shipping Board and of Mr. O'Connor has been sufficiently shown by the statements I have already made, but I desire to call attention to the fact——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield for that purpose?

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator withhold the point for a little while?

Mr. ASHURST. Very well.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the United States Government did not borrow the money the Shipping Board was lending at any such rate as one-fourth of 1 per cent, at any time under any circumstances. The rate of yield to the United States or to those from whom the United States borrowed, never was one-fourth of 1 per cent as certified by the Treasury; it never was three-eighths of 1 per cent; it never was one-half of 1 per cent; it never was 1 per cent. These ridiculous rates were never the rates of yield to those from whom the Government borrowed. The Government sold its obligations for about 3½ per cent, and after they were sold on the market they were quoted privately—not publicly, because there were no such quotations. For instance, if Senator A had a Government obligation of date June 1, 1930, for $100,000 and he was paid a rate of interest of from 3 to 3½ per cent and, for some reason, he sold it to Senator B at an increase of one-fourth of a per cent or one-half of a per cent, the Government took that private sale, of which there was no record, and used it as the rate of yield. It was a fraud upon the American people, an outrageous and unmitigated fraud; and yet we are asked to approve this whole miserable and indefensible business by the confirmation of the man who is responsible for it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. It might have been a fraud, but it was the law.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was not the law at all.

Mr. COPELAND. It was not the law?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; it was not the law. If the Senator had listened to what I have had to say he would know that the Government was paying 3½ per cent for its money, but at a private sale of an obligation the Government had already sold if a ridiculously low rate of interest was added that was certified as the yield, and on that basis the rate was determined to be one-half of 1 per cent. I will give the facts and figures.

I take an instance from one of the Dollar loans. I am not talking about dollars now, but I am talking about a man by the name of Dollar who ran the Dollar Shipping Corporation.

The loan agreement for the two Dollar loans of $5,280,500 each, $10,561,000 in all, was dated October 26, 1929. Keep that in mind. I have to-day ascertained from the Treasury Department the lowest rate of interest on any Government obligation on October 26, 1929, was 3.43 per cent, which is practically 3½ per cent. Hence had the board conformed to the opinion of the Attorney General as expressed as a part of their own views, the interest rate on that loan would have been 3½ per cent instead of one-fourth of 1 per cent and 1 per cent, respectively, and the United States would have collected $3,040,312 more interest than it will collect if the lower rate shall be maintained.

How did they arrive at the rates stated? They did not arrive at those rates from the yield on any Government obligation, but from the yield on a private transaction, and the very effort to fix it in that way shows that anybody could have defrauded the Government. How easy it would be for one member of a shipping corporation to buy in privately an outstanding obligation of the Government—and that is what was done—and return it to the seller 10 minutes afterwards, at a rate of interest of one-fourth a per cent or one-half a per cent higher, and then, after the transaction was completed, let the Treasury know about it and have it certified. Certainly, however, any such plan or system is an open door to fraud, and it ought not to be countenanced by the Senate at the expense of the American people to the extent of the enormous sum of $22,000,000.

I come next to the loan agreement of the Export Steamship Co. That is the one of which George H. Herberman—a favorite, as shown here, of the chairman of the board—is the head. It is dated August 31, 1929, and the lowest rate of yield for that date was 3.57 per cent, or over 3½ per cent. The United States would have collected from that company $1,783,437 more than it will collect at the lower rates if this agreement had provided for 3.57 per cent. It was just a gift. Mr. O'Connor in that transaction simply gave $1,783,437 of the Government's money—not his money, but a trust fund; not a gambling fund, but a trust fund—he just gave that to his friend George Herberman, and that is all there is to it.

Senators, are we going to confirm the nomination of a man who thus deals with the public moneys of the United States? It is inconceivable that this body will vote to confirm him.

I call attention next to the loan agreement for the Oceanic Steamship Co., dated October 25, 1929. The lowest rate of yield for that date was 3.44 per cent, hence the rate to the nearest one-eighth of 1 per cent was 3.4 per cent instead of one-half of 1 per cent. The Government lost by that transaction $1,128,125. The testimony here of others who did not stand so close to the Shipping Board is that they were right there trying to get loans at this low rate of interest, but they could not get them. They did not know why, but they could not get them. One man said that he had to pay as much as 2 per cent at the same time.

Similar results were had in the cases of 10 others; and many millions of dollars more would have been collected had the board applied the plan of the second half of the Attorney General's opinion.

A great deal has been said about the Attorney General's opinion. Mr. President, in his opinion the Attorney General said that it was the duty of the board—he did not use the word "duty," but that is the substance of what he said. I am not surprised that Mr. O'Connor did not know its meaning, but that is what the Attorney General's opinion was—that it was the duty of the board that a contract rate should be put in. Mr. Mellon advised a contract rate. Everybody who had anything to do with it advised a contract rate except Mr. O'Connor, and except his attorney, Mr. Parker, who is drawing $18,000 a year to protect the Government's interests; and nothing is shown here to demonstrate that he ever took any part in it.

Like another Senator who spoke here the other day, I think that instead of this man being confirmed the whole miserable business ought to be examined into, and these men turned out of office for being unfaithful trustees.

Right in that connection, to show you how we get along—those of us who want to stand for the Government and stand against this waste and extravagance and misuse of the Government's funds—let me say that last January, I think, I got a resolution through ordering an investigation of this very matter, among others, an investigation of the Shipping Board and its contracts; and what happened? A subcommittee of five was appointed to examine into it, consisting of two Democrats and three Republicans; and the chairman has never called that subcommittee together to make the examination. Why is it?

The great shipping interests have a man in there of exactly the kind they want, a man who suits them, a man who does what they want rather than what the Government wants. They have him there. He is exactly the kind of man they want. The great shipping interests are all for Mr. O'Connor. They want him confirmed; but what are the American people going to say about it? If the American people knew about what is going on in the Shipping Board, and how it is just a rat hole for their taxes to go into; if they knew that scores of millions per year are being spent upon it, or a total of nearly $4,000,000,000, they would rise and do away with those who are responsible for any such system of Government.

Commissions! Commissions! I have often felt during the last few years, since I have been brought in contact with these commissions which cost the Government enormous sums of money, which cost the Government more than the Government itself cost to run a few years ago, that I would never vote for another commission; and I have my very serious doubts, as long as I shall be here, whether I shall ever vote for any other commission; a commission where they "pass the buck," so to speak, from one to the other; where they pass responsibility, to use a proper word, from one to the other.

Take this very man. He first charged me with having defeated or postponed a bill on account of which, he said, the Government had lost money. When confronted with the indisputable fact, he had to admit that they had made no loans of this kind during the time that bill was under consideration. Then what did he do? He once said that the Treasury Department was to blame for it, and Senators here talk about the Treasury Department being to blame for it. First the Congress was to blame, then the Treasury Department was to blame, and then the Attorney General was to blame. Everybody was to blame except the man who did the work, the man who lost the money, the man who was directly responsible for the care and keeping of this trust fund intrusted to his hands. All of them were responsible except this man. The fact is, however, that he is the responsible man. The law puts him there in charge of this matter; and the Senate ought not to confirm him when it is known that he has already lost to the Government, in giving away interest rates to shipping companies, the enormous sum of $22,000,000.

Mr. President, the shipping companies not only got that from O'Connor, but they are getting vast subsidies besides. I will give you an illustration.

One of the shipping companies which operates largely out of New Orleans—I do not know whether it is a southern company or a northern company, but I think it operates out of New York also—is known as the United Fruit Co. The vice president of that company testified, Mr. O'Connor being present, that it was worth from two hundred to two hundred and fifty million dollars; that it was paying dividends; that it owed no money; that it discounted its bills; that it was paying its dividends; that it was able to look after itself in every way; and what was it getting? It was getting these loans to build its ships, three-quarters of the cost of the ship, including everything that furnished the ship, including kitchen ware, cooking utensils, table linen, tableware, everything that could not possibly last 20 years. They were borrowing three-quarters of the cost of ships and wares like that under a building program, so they say. The Government was furnishing three-quarters of the money, and at the end of five years the ships could not possibly be worth what the Government had in them. That was what was being done; and that company was borrowing this money at a fraction of 1 per cent.

When everybody else in the country was hard up, and had to pay large rates of interest, from 6 per cent on up, here were these favored shipping companies, under the beneficent rule of Mr. O'Connor, borrowing money at one-quarter of 1 per cent, and three-eighths of 1 per cent, and one-half of 1 per cent, and five-eighths of 1 per cent, and some had to pay the high price of three-quarters of 1 per cent; some had to pay the enormous sum of 1 per cent for their money; and, by the way, they have a bill over there to declare a moratorium on even that! Can you blame them? They are the favorites of the Government and the favorites of Mr. O'Connor. How nice and easy!

But that is not all they got. After they built their ships in that way at Government expense, they asked for a mail route, and, as one of them testified, they sometimes carried a hatful of mail—a hatful of mail! Sometimes two or three different shipping companies were operating on the same route, and they had to divide up the hatful of mail. It is in the testimony that one company that had a contract or subsidy of $102,000 were asked how much mail they carried. Their reply was that they carried 3 letters and 45 pounds of parcel post. That, under the international rates, would have cost $3 to carry; and under this beneficent law of the Postmaster General and the Shipping Board chairman and the Shipping Board itself they got $102,000 for carrying 3 letters and 45 pounds of parcel post!

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. Does not the Senator agree with me that the facts he is emphasizing here strongly argue against Government operation of anything of this sort?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know that they argue so strongly against Government operation. They are not half as strong against Government operation as they are against Government subsidies.

If the Senator will pardon me just a minute, I want to follow the line of the United Fruit Co. This great corporation, worth from two hundred to two hundred and fifty million dollars, gets in subsidies on three routes the enormous sum of $1,200,000 a year.

The Bible was never truer on any page of it than where the Savior of Mankind said:

> For unto everyone that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance; but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath.

Think of it, Mr. President! A great shipping company, worth $200,000,000, not owing a cent of bonded indebtedness, not owing debts at all, paying their bills in advance, paying their dividends in this time of depression, getting $1,200,000 a year as a subsidy from the Government; and, my friend, you are going to vote for this man. I saw in the paper this morning that there were 57,000 families in Philadelphia alone, in your State, that were in distress and did not have bread to sustain them.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VANDENBERG in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. FESS. What I stated was the result of my conviction, that if we put the Government into an operation of this sort, the Senator and I and others will complain of what is being done, or what is not being done, because it is not as we want it. We know all about this shipping situation. It was a mistake, I think, for us not to come out squarely and vote for a subsidy to make up the difference between the cost of operation here and in competing countries instead of calling it a mail subvention, because when we call it a mail subvention, and it is really a subsidy, which I have always supported, then we have such serious concrete examples as that which the Senator cites, where a line will carry a very small amount of mail and the Government pay a large amount.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is not a word in the law, Mr. President, about a mail subvention. There is not a word in the law about a mail subsidy. That has been scrupulously kept out of the law. I do not know why, but it was scrupulously kept out of the law. The Post Office Department is instructed to let these mail contracts out to the lowest bidder. Competition is required under the law, but there has been no competition. Thirty-nine out of the 44 contracts which have been let have been let without the slightest competition. They have been let at the highest rate the law allowed the department to pay. In other words, these shipping companies have simply become the wards and favorites of the Government, and are preying upon the Government. Think of it, with 10,000,000 people out of employment in this country, with 57,000 families in want and destitution in Philadelphia, and great, rich shipping companies receive something like $40,000,000, all told, in subsidies from our Government.

Think again, I say to my dear friend from Ohio, a scholarly and splendid man; think again, my friend, that this Government, while paying out this $40,000,000 in subsidies every year, is behind in running expenses in the enormous sum of $3,000,000,000. Is it not a remarkable situation, is it not a pitiful situation, that these great, rich, strong, splendid shipping companies are receiving this untold wealth out of the Treasury of the United States while 10,000,000 of our people are unemployed, in want, and in destitution?

I heard the Senator from Pennsylvania say that he was going to vote to continue this very system, with this very man at the head of it, and while he is voting to keep paying these great subsidies to the great, rich, powerful corporations of the country, 57,000 families in one of the cities in his State are in want and destitution.

I care not how you waste Government money; I am trying not to do it. I feel that I have a duty to perform. I examined the witnesses when they came before the committee. I know what has been done by this board. I know that the Government's moneys are being wasted. I know they are being thrown away. I know that these enormous riches are being thrown into the laps of great rich corporations, which do not deserve them. I know that they do not do anything that merits any such favor, and I am bringing the matter before the Senate and the country.

It may be possible that the Senate will confirm this man. He is responsible for the present situation more than any other man. He is there, being used by these very great interests, an ideal man for the place in the opinion of those who want to get gratuities from our Government and who want to reach their hands into the public till. It was easy when we had all the money in the world, but we have not that money now. There is a deficit in this year alone in our running expenses of $3,000,000,000; and if I know what figures mean, the deficit will be greater next year, even, with the billion dollars more in taxes you have put on the people, than it was this year.

Senators, when we finish with all the appropriation bills we will have spent this year more than $6,000,000,000, and we have revenue coming in of less than $2,000,000,000. If the new tax bill, which taxes everything, brings in as much in the way of taxes as we expect, another billion of dollars, that will make just three billion, and we will have spent more than twice that sum.

Where do we expect to go? How do you expect to run the Government if you are going to make gifts to the rich and powerful, as you are doing to the ship companies and the aircraft companies of the country?

Mr. President, in my judgment, what we ought to do is to abolish the Shipping Board. It would be cheaper to tell the great shipping companies, "If we have anything left, come and take it. We give it to you." It would be infinitely better than to keep up this great Shipping Board, at the great expense at which it has been kept up, $700,000,000 in 10 years; and if we have it another 10 years, with the official handling it, there will be another billion dollars more of the people's money spent. Where are we to get the money? You are grinding down the American people in taxes and giving the money away to the great corporations of the country which do not need it. None of them is in the hands of receivers; none of them is in want. They are living on the fat of the land. Why give them these great sums? Why keep up a board which continues to throw money into their laps?

Mr. President, I am here to-night speaking for a fair deal to the ordinary man. I am against subsidies of any kind. Talk about building up the American merchant marine; I doubt very much whether, with the expenditure of this $4,000,000,000 under this Shipping Board, we really have as good a merchant marine as we had when we started. Indeed, Mr. President, there are three of the companies I know of—and I will give their names, the United Fruit Co., the Munson Line, and the International Mercantile Marine—which get millions in subsidies out of this very fund, get their money at fractional parts of a per cent, on 20 year's time, with inadequate security, three of them asking now the privilege of not even paying interest on it, and they run more foreign ships than they run American ships.

Senators, is it possible to build up a merchant marine by subsidizing foreign ships? That is what we are doing. There is an amendment in one of the appropriation bills right now putting a limitation on some of the appropriations; and what is that limitation? It is a limitation that no part of the sum shall be paid to any concern that is running a foreign-flag ship in competition with an American-flag ship. Is that going to be agreed to? We have had the fight of our lives even to get it started; and I have no doubt that if it is possible to throw that provision out, it will be thrown out. What are we doing? Building up an American merchant marine? In heaven's name, no; you are building up a foreign merchant marine.

There is not a Senator in this body who does not know the history of the International Mercantile Marine; not one. It flies and has flown foreign flags for many years. Their president said that if we continue the present liberal policy and subsidize their ships he hopes that in time he might dispose of some of his foreign ships and buy American ships; and as long as he could get a subsidy and as long as he could get a rate of interest of a fourth, or a sixth, or an eighth, or a half of a per cent—getting the money virtually for nothing—on 20 years' time, he would let that sort of a ship carry the American flag, provided it would get a subsidy for carrying it.

Mr. President, some of these subsidies are the most outrageous pieces of business that the mind can conceive of. I asked one shipowner before the committee, "How much mail do you carry for this $400,000 you get?" "Well," he said, "the amount of mail carried is infinitesimal." "What do you mean by infinitesimal?" He said it was not material. "What do you mean by that?" He said it was not a hatful of mail.

On another route, from New Orleans to Cuba, according to the testimony, we are paying one shipping company $400,000 a year for carrying 759 pounds of mail, if I remember the figures correctly. Then, what did they do? There was a man by the name of Brush who went over to England and built a ship which carried freight cars. He got the money in England and built a ship which carried 90 freight cars and put that into the trade. He was flying the British flag; it was a British ship. He was an American running it, and he went to the Shipping Board and the Postmaster General and sought a mail contract. The very plain terms of the law prohibited a British ship, running under the British flag, from getting the mail contract. But they said, "Now, we will give you three-fourths of the cost of another ship like the one you have, carrying not less than 90 cars, and you can take that ship and put it under the American flag, and we will give you a contract." I do not remember the amount of the contract, but it was a very large sum—$600,000, as I remember.

"We will give you that contract, that subsidy, and we will make the other shipping concern that now carries 759 pounds of mail from New Orleans to Habana, Cuba, divide up with you so each of you will have just half." Ninety freight cars on one ship to carry less than 800 pounds of mail! Let me tell you the remarkable thing about it, the insincere and, as I believe, the dishonest thing about it. When the Post Office Department advertised that contract, they knew they were about to let a contract to carry less than 800 pounds of mail. The advertisement for the contract said that no bid would be received unless the company making the bid had a capacity of 90 freight cars on their ship, making it so that no other company in the world could bid on that subsidy except this one concern, and that one concern had been flying the British flag for years.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator will remember I asked where that particular ship was built, and, if I remember correctly, it was stated that it was built at Newcastle-on-Tyne?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. I asked why that ship was built in a foreign shipyard, and it was stated because they could build it for one-half there what it would cost them to build it in an American shipyard; in other words, they paid about $1,000,000 for that particular ship, while to build the same kind of a ship in an American shipyard would have cost approximately $2,000,000 or more.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; but the Government would pay three-fourths of the $2,000,000 as well as three-fourths of the cost of furnishing the ship, and in addition to that, after putting up three-fourths of the cost of building it in this country, then they put up a subsidy, the exact amount of which I do not remember, but my recollection is it was something like $600,000, for running the ship. It would have been cheaper for the Government to have given that man a pension of $100,000 and not let him run that ship in the American trade at all. That is what they are doing with Government money, and we are sitting here doing nothing when it is our duty to look into the qualifications of officers whose names are sent here by the President.

There was another company operating between Key West and Habana, Cuba, that had been carrying mail for years on a ship they owned, that carried only 30 cars. They were cut out by the advertisement. The advertisement was so worded that no other company in the world except this British concern could bid on it. No other company could comply with its requirements. Why is it necessary for the United States Government through its agencies to engage in dealing like that? It is little short of infamous. If this were a lawsuit it would be properly characterized, but here on the floor of the Senate I think as much as we can say is that it was infamous and wicked. It is a wicked waste of the people's money at a time when we can ill afford it, at a time when our Treasury is bankrupt to the extent of $3,000,000,000 for operating expenses for this year, and when we are facing a like situation for the next year. It is time this thing were brought to an end. What right have we to give away the people's money in any such fashion as that? And yet that is what we are doing, just taking a shovel and shoveling it out. If it were gold we could not shovel it out as fast as this board is shoveling it out under those circumstances.

Am I wrong about it? Does anybody dispute the facts? I will yield to any Senator who wants to defend the work of this board. I will gladly yield to him to let him defend the board. It can not be defended, and we all know it. We are not fooled about it. There is not a Senator here who does not know the facts. In private business we would not stand for it a moment. Forty-four subsidy contracts carrying these millions for 10 and 20 years under a law requiring competition, and not a competitive bid in 39 of them, and the others were competitive only in name; and yet we are upholding that thing by our vote on Mr. O'Connor.

Mr. President, I have from time to time furnished the Senate with these facts. They are indisputable. They are in four issues of the RECORD, and there is no doubt about them. The Dollar Steamship Line is borrowing money from the Federal Treasury at this time, paying one-fourth of 1 per cent interest, when the Government itself can not borrow under 3 per cent to save its immortal soul. If we continue these extravagant and indefensible appropriations, the time will not be long distant when the Government can not borrow money at any price.

There have been $6,000,000,000 of appropriations for the coming year, beginning July 1. Senators ought to want to know why it is. When we first came here last December the President sent a recommendation for an appropriation of $203,000,000 for the veterans. We appropriated it. He next sent in a recommendation for a deficiency appropriation of $125,000,000, and we appropriated it. He next sent in a message for the current expenses of the Government of $4,601,000,000. Then he sent in a message for farm bonds to help, not the farmers but to increase the value of the bonds in the hands of bondholders $125,000,000. Then for the banks and the railroads and the other corporations he recommended $2,000,000,000 for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Now we will have before us in a day or two a bill carrying $125,000,000 for a home-loan plan. I have no doubt it will be passed. We have $300,000,000 carried in the bill which the Senate has already passed for the relief work, and probably that is the only bill that is really defensible of all of them. All of these appropriations amount to the enormous sum of $6,675,000,000 in round numbers. Where are we going to get the money when we have less than $2,000,000,000 coming in now and a prospective $1,000,000,000 more? If this is continued we will be "in the hole" in the matter of running expenses more than $3,000,000,000 and probably nearer $4,000,000,000. If we continue these extravagant expenditures we are going to ruin our Government.

Mr. President, during the entire session I have stood here from time to time on the floor of the Senate and pleaded with the Senate and pleaded with those who represent our Government to reduce expenditures. I have pleaded with Government officers who came here to reduce their expenditures. "Let us cut down the expenditures of the Government." What has been the answer? Every Cabinet officer has written to the committee or come before the committee and said, "Oh, no; you can not cut my department."

There was a recommendation for an appropriation for the State Department of $400,000 for wine for foreign embassies. It was said that ambassadors and ministers of the United States in foreign countries appeared to better advantage when they had wine at their dinner parties. So we had a wine bill of $400,000.

When the Appropriations Committee cut it out the most earnest plea came from the State Department, "For heaven's sake, save our wine. We can not get along with our European neighbors and our foreign neighbors unless we serve them wine when they come to see us and when we give them dinner parties." Think of it! There are 10,000,000 people out of employment in the United States and yet the Government is spending $400,000 for wine for our ambassadors to entertain. O Mr. President, "Willful waste makes woeful want" is an old saying; and if we continue this waste, this extravagance, this turning over of these immense sums to boards that squander it and throw it away and misuse it, there will come a day of reckoning just as sure as we sit here.

It is for these reasons, Mr. President, that I am here pleading with the Senate to reject the nomination of Mr. O'Connor, who is responsible for such a large part of this loss. There is no telling how much it will be altogether. Millions have been spent by the Shipping Board and there is nothing to show for them. It may be that it is a race between the Farm Board and the Shipping Board. I do not know which is the most extravagant. The Shipping Board had so much more to be extravagant with. The poor Farm Board had only $500,000,000. They are at the doors of Congress begging for more. They want another appropriation. They have been outraged because we do not turn over the Treasury to them, the poor bankrupt Treasury, the borrowing powers of the Government to-day, and yet in comparison with the Shipping Board they have just one-eighth as much.

The Farm Board have received $4,000,000,000 which they have squandered in just reckless confusion. When it is wound up I doubt whether the country will get $12,000,000 from it all. There has been $4,000,000,000 of the people's money expended and nothing to show in return. When I think of the Shipping Board and the Farm Board I am reminded of an old Sunday school song that I used to attempt to sing when I was a boy:

Nothing but leaves.
The spirit grieves
O'er years of wasted life;
O'er sins indulged while conscience slept,
O'er vows and promises unkept,
And read through years of strife
Nothing but leaves, nothing but leaves!

And so it is with this board. What have we got to show? Nothing but leaves! Nothing but leaves!

They have given money away; they have wasted their opportunities; they have destroyed the board by extravagant, riotous living; they have paid out and squandered untold riches of this Government; they and other boards have brought the Treasury to bankruptcy and ruin, with nothing to show for it.

Do not let it be said of us—

O'er sins indulged while conscience slept.

Let us do our duty. We ought to abolish this kind of board; we ought to refuse to confirm unfaithful servants such as the chairman of the Shipping Board, and I appeal to the Senate not to do so. I am going to make a motion at the proper time when other Senators shall have finished to recommit this nomination to the Committee on Commerce and let them examine into it. This man ought not to be confirmed until a committee has examined into the matter and called him before it.

I am told—I do not know how much truth there is in it—that his record is in the hands of the administration and that the Department of Justice compiled that record. Why is it not before the Senate? We are asked to confirm his nomination. Why are not the facts here? Let us permit the nomination to go back to the Committee on Commerce, from which it came. It was not considered there; it was merely reported out as a matter of course.

There is another reason why the nomination should be recommitted. The Economy Committee has reduced the membership of this board to three. There is no reason for continuing this man in office; there are plenty of commissioners remaining to do the work. So I shall ask the Senate, when we get ready to vote, to recommit the nomination. We shall not make any mistake by doing that, as would be realized if Senators had studied this question as I have. The very silence of Senators with reference to this nomination shows that they know that this man is not fitted for the office to which he has been nominated. I shall therefore ask that the nomination be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

EXHIBIT A

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
Washington, June 20, 1932.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In reply to your inquiry of June 20, 1932, I take pleasure in giving you below the amounts which have been appropriated for the purposes of the Shipping Board and Merchant Fleet Corporation from the inception of the Shipping Board through the fiscal year 1931, divided into two groups, the first, fiscal years 1917, 1918, and 1919, which we have considered the World War period, and the second the fiscal years 1920 to 1931, inclusive:

Fiscal year:
1917	$50,100,000.00
1918	1,067,533,816.55
1919	1,810,190,032.80
Total	2,927,823,849.35
Less amounts returned to United States Treasury and amounts reappropriated from year to year	4,870,208.86
Net appropriations	2,922,953,640.49
Fiscal year:
1920	857,272,986.00
1921	37,298,133.33
1922	103,959,000.00
1923	$70,459,000.00
1924	50,411,500.00
1925	30,344,000.00
1926	24,330,000.00
1927 [1]	24,198,574.00
1928 [1]	22,290,000.00
1929 [1]	18,688,750.00
1930 [1]	16,494,000.00
1931 [1]	11,346,000.00
Total	767,091,943.33
Total, fiscal years 1920 to 1931, inclusive	767,091,943.33
Less amounts returned to United States Treasury and amounts reappropriated from year to year	74,777,324.52
Net appropriations, 1920 to 1931, inclusive	692,314,618.81
Net appropriation total, fiscal years 1917 to 1931, inclusive	3,615,268,259.30

In connection with the second paragraph of your letter, I wish to advise that the appropriation acts for the fiscal years 1921 and 1922 authorized sales receipts totaling $70,000,000 and $55,000,000, respectively, to be used for administrative expenses of the Merchant Fleet Corporation for payment of claims, losses from operations of vessels, and completion of vessels under construction. The records of the Merchant Fleet Corporation indicate that the total amount of sales receipts used under this authority was $107,619,426.55.

Furthermore, the appropriation acts for the fiscal years 1925 to 1931, inclusive, authorized the use of sales receipts totaling $22,325,000 to defray expenses of liquidation. The total amount authorized has not been used, however, $5,476,219.19 having been transferred to the construction loan fund instead of being used to defray liquidation expenses.

None of the amounts mentioned in the two preceding paragraphs are included in the tabulation given in the first part of this letter.

Very truly yours,

S. S. SANDBERG, Vice Chairman.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, my interest in this nomination is, to a very large extent, impersonal. The nominee is not from my State or from my immediate locality, and I have with him only that acquaintance which many other Senators have with a large number of public officials in the city of Washington. I would be content to keep silent now if it were not for my profound conviction that this man has been unjustly and unfairly assailed here in this body and elsewhere.

The Senator who has just taken his seat has discussed the responsibility of this nominee with respect to the construction-loan fund, so called, and he has also spoken with respect to the postal contracts let under the terms of the 1928 merchant marine act. Because I believe all Senators here fully understand that the Shipping Board has no responsibility whatsoever with respect to the letting of mail contracts under the 1928 act, I pass by without answer that part of the Senator's remarks. I do feel, however, that, in order fairly to pass upon the culpability or nonculpability of this nominee with respect to the construction-loan fund it is essential that the Senators here gathered should have before them a history of the construction-loan fund, its present terms, and the action of the Shipping Board thereunder.

The construction-loan fund was written originally into the merchant marine act of 1920. By the appropriate section of that act there was created this construction-loan fund—for what purpose? To aid—and that is the language of the law—to aid private citizens in the building in American yards of American ships for the American merchant marine, and, as declared in the 1920 act, for the larger purpose of building up an American merchant marine that would contribute to the national defense and would carry the major portion of the commerce of the United States in American-flag ships.

That original section of the law conferred upon the Shipping Board complete discretion as to the matter of interest rates on loans made from this fund. I am only going to speak about interest rates because that seems to be the matter particularly in controversy here. The act gave to the Shipping Board with respect to rates upon the loans authorized by that act complete and full discretion. We amended that law in 1924 by increasing the total amount of the fund, and in that 1924 act we made a change with respect to interest rates. We provided while vessels were under construction and while they were operated in the coastwise trade of the United States that the interest rate should be within the discretion of the Shipping Board but not less than 5¼ per cent. We further provided in that legislation—and when I say "we" I mean, of course, the Congress of the United States—that while vessels were operated in the foreign trade, the rate of interest should be in the discretion of the board, but not at a less rate than 4¼ per cent, making a reduction of 1 per cent in the minimum rate authorized while the vessel is engaged in the foreign trade. In 1927 we amended the law but made no change in respect to the authority and with respect to the responsibility of the board concerning interest rates.

[1] These appropriations, since the fiscal year 1927, include $10,000,000 for one year and $5,000,000 for four years, or since 1928, and represent a special fund designated as fighting fund, and are not to be used for operations by the Shipping Board. This amount is still in the hands of the Treasurer, and can not be used except for the purpose for which it was appropriated.—S. S. S.

Then we passed the act of 1928, known as the merchant marine act of 1928. In that legislation we made a radical change in policy with respect to the interest rate. With respect to loans made while a vessel was under construction and while she was in the coastwise trade, we retained the provision in the 1924 law giving the Shipping Board discretion as to the rate of interest but with the limitation that the rate should not be less than 5¼ per cent; but when we came to fix the rate which should be charged while the vessel was in the foreign trade, we took from the Shipping Board absolutely and completely all discretion and we wrote into the law a formula by which the rate should be determined. That formula was, as I think all Senators know, that the rate on these loans should be the lowest rate of yield on any Government security outstanding at the time the loan was made, with certain exceptions named in the law.

Why did we make that substantial change in policy? We made it, let me say to the Senate, because during the eight years theretofore while this construction loan fund provision had been upon the statute books it had failed completely to do for shipping in the foreign trade what the purpose of Congress was with respect to it. During those eight years, from 1920 to 1928, there had been made but 14 loans of a total amount of $18,629,000, and there had not been built for our overseas trade in the whole span of eight years in a single shipyard of America, whether on the coast of the Atlantic or on the Gulf or upon the Pacific, a single American ship, while in approximately that same time foreign nations had built more than 1,500 new ships and they had put into the trade of the United States nearly 800 new and modern ships, competing for the trade of this country, and for the trade of the world to and from this country.

In the face of that failure of the construction-loan fund, we wrote into the law a formula which would result in a rate of interest low enough, as we believed, to be an effective aid to Americans who were willing to undertake the hazardous task of building ships in American yards and entering into the foreign trade of the United States. We fixed a rate of interest, as we believed, sufficiently low to overcome or offset in some degree the cost differentials against the United States in the building of ships. We not only wrote that definite formula into the law, the application of which should determine the rate of interest, but we took from the Shipping Board the right to apply that formula, and we said that the rate of interest under that rule should be as certified by the Secretary of the Treasury. In that act of 1928—and I emphasize it because it was a fundamental change and has a bearing upon the acts of the board and upon the acts of the nominee now here—we took from this nominee and we took from the Shipping Board all discretion with respect to the rule as to the rates of interest while the ship was in the foreign trade. And it is these rates that are criticized.

I think it is fair to say that when that rule was written into the law there was no thought in the mind of any person sponsoring the legislation that there would be any such rates of interest carried on loans as have resulted from the application of that formula.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GLENN in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Who was to determine whether loans should be made?

Mr. WHITE. It rested with the Shipping Board to determine whether or not loans should be made; but when it was determined that a loan should be made, so far as the Shipping Board was concerned, authority with respect to the rate while the vessel was in the foreign trade ceased.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. And the Treasury had authority over the rate of interest?

Mr. WHITE. The Treasury had authority to take the rule or the formula written into the law and apply it to the facts and certify the rate so found to the Shipping Board, and this certification by the Treasury governed the rate while the vessel was in the foreign trade.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was it the rate of yield of a person who had bought an obligation from the Government or was it the rate of yield of any Government obligation outstanding as between private individuals?

Mr. WHITE. The language speaks for itself. The law says it was the rate of yield on any Government security outstanding, and that means, I take it, any Government security outstanding in all the United States by whomsoever held. I hope the Senator will permit me to proceed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one further question. Did the Government borrow money at any time from anybody at one-quarter of 1 per cent or one-eighth of 1 per cent or one-half of 1 per cent or even at 1¾ per cent? Will the Senator answer that?

Mr. WHITE. I will come to that as I proceed, unless I forget what I want to say, and, if I do, if some one will remind me I will come back to it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will remind the Senator of it.

Mr. WHITE. At the time the legislation was enacted, no one had in mind that contracts would be entered into carrying rates of interest as low as some of those subsequently certified.

Mr. McKELLAR rose.

Mr. WHITE. Please do not interrupt me. I did not interrupt the Senator from Tennessee.

At the time the law was under consideration, and when the law was enacted, the rate of yield on Government securities outstanding was approximately 3.22 per cent. It fluctuated somewhat, but that was approximately the rate of yield on Government securities outstanding—3.22 per cent. I have no doubt that every Senator who voted for this law believed that a rate somewhere in that neighborhood would be the rate carried by the loans.

What happened after that to change the situation so completely and to bring about a result so different than that we anticipated?

In the fall of 1929 we saw that period and that time of abundant money in the United States, with the resulting downward tendency of interest rates. That was not all, however, nor was it the chief factor in the working out of these rates. In June, 1929, Congress legislated amending section 5 of the Second Liberty Loan act; and by this legislation of June, 1929, we authorized the Treasury of the United States to issue short-time securities at such rates of interest as the Treasury might see fit; and we provided for the issuance by the Treasury of so-called Treasury bills on a discount basis and payable at maturity without interest.

Under the authority of that law, along about December of 1929 the Treasury began that new method of financing involved in selling these short-time securities, and these Treasury notes to which I have referred. Of course, the result was that there was a rate of yield upon these securities that no one ever dreamed of when this shipping legislation was under consideration in January and February and March and April, 1928.

When was it first brought to the notice of the Shipping Board that these low rates were about to come into force and that certificates were coming into the Shipping Board at rates less than 3 per cent?

I stand here and say to the Members of the Senate that from the time the merchant marine act of 1928 was written until April 1, 1930, there had not been a certificate of less than 3 per cent. There had not been a loan made bearing interest of less than 3 per cent.

On April 1, 1930, there was received by the Shipping Board the first certificate under the law bearing a rate of interest of less than 3 per cent. That was the certificate that was received in the case of the Santa Clara. That loan bore a rate of interest of 2¾ per cent, as certified to the board by the Treasury Department. That was received, as I say, on the 1st day of April, 1930.

On the 2d day of April the board, I am told, confronted with that problem, discussed the matter in their meeting. On April 9, the board again discussed the matter in their meeting, and considered whether they were obligated to accept that rate as certified by the Secretary of the Treasury, or what their authority was in the matter.

About that time, I think on the 10th day of April, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]—his attention having been called to the situation—wrote the Shipping Board a letter inquiring as to interest rates, and the Shipping Board replied giving the information called for so far as they were able to do so.

Then on April 15 the chairman of the Shipping Board—this nominee who is here—called the matter officially and formally to the attention of the entire Shipping Board, in a written statement prepared by him, and in which he invited the consideration of the Shipping Board as to what should be done and could be done in the premises.

A committee was then or immediately thereafter named to wait upon the Secretary of the Treasury to see if there could not be some other interpretation put upon this law, under which the Shipping Board might make these loans at other rates than those which resulted from this formula under this new method of financing.

The Senator from Tennessee stated that no loans were made until some months after that certificate came in, with the exception of two, I believe. I am not sure whether it is two or one, but let us call it two. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] on or about April 24, 1930, reported to the Senate his amendment changing the law with respect to these interest rates, changing that rule as carried in the act of 1928. The amendment of the Senator from Michigan provided that no loans should thereafter be made carrying a rate of interest less than 3½ per cent.

For some reason—I do not know what; I see no advantage in indulging in recriminations—that legislation lay here in the Senate for almost 10 months of time without action by this body; and while no new contracts were entered into in that span of 10 months, except the two mentioned by the Senator from Tennessee, there came into the Shipping Board 13 certifications of interest at rates substantially below 3 per cent under contracts theretofore entered into.

That is the history of this matter. I stand here and I say to every Senator within the sound of my voice that with respect to these loans, and with respect to the rates on them, this commissioner had not the responsibility of those here in this body who voted for the formula which under this changed method of financing worked out these regrettable results. I have no more sympathy with the rates of interest on a number of these loans than has the Senator from Tennessee; but, unlike the Senator from Tennessee—and he did not vote for the legislation, so it is not his responsibility—I am unwilling to make out of this situation a Roman holiday. I am unwilling to make this commissioner a vicarious sacrifice. I want the Senate of the United States to face its part of the responsibility, and acknowledge that it voted for the law which properly applied under its terms as written worked out in a few instances results which we all regret. But what has been the result as a whole? I am almost tempted to talk about some of these mail contracts, but they are really beside the issue here.

It is rather difficult to say what I want to say about this table relating to loans and which purports to prove a loss on interest of $22,000,000 without seeming to challenge the sincerity of the Senator from Tennessee. I beg every Senator here to believe that I have no such purpose. I give him full credit for the highest motives; but this table was prepared, not by the Senator from Tennessee, but by a discharged employee of the Shipping Board; and I say to the Senate that there is hardly a truthful or accurate statement in the three pages making up this report.

What are the facts about the operation of this construction loan fund to this very hour? There have been made, or authorized, in the 10 and more years of its life to March of this year, loans totaling almost $152,000,000. Of all of these loans, there are just 20 in the total amount of $36,600,000 that bear a rate of interest less than 3 per cent, and of them only 11 bear an average rate of interest of less than 3 per cent. When we take the rate of interest during the period of construction of 5¼ per cent, when we take the rate of interest during the time these ships are employed in the coastwise trade, and when we take the rate of interest during the time the ship is employed in the foreign trade, and average them up, what do we find? On all these loans to April, 1932, the average rate paid to the Government of the United States is 4¼ per cent, and the rate on all these loans while the ships are in the foreign trade averages 3.08 per cent.

That is the story of these loans in general and without going into details with respect to them, as I might wish to do if it were not already late.

Something has been said of the enormous expense of this shipping program to the Government of the United States. It is true that as the outcome of the war, and of the great shipbuilding program then undertaken, we spent, in the construction of Government ships, almost three and a half billion dollars. We built 2,500 ships of ten and one-quarter million tons. When this great war was over we found that those mass-production ships, while they served the immediate demand, were totally inadequate for the purposes of the commerce of the United States in time of peace and to compete with the ships of other nations.

When 1927 and 1928 came and this legislation was under consideration, we faced very definite alternatives. One was to do nothing, to pursue a policy of inaction, under which the American ship would disappear from the seas, under which the percentage of American goods carried by American ships would constantly decrease and the percentage of goods carried in foreign ships would constantly increase. I say to you, Senators, that the percentage of American goods carried in foreign ships measures America's commercial dependence upon alien and upon foreign interests.

During the period from 1921 up until 1931 we paid foreign ships, for carrying the products of the American farm and the American factory and for bringing to this country those things which American dollars bought, $6,000,000,000—money gone, never to return to this country of ours. And in 1928, as I said, we faced these alternatives:

We could do nothing, and we could see our ships disappear and our dependence upon foreigners grow; and we could see the time coming when we would be carrying in our ships, as we did for the 10 years before 1914, 10 per cent of our goods, and paying foreigners to carry 90 per cent of our goods; we could foresee $3,500,000,000 spent for our ships gone forever. The second alternative we faced was governmental operation; and what did that involve? Why, Senators, that involved a replacement program; for our fleet had lived half its useful life, and the testimony before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries in the House of Representatives showed that if we had begun a replacement program for these vessels of ours we would have faced an expenditure within 10 years of time of from five hundred million dollars to a billion dollars in capital expenditure; and everyone knew that the Congress of the United States would not authorize such an expenditure. So, as the final alternative, we wrote into the law provisions that would get the Government out of the shipping business, that would give us a privately owned merchant marine which would contribute to the national defense, which would result in carrying on our ships and the major portion of the commerce of the United States under our flag. That is the course we determined upon and one of the means we adopted to these ends was this amended construction-loan fund.

What is the net result of that construction-loan fund? Under that construction-loan fund there have been built in American yards, or there are under construction in American yards, or there are to be constructed in American yards, under existing contracts, 59 new American ships, and there is to be the reconditioning of 33 other American ships. This contemplated an expenditure in our shipyards of approximately $318,000,000, and it involved a program that would give employment to 35,000 Americans a year for more than three years of time.

Under this law, and under this construction-loan fund, and under the ocean mail titles of the law, we have been saving money for the United States. From 1921 to 1926 we spent in this country to meet the operating loss of the United States Shipping Board a little more than $29,000,000 a year, and during the same period of time the administrative expenses were something over $11,000,000 a year, an outlay of more than $40,000,000 a year, not counting the cost of the laid-up fleet, not taking into account interest, depreciation, or other proper items of expenditure.

In 1931, what was the picture? In 1931 the operating loss of the Shipping Board was a little over $4,000,000, and we paid for administrative expenses about $2,900,000, a total of $6,900,000, a reduction since this law was written on the books in the cost to this Government of $33,000,000 a year. Against this saving add the expense of this construction-loan fund, taking these figures inserted in the RECORD by the Senator from Tennessee, every one of which I think merits challenge, and the cost of the ocean mail title, and you have a total cost in 1931 of a little over $17,000,000, or approximately one-half of the expense to this Government in the operation of its ships in the years 1921 to 1926.

Mr. President, this nominee is here before us. I have tried to sketch hurriedly and imperfectly the record of the Shipping Board with respect to these loans. At no time when these loans were made of which complaint is here uttered was the chairman of the board upon the loan committee of the Shipping Board. He was one of seven members of the board.

Senators, when this merchant marine legislation was introduced, it carried no such provision as is now contained in the law. I introduced in the House in February, 1928, a bill proposing a change in this construction-loan fund. I proposed to vest discretion in the Shipping Board as to the rate on loans, with a minimum rate while vessels were in the foreign trade of 2½ per cent. I say it of my own knowledge and upon my own responsibility that this chairman of the Shipping Board approved that provision and, to the best of my knowledge and belief, he at no time ever gave his sanction to this particular loan-rate provision that was in fact written into the law, although the legislation generally had the sanction and the approval of the entire Shipping Board.

Mr. President, this man, so far as I know, has been faithful, he has been intelligent, he has been honest, in the performance of his duty; and I believe as fully and as firmly as I believe anything that this opposition is a proposal to offer him up, as I have said, as a vicarious sacrifice, shifting from our shoulders, to him, responsibility with respect to these loans which was never properly his.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I want to recall the Senator to his chronology, because I think the crux of the case lies in the chronology.

If the personnel of the Shipping Board is to be challenged for its relationship to these low interest rates, which none of us condone, it has always seemed to me that the challenge lies against the failure of the personnel of the Shipping Board itself to have initiated an inquiry into these low rates, and the possibility of their advantageous correction. Do I understand, from the Senator's previous narration of the facts, that it is his dependable information that the Shipping Board initiated such an inquiry a week or 10 days before the receipt of my letter, which heretofore has presumably been the first information the board had upon the subject?

Mr. WHITE. Let me repeat what I said. I said that the first certificate received from the Treasury Department certifying a rate of less than 3 per cent was dated March 31, and was received by the board on April 1, 1930. I am informed that immediately that certificate challenged the attention of the attorneys of the board and the construction-loan committee of the board, of which the chairman of the full board was not a member. I am told, and I believe, that in a meeting held on April 2, the next day after it was received, it was discussed, and the rights and responsibilities of the Shipping Board under it were considered. In fact, I am told, and believe it to be true, that the check due the borrowing company was held up by the board for two or three days while they considered what their rights and their responsibilities were. Then, again, on April 9, they held another meeting of the board at which, I am informed, this whole matter was further discussed.

Whether that constituted the initiation which the Senator has in mind or not I do not know, but I do feel sure that the situation excited the interest and the apprehension of the board, and that when the Senator's letter was received they were giving a most careful consideration to the situation which confronted them.

As to what degree the Senator's letter influenced the Shipping Board or Chairman O'Connor in this act of April 15, I can only conjecture—I hope it did have its influence, as assuredly any letter from the Senator should—but on the 15th of April the chairman of the board presented a memorandum to the board discussing the situation, and immediately thereafter a committee waited upon the Secretary of the Treasury to see whether the Secretary could not change the rule as to yield certifications which were in anticipation. That is as near as I can come to a direct answer to the Senator's question.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me phrase my question differently. Of course, I have no pride of opinion in my letter or its authority in relation to the correcting of this outrageous situation, but I do have a very keen interest, as a measure of the diligence of the personnel of the Shipping Board, in knowing the Senator's judgment as to whether or not the correction would have been made had not the letter been received. So I ask the Senator this categorical question. Is it his judgment that the shipping-rate situation would have been speedily corrected upon the initiative and action of the board itself?

Mr. WHITE. I think the Shipping Board—and I have already said this—and all the members thereof, were greatly and gravely concerned about the situation which had been so suddenly thrust on them. It is a pure matter of speculation as to whether they would have acted without the Senator's letter or not, but the fact remains that they did consider the matter of the rate, that it became a subject of discussion in the board, that they went to the Secretary of the Treasury about it, and it is a matter of record that they whole-heartedly approved the legislation initiated by the Senator. I think that is as complete an answer as I can make to the Senator's question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator while a Member of the House introduced this amendment to the then law himself, did he not, at the request of the board?

Mr. WHITE. To what amendment does the Senator refer?

Mr. McKELLAR. To amend subsection (d) of section 11 of the merchant marine act of June 5, 1920, as amended by section 301 of the merchant marine act of May 22, 1928? Did not the Senator introduce that bill at the instance of the Shipping Board?

Mr. WHITE. My recollection of the matter is that that was introduced by Representative FREE and not by me.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was introduced at the request of the Shipping Board, was it not?

Mr. WHITE. I have no knowledge as to that.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was so stated.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It was Representative FREE's bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have that bill before me, and I want to ask the Senator this question: In that bill, which was reported and passed by the House, were not the same interest rates repeated? I will read the bill. It is as follows:

> During any period in which the vessel is operated exclusively in coastwise trade, or is inactive, the rate of interest shall be as fixed by the board, but not less than 5¼ per cent per annum. During the period in which a vessel for the foreign trade is being constructed, equipped, reconditioned, remodeled, or improved; and/or during any period in which such a vessel is operated in foreign trade the rate shall be the lowest rate of yield (to the nearest one-eighth of 1 per cent) of any Government obligation bearing a date of issue subsequent to April 6, 1917 (except Postal Savings bonds), and outstanding at the time the loan is made by the board, as certified by the Secretary of the Treasury to the board upon its request. The rates of interest herein prescribed shall also apply to advances hereafter made on contracts heretofore entered into.

Mr. WHITE. May I look at it?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly. Mr. O'Connor testified he had that bill introduced in the House. The Senator says the board has something to do with changing the rates. I know that when that bill got over to the Senate, upon recommendation of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], all of that language was stricken out and a provision inserted, " as fixed by the board, but not less than 3½ per cent per annum." That was what did the work.

The truth of the business is, I will say to the Senator and to the Senate, that the board had nothing under heaven to do with changing the rates of interest, which the Senator from Maine himself has said were deplorable and indefensible, as I understood him just a few moments ago; but the correction was made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the committee in the Senate, and that is why we got relief from the rates which the Senator from Maine has not defended, which the Senator from New York has not defended, and which no Senator can defend on this floor.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, a significant fact is that that bill was introduced in the House in January, 1930, or earlier, and I have already said over and over again that the first certificate bearing a lower rate of interest than 3 per cent came in April, 1930, at least three months after the legislation was introduced in the House, and at a time when the board had no reason to believe that any such rate of certificated interest would come to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GLENN in the chair). The question is, Shall the Senate advise and consent to the nomination?

Mr. McKELLAR. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

So T. V. O'Connor was confirmed as a member of the Shipping Board for the term of six years.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the term of this nominee expired on the 9th of June. I ask unanimous consent that the confirmation may be as of that date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. Can that be done?

Mr. COPELAND. It was done six years ago under exactly similar circumstances.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall object for the present until I can look into it.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not see how by any action we could change what the law would be on the subject.

Mr. McKELLAR. As at present advised I would be unwilling to grant unanimous consent until I have looked into it, so I shall have to object.

Mr. COPELAND. I shall not press the matter, but it so happened that six years ago in relation to the same appointment we had similar circumstances. However, if my friend from Tennessee presses his objection, of course, I can not insist.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The clerk will state the next business on the Executive Calendar.

THE JUDICIARY—B. B. MONTGOMERY

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of B. B. Montgomery to be United States marshal, northern district of Mississippi.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I ask that the nomination may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may we not have some understanding about the nomination? It has gone over for two or three weeks. I do not think the Senate, without reason, ought to keep continuing to put it over.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It has gone over several times because of the absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS]. I was willing to take it up, so far as I was concerned.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Mississippi is not opposed to confirmation, is he?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do not know that he is; but it was not taken up because of his absence. It could have been taken up, but out of regard for the Senator from Mississippi and upon suggestion it went over.

Mr. NORRIS. I am satisfied the Senator from Mississippi is in favor of the confirmation.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, it is my understanding that both Senators from Mississippi are in favor of the confirmation.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not see why this should go over on account of the absence of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am opposed to the confirmation. I was willing to have the matter come up at former sessions, but I was assured that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] was absent, as indeed he was, therefore the matter went over. I did not wish to discuss it in his absence. Therefore I am now suggesting that it go over, and if at the next executive session we can take it up, it will be entirely agreeable to me; but I am not ready this evening.

Mr. NORRIS. We might have that understanding, then.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. So far as I am concerned, it can be taken up at the next executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the nomination will be passed over.

UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Edgar Bernard Brossard to be a member of the United States Tariff Commission.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is interested in this nomination and suggested this afternoon that it might go over. I request that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be passed over.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of John Farr Simmons to be consul general.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

FEDERAL FARM BOARD

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of C. B. Denman to be a member of the Federal Farm Board.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be passed over.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. ODDIE. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc, with the exception of Calendar No. 4793, Charles J. Moos, of St. Paul. At the request of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] I ask that that nomination may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination of Charles J. Moos, St. Paul, will be passed over, and, without objection, all other nominations for postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

THE COAST GUARD

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations for the Coast Guard.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask unanimous consent that nominations for the Coast Guard be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

The Chief Clerk read sundry nominations for the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Col. Robert Swepston Abernethy to be brigadier general.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

TRANSFER OF LAND IN FAYETTE COUNTY, KY.

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate now return to the consideration of legislative business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BARKLEY, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10825) to authorize the transfer of certain lands in Fayette County, Ky., to the Commonwealth of Kentucky, reported it without amendment.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 4694) to amend section 812 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 846) thereon.

PUBLIC-WORKS PROGRAM—AMENDMENT

Mr. STEIWER and Mr. CAREY, jointly, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H. R. 12445) to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by authorizing and expediting a public-works program and providing a method of financing such program, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 10825, which is at the clerk's desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. May the clerk report the bill?

The Chief Clerk read the bill (H. R. 10825) to authorize the transfer of certain land in Fayette County, Ky., to the Commonwealth of Kentucky, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the Commonwealth of Kentucky without expense to the Government of the United States all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to certain lands in Fayette County, Ky. (being a strip of land fronting on the Lexington Hospital Reservation), described as follows:

Beginning at a point in the center line of the Leestown and Frankfort Pike at the corner of Patrick Sharkey's property, which point is station 67+75 in the center line of survey made by the State highway department, and on file at their office at Frankfort, Ky.; thence along the center of said pike for the following seven courses: North 49° 32′ west a distance of 976 feet; thence north 51° 26′ west a distance of 892 feet; thence north 49° 20′ west a distance of 1,070 feet; thence north 47° 50′ west a distance of 577 feet; thence north 48° 3′ west a distance of 264 feet; thence north 50° 3′ west a distance of 300 feet; thence north 49° 20′ west a distance of 663 feet to a point on the northwest line of the Viley Pike, said point being south 48° 20′ west a distance of 14 feet more or less from station 115+15 of the above-mentioned highway survey, and in the west boundary line of the property of Ella Staley; thence along said boundary line of the property of Ella Staley south 48° 20′ west a distance of 16 feet, more or less, to the south boundary line of the proposed 60-foot right of way; thence along said south boundary line of the new Leestown Road survey for the following nine courses: South 47° 14′ east a distance of 435.5 feet to the point of beginning of a 30-minute curve; thence left along the said 30-minute curve a distance of 534.7 feet; thence south 49°54′ east a distance of 207.8 feet to the point of beginning of another 30-minute curve; thence right along the last-named 30-minute curve a distance of 398.9 feet; thence south 47° 54′ east a distance of 521.5 feet to the point of beginning of another 30-minute curve; thence left along the last-named 30-minute curve a distance of 738.5 feet; thence south 51° 35′ east a distance of 866.4 feet to the point of beginning of a 1-minute curve; thence right along said 1-minute curve a distance of 149.2 feet; thence south 50° 5′ east a distance of 890.7 feet to a steel pin in the west boundary line of Patrick Sharkey's property; thence along said west boundary line north 30° 52′ east a distance of 30 feet to the point of beginning, and being a strip of land required for the 60-foot right of way of the Leestown and Frankfort Road, as shown on map of said road by the Kentucky State Highway Department.

Mr. McNARY. Will the Senator explain the emergency of this bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. This is a bill authorizing the Veterans' Bureau to convey to the State of Kentucky a 15-foot strip of land along the public highway in front of the veterans' hospital at Lexington in order that the State may improve a road. The Veterans' Bureau wants it, the State wants it, and everybody else wants it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Is the bill on the calendar?

Mr. BARKLEY. It was reported unanimously to-day by the Senate, but it is not on the printed calendar.

Mr. McNARY. Has the bill passed the House?

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill has passed the House.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL PETITIONS

Mr. ASHURST presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from E. W. Montgomery, president of the chamber of commerce; Walter T. Martin; and A. C. Taylor, all of Phoenix, Ariz., praying for the maintenance of adequate appropriations for the Air Mail Service, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LOANS TO STATES—SYSTEM OF HIGHWAYS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12445) to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by authorizing and expediting a public-works program and providing a method of financing such program.

Mr. PITTMAN. I submit an amendment and ask to have it reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a pending amendment, the Chair will state to the Senator from Nevada, the amendment being that of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum, the Senator from Montana not being present.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, have we resumed the consideration of the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFICER. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from Montana and the Senator from Michigan, who are opposing the amendment, are presently absent from the Chamber, and I ask that the amendment go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PITTMAN. I should like to have my amendment stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 101, at the end of line 17, it is proposed to insert the following:

(b) For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of subdivision (a) of this section there is hereby created a central project board to be composed of a director of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, designated by the board of directors of the corporation for that purpose, the Director of the Federal Employment Stabilization Board, an engineer in the Government service, to be designated by the President, and an engineer who has had contracting experience, and an architect, to be selected from civil life by the corporation. There shall be in each of the 12 Federal reserve districts a district project board to be composed of a representative of the corporation, to be designated by the corporation, and an engineer who has had contracting experience, and an architect, to be selected from civil life by the central project board. It shall be the duty of each district project board to make an investigation and survey with a view to ascertaining the projects within its district with respect to which loans might be made under such subdivision; and upon receipt by the corporation of an application for a loan under such subdivision it shall be referred to the direct project board for the proper district for examination and report as to whether the project covered by the application is of a class with respect to which loans may be made under such subdivision unless the corporation has in its possession sufficient information upon which to act. The report of the district project board, together with its recommendations, shall be transmitted to the central project board which shall consider the same and make a report thereon to the corporation, with its recommendations. The members of such boards chosen from civil life shall serve without compensation except that the corporation shall pay to each such member his necessary traveling expenses. All expenses of such boards shall be paid by the corporation under regulations to be prescribed by the board of directors thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PITTMAN. Does the Senator from Utah desire to ask a question?

Mr. KING. Yes; I desire the Senator to explain the amendment, which is apparently very important. I should like to ask if it is intended to restrict the discretion and the power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. PITTMAN. Not at all. The amendment is intended to facilitate the action of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It is evident that from all parts of the United States there will be applications for loans by self-liquidating projects. Information must be had with regard to them either through agents of the corporation or through some advisory board. So, for zoning purposes, I took the Federal reserve zones of the United States and provide for an advisory board in each one of those zones, such boards being supposed to be familiar with the character of the projects in the respective zones. The boards are to be composed, as stated in the amendment, of an engineer, a contractor, an architect, and a business man, who are to draw no salary whatever, but who are to constitute advisory boards pure and simple on the theory that they know what are bona fide projects within the respective zones and what are not.

Then there is a separate board, a central board, composed quite similarly that is not supposed to be partial at all, but is to look over the whole United States. The central board submits to the local boards only the one question, "Is it the type of project that is contemplated under this act?" The information is furnished to the central board which passes on it and then turns the facts over to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is not bound by the report made to it, nor does it have to delay for the purpose of obtaining the advice if it has the information already in its possession.

Those who favor this amendment thought that it would save time, that such boards would possibly be more impartial than a board appointed from Washington to go out and ascertain what was going on in the various zones. The effort was to get a competent board by having a contractor, an engineer, an architect, and a business man in each zone to pass on the question as to whether the applicant was the type of self-liquidating corporation contemplated by the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In many instances would not the primary question be a legal one as to whether they qualified legally?

Mr. PITTMAN. If doubt rose on that question the facts would be certified to the central board. In other words, when a corporation claims that it is a self-liquidating corporation, it applies of course directly to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; that corporation says, "We never have heard of this concern," and so it sends out a local board to find out what it is, what its business is, what its purpose is, what its royalties are, with the request that the facts be transmitted right away.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. This is a very important amendment and one which seems to have meritorious features. I was wondering why the committee which prepared this bill did not anticipate the steps which were necessary to fully advise the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as to the worthiness of the many applications and why it is submitted now, so to speak, in the last hour.

Mr. PITTMAN. The reason is this: In discussing the bill in the House this question was raised, and it has been raised in the press two or three times. The question was what extra aids should we give to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to investigate the applicants for loans, and in discussing the matter a suggestion was made, not exactly in this form but in a form very much like it. It was thought that if we could have a board of eminent experts in each zone, who would draw no salary at all, men of high standing who would be capable of considering all the facts and instantly report them back, it would facilitate the work. That is what we thought. We also provided that it is only advisory both as to the facts and as to the recommendations, and if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has already the information in its possession or can obtain the information, then this delay is not necessary.

If there is any debate on it or if the Senate desires an opportunity to study the amendment further, personally I do not desire to urge it to-night.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, let me inquire of the able Senator in charge of the bill if he desires to go forward with the consideration of the bill further to-night.

Mr. WAGNER. I think we have done enough for the day. Several Senators who wanted to participate in the further discussion of the bill have already left, and I suggest that we recess at this time.

"THE WAY OUT FOR THE FARMER"—INTERVIEW WITH HON. FRANK O. LOWDEN

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an interview with Hon. Frank O. Lowden, of Illinois, entitled "The Way Out for the Farmer."

There being no objection, the interview was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Sunday Star, Washington, D. C., June 19, 1932]

THE WAY OUT FOR THE FARMER

By Oren Arnold

If you could spend two hours with him, you'd surely conclude that what this country needs is to squat on its haunches over there in the shade and enjoy a whittle and talk with farmer Frank Lowden. Frank Lowden is a distinguished tiller of the soil from down Illinois way, and also from over in Arizona. Either address is good for he has had crops in both States.

That is, he is about the biggest farmer in America, in many ways, and besides being ex-Governor of Illinois, he almost got put into the White House a few years ago!

For three years Farmer Lowden represented a rural district in Congress. For four years he was Illinois' governor, and that State is fourth in value of agricultural products. He has studied farm problems in the United States and in Europe intensely for 15 years, and his own big experimental farm at Oregon, Ill., is internationally known.

"American farmers pay $6,000,000,000 for manufactured goods each year," says he, "They supply one-eighth of the railroad tonnage and one-half the total value of our exports.

"They comprise nearly 30 per cent of our total population, but they receive less than 10 per cent of the national income and pay 30 per cent of that for taxes. Those are just some of the things we might mention.

"Still, we can not lament a situation and leave it to right itself. Happiness and prosperity won't flourish as volunteer crops."

But Mr. Lowden has learned some good tricks about cultivating prosperity and happiness. Right now he calculates he can see some big changes coming along for the farmer, probably for the better, and he has some really startling suggestions to be considered. Here, sit down on this bale of alfalfa, and let's listen:

"I've discovered that city residents really love the farm, after all, and yearn for it." (He's talking casually now from his cottage porch in Chandler, Ariz.) "This means they are sympathetic at heart.

"It's an old story to say that city people and farmers are mutually dependent, but it's true now more than ever, and both groups had better admit it. In the civilized world it is only among rural peoples that the birth rate is keeping ahead of the death rate of mankind.

"Hence we see that our cities must constantly get new recruits from the farms, where health conditions are different and 'the good life' is more attainable. We all recognize, too, the obvious fact that the country must clothe and feed the teeming populations in our industrial centers, indeed, must furnish the very raw products upon which those industries thrive.

"But all that is material. What I'm getting at is something deeper, something spiritual, I suppose. Something stronger.

"You know the myth of Antæus? No matter how often he was overthrown, his strength was always miraculously renewed whenever he touched the earth. That's the point—human society must persistently keep its contact with the earth, or it is doomed.

"If we let anything break this contact, we'll fall; remember that Hercules discovered the source of Antæus's strength and, by holding him aloft, easily achieved a victory over him. Keep close to the earth, this year and in all the years to come."

And that's Governor Lowden's "philosophy of the farm."

One development in American agriculture which has interested him greatly, especially in the past three years, has been farm electrification. This interest doubtless was increased because of a somewhat startling application of electric power to farm life in Arizona, where for nine years he and Mrs. Lowden have made their winter home.

There in Maricopa County, where their farm is located, every major roadway is threaded with power lines, carrying inexpensive electricity to the front gate of every farm home. There the rural housewives have been emancipated by this modern miracle of pressing a button and seeing the milking, the churning, the cooking, the cooling, the washing, the sweeping, all silently and efficiently done.

There the electricity comes from the farmer-owned hydroelectric power plants, a part of the great power and irrigation system headed by Roosevelt Dam, so that a farmer-user of electricity is buying his "juice" from himself and pocketing the proceeds. It is a new departure in the application of domestic electric power, and Frank Lowden has seen the importance of it.

"Everywhere electricity is fast replacing steam in the industrial world," said Mr. Lowden.

"Electric power, like steam, can best be generated in large units, but unlike steam, electricity is easily distributed over a wide area.

"In the past, with steam power, the tendency was toward a centralization of population. It seems very likely that the rapid application of electric power will bring about just the opposite—a decentralization of peoples, and perhaps the greatest beneficiary of this movement will be the farm.

"We find an increasing number of farms employing electric power. In these farm homes a great portion of the drudgery which heretofore has been inseparable from farm living is being abolished, and when we abolish drudgery we make the farm the most attractive place in the world to live.

"Much talk is heard now of 'factoryizing' the farm. If this means to replace man power with mechanical power wherever possible, then I'm heartily in favor of it.

"But if this 'factoryizing' means allowing large corporations to take over the land and specialize on one or two crops, thereby forcing out the family-sized farms of the area, I think it is neither desirable nor practical. In that effort we have, perhaps, gone too far already.

"Agriculture was much less distressed when the farm was a self-supporting home. Those, I suppose, are the 'good old days' often referred to. But when the factories came along and began producing commodities in quantity the farmer could buy them easier than he could make them at home.

"At first glance this looks like an admirable situation. But the hitch arose when the farmer found himself unable to maintain a fair basis of exchange.

"That is, the exchange value of his farm produce fell way below the value of the things he had to start buying from the factories, and so the new ideal failed in practice. Thus our big American problem is to help him stabilize this rate of exchange."

And Mr. Lowden believes he sees an opportunity for the farmer to retrace the steps taken toward impractical "factoryization." He thinks electricity is about to enable Mr. and Mrs. Hank Farmer everywhere to do at home again many of the things they had recently relegated to the factory.

An instance he names is bakery bread. Because neat-appearing "factory" wagons came to deliver bread almost everywhere cheaply, many families, in town and country alike, came to rely upon them, and the art of home bread making has waned.

But now that farmers have electric mixers, electric beaters, and automatic electric ovens that even cook to perfection while the housewife is away from home, the old art is being revived, minus the bulk of drudgery.

It is possible again to cite a specific example of this right in the Salt River Valley of Arizona where Mr. and Mrs. Lowden have spent the past nine winters. The irrigation association of about 9,000 farmers there operate their own retail electric appliance store, and the electric range and electric mixer are among the most popular items.

"It is, of course, well known that the farmer receives a ridiculously low price for much of the raw material he grows, and buys back the finished product at a high price," says Mr. Lowden. "All consumers profit but little by low-priced wheat or cheap cotton. The profits are spread around too generously between the two ends.

"Thus, to the extent at which the farmer makes his own commodities for home use does he escape the loss spread between the price paid at the farm and the retail stores. He may even be able to make a profit, in some instances, by himself retailing a finished product made in his own individual 'factory.'

"These I hope and believe are some of the benefits of decentralization which the farmer will receive, as a result of a new machine-age application based on electricity."

Another far-reaching problem which has concerned Mr. Lowden for many years, and which seems to be growing in importance annually, is that of farm taxation.

It was alarming to him to discover that farmers receive but 10 per cent of the national income and then pay 30 per cent of their net income in taxes. But the cause of it, and the correction, is a serious thing which can not be dismissed in a brief conversation.

Still another national disgrace, which must inevitably be paid for, is that the steady deterioration of American farm land is being ignored, says Governor Lowden.

"It is imperative that we awake to the need of proper and persistent refertilization," this distinguished farmer declares. "We have been taking strength out of our soils, and putting nothing back, for too many years.

"Our lands are losing their richness and, of course, their productivity. Land that is overworked through constant cropping loses its humus or organic matter, and erosion sets in at an increasing rate. We must quickly adopt some plan to conserve our soil's strength.

"Just think what it would mean in the conservation of our soil if every third year we would plant every acre in clover or some other legume. But that will be well-nigh impossible.

"Suppose, however, that the States, recognizing the threatened danger to all arable lands, made this agreement with the farmer—to exempt from taxation all lands planted to some good legumes. It would not only be practicable, it would be highly advisable. Even the Federal Government might well add its encouragement by paying a reasonable bounty to the owners of land on acres that were allowed to rest and recuperate their strength for future service.

"More than 360,000,000 acres of land are cultivated in the United States. If we could plant just 20 per cent (a very minimum of what is needed) of this to legumes, and pay a Federal bounty of $2 per acre on the soil so resting, the cost would be under $150,000,000. This amount is considerably less than the Government now receives through customs offices in the supposed interest of farming."

Another grievous error committed in America is the persistent farming of lands that could not be profitable under any circumstances, and the persistent growing of crops of which there already is an oversupply. Call it stubbornness, call it ignorance, call it what you will, but the fact remains that it causes a tremendous national waste.

But Mr. Lowden again has the germ of an idea which may, ultimately, be the solution to that problem, too.

"Something comparable to our city zoning systems must come to rural regions of the United States," he predicts. "As cities became larger and larger it was found necessary to restrict the citizen in the use of his land. Building restrictions of many kinds followed. City zoning was introduced.

"I will not venture to say in detail just how this zoning idea can be applied to our farming areas, but for our own good some sort of restriction and orderly planning of crops on a big scale must be considered.

"I suspect the answer may come through the farmers themselves, through organization and cooperation."

Incidentally, Florence Pullman Lowden, the ex-governor's wife, quite agrees with him about the advantages of rural life.

"If Mr. Lowden were a poor man again and we had to choose between a humble farm and a job in the city," she says, "I wouldn't hesitate a minute. I'd choose the farm home, however small."

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JUNE 20, 1932

The House was called to order at 12 o'clock noon by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The Clerk read the following communication from the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. RAINEY].

THE SPEAKER'S ROOM,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., June 20, 1932.

I hereby designate Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD to act as Speaker pro tempore to-day.

HENRY T. RAINEY,
Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. BANKHEAD took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, "in Thy presence there is fullness of joy, at Thy right hand there are pleasures forevermore." O inspire us with this truth—so wonderful, so vast, and so glorious. How constant and how unvarying is Thy providence at all times. Fill us with sacred impulse as we approach our duties; may they be performed with well-ordered understanding. Do Thou invigorate our purposes; to them add earnestness, endeavor, and righteous achievement. Make adversity a blessing wherever found; bless it in all its forms—at the fireside, at the wayside, and in all the relations of life. O bring peace to all our land, not languid peace, but peace based upon justice, upon knowledge, upon truth, and upon patriotic devotion. Spare us from all bitterness, from sharp passions of the unguarded moment, and allow not care and anxiety to break our spirits in any way. In the name of our Saviour. Amen.

The journal of the proceedings of Saturday, June 18, 1932, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11452) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. HALE, Mr. KEYES, Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. BROUSSARD, and Mr. TRAMMELL to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—THE PILLARS OF OUR SOCIAL STRUCTURE

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, there are five institutions which condition our national life, liberty, property rights, and general welfare. These are the state, business, home, school, and church. In my address at the presentation of a bust of George Washington to the State of Wisconsin I said:

> Were Washington with us to-day, what deplorable and disheartening national evils he would witness to his great grief—evils that disrupt our homes, deteriorate our schools, destroy our faith in God, disturb our national prosperity, and endanger our peace at home while entangling us in wars abroad.

I wish now to dwell upon these evils more in detail, particularly pointing out what the institutions of business, home, school, and church must do to enable us to raise our moral standards as a people, for only by raising our moral standards can we raise the levels of life, liberty, security of property and happiness. It is fitting to recall at this point the profound truth that "it is righteousness that exalteth a nation."

BUSINESS AND AGRICULTURE

My first appeal is for the preservation of our industrial well-being. It is self-evident to any student who observes the trend of events that the small business man is being pushed aside or driven out by the tremendous concentration of wealth in the hands of the few big-business interests. We see this concentration going on in our banking system, more especially in the ever-enlarging system of chain stores, and in the most dangerous development of hidden combinations of all forms of big business in what is known as holding companies.

While I sympathize greatly with the victims of this increasing and intensified concentration of wealth that is taking place in our country and which is driving to the wall the smaller business men in our villages and cities, I am particularly alarmed over the condition to-day of our fellow citizens on our farms; for the history of nations shows that when evils become so acute that they can not be endured by the men and women who toil upon the soil, then governments are overthrown and new governments take the place of those which failed to accord them the necessary protection.

I wish especially to emphasize the fact that the plight of agriculture is far from being solely the concern of the farmer and his family. We do not always stop to think of the close relationship between the farm and other business. The reduced buying power of the farmer directly affects the city merchant, and eventually it affects every one of us. Each city is honeycombed with agricultural interests. Consider the stockyards, packing plants, commission houses, implement stores, flour and feed mills. Beyond these there is a secondary list—drug, hardware, and dry-goods stores whose merchandise go to the country trade; railroads which move agricultural products; banks, insurance companies, and real-estate men.

Agriculture is our basic business industry. It is the backbone of our national existence. One-fourth of our population is on the farm, and our land wealth comprises one-fifth of our national wealth. As agriculture was the first to collapse under the depression, so should it receive our first and greatest efforts to afford relief. It demands the application of more equitable standards.

Grave inequalities have crept into our legislative system, especially since the war, granting special privileges to certain groups at the expense of others. We have shamefully discriminated against the farmer, forgetting that without his long hours of hard toil we could not live. We have given him no special privileges, not even adequate protection. We guard our manufacturers' profits by levying high import duties on foreign competing merchandise; we pour concessions into the laps of men whose business investments consist of banks, stocks, and bonds through the Federal reserve act, the Glass-Steagall bill, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Likewise, we favor railroad investors by passing the Esch-Cummins law; and where it has not worked to suit them, they beg Congress for a gift of $360,000,000.

This represents their liability under the recapture provision of that law, according to an estimate made by the Interstate Commerce Commission. We safeguard labor by the immigration law, the 8-hour law, and the Adamson Act. We have permanent commissions and boards functioning in the interest of these groups. But what does agriculture have, or has ever had, to place it on a parity with other industries in legislative privileges or on an economic equality with them in our national life?

Agriculture took its first big slump in 1920. Soon after the passage of the Esch-Cummins Act, at the time the railroads went back to private ownership, freight rates on agricultural products were increased nearly 60 per cent. The price the farmer received for his goods in the world market decreased by the amount of freight advance, so that what served as a boon to railroad owners really started the farmers' distress. A far greater cause of agricultural depression, however, was the 1920 deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board, occasioning approximately $18,000,000,000 decline in land values and $14,000,000,000 in loss on the 1920 and 1921 crops. By this forced panic agriculture, which had not yet recuperated, slumped still farther. Big business profited by this debacle, and proceeded to blow its inflation bubble until it burst in 1929, hurling agriculture still deeper into depression. The inequity of our tariff system, discriminating between agriculture and other businesses in rate fixing, has left the farmer helpless. Monopolies are made possible by our patent laws and corporation laws, which tend always to suck the lifeblood of the farmer. Now that he can not pay the price for new machinery these vulture trusts have raised the price of repair parts 25 per cent.

It is obvious that there is a tragic unbalance in our economic system. The farmer has suffered first and longest and hardest; but can our country not see that when his producing power and buying power are lost, America is lost?

Alexander Hamilton, the author of the protective system, favored protection for agriculture side by side with that of industry. Said he:

> Bounties are sometimes not only the best but the only proper expedient for uniting the encouragement of a new object of agriculture with that of a new object of manufacture * * *.
> The true way to conciliate these two interests is to lay a duty on foreign manufactures of the material the growth of which is desired to be encouraged, and to apply the produce of that duty, by way of bounty, either upon the production of the material itself or upon its manufacture at home or upon both.

If, then, it is inherent in our protective system that industry and agriculture walk side by side, why have we elevated the one at the expense of the other?

The evils of special privileges are neutralized when all have equal special privileges. To repeal all protective measures that have been enacted is, for the present, impossible. If it is not feasble to wipe out a system so firmly established in our economic life, we must raise the farmer to the protected level of the manufacturer, to the beneficiary level of the banker and the railroad owner. Fairness and justice demand it.

The way has been paved to some extent by the Federal Farm Board, even though its powers are limited. The agricultural marketing act, which created this board, although merely experimental, brought some good in that it has encouraged and developed cooperative marketing and has given the farmer greater bargaining power. This law, as you will recall, was a compromise measure growing out of the McNary-Haugen bill. The bills before the House covering the equalization-fee, debenture, and farm-allotment plans seek to strengthen and widen the powers of the board so as to make it more useful to the farmers.

At the time of the previous consideration in Congress of the equalization fee and the export debenture, I voted for them because I felt that they provided the only means of doing justice to the farmer. Both failed of enactment. Now our attention is again being directed to these measures and to the farm-allotment plan. All these have the object in view of giving the farmer the benefit of the tariff on his product by taking the surplus off the domestic market. They are based upon the idea of segregating all farm crops into two parts, that for domestic consumption and the surplus for sale abroad, and of making the tariff rates effective on both portions. The proposed regulations for stabilizing price levels, curtailing speculation, and making tariff effective on the domestic portion would rest on the commodities rather than on the individual producer. Other advantages of the proposed legislation would be to give farmers and their organizations complete control in marketing their commodities; to make production cost the indicator, but not the guaranty, in determining price; to allow the sale of the entire crop, and to prevent importation of foreign agricultural products that would affect adversely domestic markets.

In previous years the American Farm Bureau supported only the equalization fee, which provides that a levy be made on the whole product sufficient to meet the loss of the surplus sold on the world market. The National Grange formerly backed only the export debenture plan, which provides that a debenture certificate be issued to the exporter equal to one-half of the tariff levied upon imports of such articles. This plan has worked successfully in many foreign countries. Until this year the Farmers' Union has favored only the cost of production plan, under which sale of farm products in this country below production cost would be prohibited; the amount necessary for home consumption would be determined and its price fixed, and just so much and at such price could the farmers sell their crop. Now all these farm organizations have united, and at this session of Congress are advocating a "triple-barreled" program, which consists of the three plans included in the bills before the House—equalization-fee, debenture, and farm-allotment plans. Under the proposed legislation the Federal Farm Board is empowered to employ any one or any combination of these three plans. The joint statement of these organizations as presented to Congress is as follows:

> We insist that the agricultural marketing act shall be continued in force as a principal method of stimulating cooperative marketing and advancing the cause of disposing of surpluses so that they will not depress the domestic price.
> The marketing act should be amended immediately by the inclusion of the debenture plan, equalization fee, or any other method which will make it effective in controlling surpluses, in making tariffs effective on farm crops, and in securing for American farmers cost of production on those portions of their crops sold for consumption in our own Nation; nothing less is a remedy for the agricultural marketing problem.

To confirm or disprove my own leaning toward the debenture, I sent the equivalent of a questionnaire to presidents of land-grant colleges, professors of our agricultural colleges, and many eminent scientists. They have responded overwhelmingly in favor of the debenture plan, under which a tariff is made effective on imported farm products whenever an exportable surplus is produced.

If, as has been said, the export debenture or the equalization fee is "turning the tariff halfway round for the benefit of the farmer," is not that the best argument in favor of these plans? Should not the farmer, in all fairness, have the advantage of any or all of these plans whereby he may be protected as the manufacturer is protected by the tariff?

A vicious circle is at work in the case of the farmer. Banks refuse to loan money to satisfy mortgages until a crop is produced, and, in addition, they press payment of matured notes. If these are not met, they take the stock that the farmer needs in producing his crop.

The farmer has long since come to the realization that he must do everything for himself that is humanly possible, and he is willing to do it. He appreciates and practices increased efficiency—abandonment of low-producing acreage, diversification of crops, and due care of his finances. Given by law equality with other industries, the farm population will again be put on a paying basis; but if injustice is allowed to continue, there is a natural law that deals with such infractions of equity. History shows us that the fall of every empire began with the decay of agriculture.

The farmer suffers unbearably when statistics as the following are true: The Department of Agriculture gives as the farmer's price level of farm commodities as of May 15, 1932, at 56 per cent of the pre-war level, and the price the farmer has to pay for the merchandise he buys at 112 per cent of the prices for the same period. Stating it briefly, the farmer's dollar is worth only 50 cents. Lest we forget, I wish to bring to your attention also the fact that taxes on farm property have increased from the index of 100 in 1914, to 266 in 1930.

The need for Government intervention in the farmer's economic welfare is apparent to all. Let us, therefore, use the power given us by the people in rescuing one-fourth of our population now suffering immeasurably from discriminatory privileges accorded other interests. Let us give our undivided support to the bills now before the House, whose declared policy is—

That speculation in agricultural commodities and their food products should be minimized, that cooperative associations should be stimulated under the direction and ownership of the producers of farm commodities, and, finally, that advantageous domestic markets should be preserved for farm crops by the prevention of depressing influences on the prices of the commodities incident to surpluses of such crops.

And last but not least, let us not forget that just so surely as effect follows cause, the farmer will not perish alone. He will drag down with him the perpetrators of the injustice he has been made to suffer, unless he is placed on a basis of economic equality with other industries.

The distress of agriculture can be traced directly to our disregard of the farmer's right to justice and equality before the law. The present plight of agriculture is the most eloquent plea possible to us that we raise our moral standards.

OUR HOMES

The welfare of the Nation depends largely upon the moral condition of the home. It is the first and most important pillar of our country. This is where the good wife and mother plays the most effective and important part in national affairs. Theodore Roosevelt, that great lover of home life, once said:

Questions like the tariff and currency are literally of no consequence whatever compared with the vital questions of having the unit of our social life, the home, preserved.

The preservation of this unit is to-day being attacked from many sources. Of these agencies that threaten to destroy all that is best in the home—love and virtue—the divorce court and the motion picture are in need of stricter and more careful surveillance and regulation.

In the right sort of home will be found what centuries ago a Roman consul well described as "the lifelong fellowship of all divine and human rights." Unfortunately, however, many American homes are not of that kind. We have with us far too much Reno. Domestic tragedies are too frequent for the safety of our Nation. The family is the unit of the Nation, and when these units decay the national life must become decadent and corrupted. This is significant when we see the lives of 10,000,000 people, from 1906 to 1916, affected by divorce. A divorce is granted every five minutes. There is a divorce for every five marriages.

Since woman has demanded and has rightly received her privilege of a share in rearing the structure of government—the ballot—she has inherited with it responsibilities. Upon her particularly must rest the duty of seeing that only such laws as are right or moral shall be imposed upon the home, for she knows best its needs, its dangers, and its unlimited influence and power. While laws control to some extent the acts of man and protect individual rights, they can not create or control human affections nor virtues. Lowered standards of life must inevitably result in broken homes and broken lives. The women of the country must ever be on guard against economic, physical, and moral hazards that come in many forms to the home. The divorce court is one and the obscene motion picture is another. There is too much Hollywood with us, as well as too much Reno.

Love for the story is as old as man. To-day we have the most far-reaching story-teller of all time—the movie giant that "bestrides the world." Every experience known to man is woven into the stories that are spread upon the screen; every emotion of which he is capable is deliberately stirred.

The American motion-picture industry has come to wield a subtle influence greater than any other single influence in the United States. Approximately 10,000,000 tickets are sold every day. Roger Babson, the eminent statistician, sent questionnaires to the principals of the schools of New England, asking which of the institutions to-day had the most influence over children, and 70 per cent of these principals replied "the movies."

This largest industry of our country represents an investment of $2,500,000,000. It is practically controlled by five men. What are the ideals of these five men wielding such tremendous influence in the American home? Are they intent on building high moral standards, training good citizenship, upholding the traditions of our fathers, or are they out for financial gain at any price?

Psychology avers that "suggestion tends to reproduce itself in infinite action." It is generally agreed that crime is on the increase, and there is a world-wide disregard for law and order. In this country it is popular to blame all that is wrong with us on prohibition or on President Hoover. But the fact is that this letting down of moral standards, this disregard for spiritual values, is over the whole world. It is evident that there is some powerful influence at work that is common to all countries. Roger Babson tells us that his statistics and study lead directly to the movies as the basic cause.

This is a serious finding because 90 per cent of the pictures that are shown in the different countries of the world are of American manufacture. Protests are coming from many countries against this "Niagara of scum" that is flowing out of America. An English paper has the following comment:

How America can permit these contemptible pictures of her youth and of her society to be distributed over the civilized world passes understanding.

Lord Irwin, late Viceroy of India, said that the three major things that made the white man lose reputation and prestige in the Orient were: The defeat of Russia by Japan, the World War, and the corrupting character of American movies.

Fifty Americans living in Tokyo, Japan, appealed to America to control the shipment of her films to that country, as a protection of America's reputation in Japan. And in speaking of the destructive moral effects which the movies are having in that island empire, a Japanese non-Christian said that their "greatest problem was with the films that came from America, which were highly detrimental to the morals of the Japanese people."

John R. Mott, chairman of the International Missionary Council, listed above all obstacles to missionary work "the bad movies which show race superiority, and inflame the grosser passions." In view of the fact that the church is sending millions of dollars to foreign missions it is a travesty to send motion pictures that defame our own country, destroy the work of the missionaries, and demoralize the youth of the world, "fouling civilization."

Serious as this far-reaching work of demoralization is in its effect on the youth of other countries, it must make us look with deep concern on its influence over our own young people. The police department of Chicago reported to the motion-picture producers of California that even old-time crooks were studying motion-picture hold-up men, drug peddlers, white slavers, automobile thieves, and every other variety of criminal in order to get pointers from screen actors.

Thousands of children pour through the children's court of which Franklin C. Hoyt is judge. He issues the following warning:

Children flock into a motion-picture house and witness scenes of marital infidelity, murder, and rapine that 50 years ago would have been considered unfit for adults; so-called "sex" pictures, for instance, children should never see.

In this connection Prof. E. A. Ross, University of Wisconsin, says:

If we wish to become the most erotic people in the civilized world, we have only to yield up our children to the demands of the moving-picture industry.

This huge industry, with its tremendous power, politically and morally, is practically unregulated. It is said that the worst methods of the worst trusts, combines, and syndicates in the history of America are charged against this Motion Picture Trust. Artists, actors, distributors, exhibitors, and independent producers complain of its unfair tactics. Art is sacrificed to pure commercialism, in that even a good short story or novel is, in its adaptation, shorn of its meritorious qualities and distorted into a mere appeal to the grosser emotions. When a law is introduced in any State or in Congress toward regulation of this industry, this trust throws its full strength into a lobby to defeat legislation. Government censorship is at present inadequate, and only a few States have laws properly supervising motion pictures. Parent-teachers' associations, women's clubs, church organizations, and welfare groups have appealed for action. Bills have been introduced in Congress attempting to compel the industry to reform itself, but little has been accomplished.

Senator BROOKHART introduced a bill that would change the vicious practice of block booking. By this system the local theater is compelled to take whatever the producers see fit to send for a year's supply and accept it sight unseen, good or bad. Since the only point of contact and means of adjustment between the public and the picture industry is the local theater manager, the public is at the mercy of the producers, who force indecent pictures upon the exhibitor and upon the community. Parents must take earnest interest in this matter and see to it that legislation is enacted to protect the child and the home from the vicious influence of this unregulated industry.

OUR SCHOOLS

First the home, and next the school, is the pillar upon which much of the welfare of our country rests. In my studies in the University of Wisconsin under Professor Stearns, who was one of the best teachers of pedagogy in the country and afterwards as superintendent of schools, I had an opportunity to learn something of the teacher's and the pupil's problems. These problems are more complex to-day than ever before. It is plain to be seen that the children of this generation must be guided through a difficult and dangerous world, through a world of marvelous opportunities. Infidelity in the domestic realm, greed in the economic, laxity in the moral, and unbelief in the spiritual are battering away at the foundations of society. With the perpetuity of these foundations we are all equally concerned.

We see that we are in a period of changing civilization. Readjustment to present environment must be made. Standards of honesty, truth, and virtue must be restored, even raised, or society will lapse into a riot. There is a moral order that is as exact as the physical order. In this moral order we find law, uniformity, and dependability. Violations of the moral law bring certain consequences, as proportionate and as perfectly adapted as violations of the physical law. For that reason education of the head fails unless supported by a corresponding education of the heart in the fundamental principles of courage, honesty, virtue, truth, love, and reverence. Calvin Coolidge rightly said:

> An intellectual growth will only add to our confusion unless it is accompanied by moral growth.

If our science outstrips our morals, we shall find ourselves but victims of our own advancement.

A large share of this readjustment then must fall on the school and on the teacher. "The child," says the Jewish Talmud, "is the foundation of the universe." It has always been true, and likely will continue to be so, that no one except the mother in the home has so great an influence over the destiny of the child as has the teacher. For this reason no one should be better qualified or more alert than the teacher to help guide upwards our changing and shaky democracy that is to-day so much on trial. This the teacher can do both in the wise use of his own citizenship and in the responsible training of young Americans to meet the social problems they will be called upon to face; and which they can face adequately only if they have developed the proper intelligence and character, with sufficient physical, moral, and spiritual courage.

The school deals directly with the mind and with that spiritual element we call truth. It is only by means of the truth that any of our social conflicts can be met or solved. "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Not only know the truth, but love it, and die for it if need be. But one of the real reasons the world finds itself so hampered and hindered in its onward and upward progress is that there has come to be so little regard for the truth. Falsehood is not hated, shunned, crushed wherever it raises its head. On the other hand, it has intrenched itself in most of the departments of life. It is evident to the teachers in the schools where destructive and false theories are advanced as facts. It is evident in the home where the artificial and the unreal are substituted for that which is genuine and fundamental. It is evident in the business world in glaring forms of gambling, watered stock, and in all manner of dishonest business practices. Confidence is everywhere shaken. We must bring back to our everyday life, and everyday problems, truth. Centuries ago the question was asked, What is truth? We may ask to-day, Is truth in the saddle, or greed, selfishness, and appetite?

To restore truth to its proper place—the home, the school, the church, the statesman—the electorate must combine. Of nothing have I become more convinced during my nearly 25 years of public service than that our democracy is just what we, the people, make it.

If those who represent the home, the school, the church, the state, are incapable of discerning, or unwilling to be guided by, the basic principles of right and truth, or lack that fine sensibility toward the needs of life, and the proper valuation of the beautiful, the true, the good, we shall have a corrupted democracy and a hateful autocracy. The citizens themselves are to blame. It has been said that instead of trying to make the world safe for democracy we must make our democracy safe for the world. Some one has pictured the world as "full of loosened bowlders and crumbling rocks, coming from we know not where." It is, therefore, the serious task of the teachers and the school to help attack these bowlders with a trained corps of recruits, for whether or not the blessings of liberty shall be saved for our democracy in the face of dictatorships of plutocracy or dictatorships of the proletariat depends much upon how effectively the school, the training camp for future citizens, understands and cooperates in the moral adjustments that make for good government.

OUR CHURCH

We must look to the church for effective help in an effort to raise our moral standards and, specifically, to lift the country out of this most incorrectible of economic depressions.

Analysis upon analysis of the causes that have produced this panic have been made by laymen and by economists. Panaceas upon panaceas have been offered as the cure. Usually, however, the diagnosis and the remedy are wholly materialistic in content. Now and then there is heard a voice above the materialistic babel which acknowledges that back of it all and over it all is a Guiding Hand, an unfailing Providence.

What do we mean by Providence? Do we mean something haphazard and incidental? No; quite the contrary. Providence rules and overrules all things for good. This depression is for our individual and our national good if we are exercised thereby. To go on with the dishonesty in business, the stock gambling, the orgy of spending, the war madness, would be to intensify these evils and their consequences. The depression came as a penal and remedial check. "Man draws down upon himself, as with a strong rope, the consequences of his deeds." Reproof, when rejected is followed by ruin. Obedience to the law of right and justice will turn the fatal tide.

Many seem to rejoice in the idea that after the Creator had set the world in motion He withdrew and left it to manage itself. Some one has aptly said that as well might the passengers of a train rejoice that they were rid of the engineer and were left to the mercy of an unguided locomotive. Men seem loth to admit that we can not get along without a Providence and resent the fact that Providence will not change the moral and spiritual or even the material laws to accommodate us in our indulgence, in our dishonesty, and in our lust for war. We can not defy Providence as individuals nor as a nation. Pope Pius XI is right when he writes:

To settle the crimes men come and go, cross the seas, cross the mountains, meet and discuss, but in all that talking, conferring, and debating who has mentioned God? Who has spoken of His providence?

It is evident that the hand of God is being felt and that the things of the world are obeying the hand of God.

Recently a minister of one of the largest churches in Washington, D. C., so inspired his congregation as to cause them to forget church convention and applaud when he said:

What this country needs is a great revival of genuine religion. God seems to be shaking mightily the earth, reminding us in every way that a man's life consists not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth. He is saying to America in unmistakable language, "Let not the rich man glory in his riches, neither let the wise man glory in his wisdom, let not the mighty man glory in his might, but let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth Me." A personal experience of God is the only cure.

The country is being surfeited with analysis and counselors for our national well-being * * *. Down underneath it all the explanation is plain—we have reared a generation that has lost its faith in God. A third of the people in America have frankly no religion at all for the census taker to record. Synagogues have been converted into social clubs, and the Catholic and Protestant Churches have suffered sufficient losses in the last 15 years to turn the scale in America from morality to immorality, from the time-honored respectabilities of our fathers to pleasure, booze, and divorce. What America needs is a mighty revival of religion. The heart cry of humanity is for God. In view of this, never did the church of Jesus Christ have such an open door of opportunity.

Where shall this revival begin? Where else than in your life and in mine?

We must look to the pages of Revelation for the significance and remedy of this and all depressions. This distress has not come by accident nor by chance. There are no accidents either in the moral or the spiritual realms. All is under law. Everything is held within the chain of causation. We were not destined to have this panic, nor was it fate. Neither is Providence the author of evil. It might have been averted, and can now be ameliorated, and the tide turned into prosperity if men will restore the standards that have been lowered and debased. Moral ruin is preceded by spiritual ruin and followed by economic ruin. If we shut out the principles of justice and truth and love, the effect is immediate—selfishness, falsehood, and evil. This is the moral law in full operation.

Although there should always be separation of church and state, the sphere of the church should be jealously guarded and observed in its distinct function of inculcating moral principles, in setting up moral standards by which actions may be judged. Religion must have a moral influence on politics; it must supply the standards and sanctions. It can create an ethical and spiritual environment that will protect against persecution of those who stand for high principles.

It is of vital importance to the church that government shall have a moral standard. It is of supreme importance, too, that men holding the reins of government shall have high ideals. Government is made up of men, and will be no better than the men who control it. Good fruit is not gathered from a corrupt tree. Immoral men will not make moral laws, nor protect the moral standards. The church, therefore, must not be merely casually interested in seeing responsible men in responsible places, but must take an active part in keeping them there so long as they are faithful to their trust, and only so long. There is great need of more vigilance on the part of the citizenship, and especially that of the best citizenship—our church.

The history of our own and every other country demonstrates the truth that nations as well as individuals must recognize divinely constituted and immutable laws that govern the universe in the material, moral, and spiritual realms. Infraction of these laws brings inevitably its own punishment; and obedience, its certain reward. Unquestionably the right way for us to-day is to restore and to raise the standards that have been permitted to fall dangerously low. National life, liberty, and welfare are all directly and indirectly affected by the good or bad adjustments made by the citizenship and statesmanship of a people. Our hopes must rest upon the substantial institutions of our country—business, home, school, and church—for an active interest and an intelligent effort to restore and raise our fallen standards. Unless this is done, our beloved land will no longer be the habitation of a free and happy people.

STOP WASTE IN WASHINGTON

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 438) introduced by myself, and to include therein some letters I have written to the President of the United States and the Attorney General.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced House Joint Resolution 438, for the purpose of repealing the law authorizing the purchase of that lot of land at the foot of Capitol Hill, known as the old Census Building property, and opposite the Driscoll Hotel.

It came to my attention accidentally that the assessed valuation on the tax books of this property was recently more than doubled, and manifestly there can be but one purpose in this. That purpose was to help build up a fictitious value for the property. It had been learned that the property would be acquired for enlarging the Capitol Park in connection with the expansion of the boulevard from the Union Passenger Station to the Peace Monument. I understand that the Driscoll Hotel has been acquired for about two-thirds of a million dollars, and I assume that other property in that same block has cost or will cost at the same rate.

WORSE THAN WASTE

Now, Mr. Speaker, this old Census Building occupies one-half of a city block and is in a fairly good state of repair. I understand that the plans contemplate its being demolished and the ground upon which it stands converted into a part of the Capitol Park, and therefore used purely for beautification of the grounds. I feel that to wreck such a building at this time and to acquire the land at very high prices is a needless and extravagant waste. I have applied to the President, to the Attorney General of the United States, to the district attorney of the District of Columbia to stop the condemnation proceedings now pending to acquire that property.

From the experience we have had in acquiring property in the District of Columbia, undoubtedly the award in condemnation will represent several times the actual commercial value of the property. In fact, this old Census Building property has practically no commercial value. If it were not located near to the Capitol grounds, where the Government has spent hundreds of millions of tax money, it would have no value at all. There is no factory, nor bank, nor store near. It is the most conspicuous and outstanding example of the unearned increment. In these times of economic distress and of financial panic, when the taxpayers are gasping under their oppressive burdens, when millions are without employment and tens of millions, including women and children, face suffering, starvation, and death itself during the coming winter, it would be almost criminal to spend good cash to enrich the already enriched Bliss estate. The Bliss estate has profited enormously by reason of having acquired strategic properties, and, as the hundreds of millions of tax money rolled into Washington from every part of the country, it added millions and millions of value to these Bliss properties.

Under normal conditions, we might have to stand this mulcting of the Public Treasury by greedy and grasping land owners in Washington, but as conditions now are, we would be remiss and derelict in our duty if we continued to pour out millions into the pockets of these real-estate owners in Washington by cashing in, at the public expense, their unearned increment.

THE COUNTRY SHOCKED AT WASTE

Mr. Speaker, the country generally is amazed at what has gone on, and what is going on in Washington. Friends and constituents of mine, who visit the city, are shocked that good buildings along Pennsylvania Avenue, worth millions of dollars, are being wrecked merely to gratify pride. I know that this started before the panic began, and when we thought our income was exhaustless. But even then, I never supported the project. I never voted for the $14,000,000 Arlington Memorial Bridge. I never voted for the $7,000,000 Memorial Highway, built along the banks of the Potomac when to have followed the old road or to have established a new road on the hills would have cost only one-third of the $7,000,000. I have never voted for a seventeen million dollar Department of Commerce Building, established upon land that cost the Governmet many millions of dollars. And particularly was I shocked beyond expression when I learned that the Fine Arts Commission of the District of Columbia had condemned the District Building and the Post Office Department Building, because they do not fit into the scheme of architecture adopted for the new buildings.

As a consequence, it was contemplated that the beautiful marble District Building be torn down. Likewise, it is planned to demolish the Post Office Department Building. This building is made of granite, with walls as solid as the pyramids themselves. They will stand a thousand years if the foundations last. It was claimed that the foundations were giving way and sinking. That can be easily corrected. Engineers can force concrete and asphalt underneath and around the foundations of that building, with terrific pressure, that will make the foundations as solid as Gibraltar itself.

WANTON WASTE FOR MERE TASTE

Mr. Speaker, this Fine Arts Commission and these architects that have condemned the District Building and the Post Office Building would doubtless have condemned the Capitol and the White House as out of harmony with their scheme of architecture. And what is their style of architecture? Look at the Department of Commerce Building from the east side. It looks like a ginger cake sandwiched in between two baked Irish potatoes. The west front is decent, but the east front is not only ugly, but it is ludicrous.

Take also the new Income Tax Building, in the rear of the Post Office Department. I asked a friend of mine, driving around the city with me, to look at it and to tell me what he thought of it. I had not indicated to him whether I approved or disapproved of its style. He studied it for a moment and exclaimed, "Why, it looks like a penitentiary."

Mr. Speaker, it is time to apply some common sense to business around Washington. The rest of the country is weltering in the depths of despair. If Washington alone is to prosper, if joy riders are to be found alone in Washington, if the signs of pleasure and merrymaking are to ring only in Washington, then the resentment and the wrath of the Nation will rise against Washington, and if and when it does then there will be a day of reckoning sad to contemplate.

A CHANCE TO PRACTICE ECONOMY

Mr. Speaker, I am printing along with these remarks certain letters that I have addressed to the President of the United States, and to his Attorney General, and to his district attorney in Washington, asking that the condemnation proceedings for the useless expenditure of money at this time be stopped, and that the money be held in the Treasury for the relief of the millions through the country at large who are not the beneficiaries of the tax money that pours into Washington in an unbroken, even if now in a reduced, stream. Responsible business men and patriotic citizens write me expressing their righteous indignation and their half-repressed wrath that the sound of revelry, the surge of extravagance and high living, the constant gouging of the public money for private benefit, continue to go on in Washington while the rest of the country sits in sackcloth and ashes, not of repentance for sins committed but as the innocent victims of policies promulgated by the party and party leaders that continue to hold high carnival while the country mourns.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1932.

The Hon. HERBERT HOOVER,
President of the United States,
The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Having read with deep interest several of your recent messages urging strict economy and the elimination of all unnecessary expenditures at this time. I am respectfully calling to your attention House Joint Resolution 438, introduced by me yesterday, to repeal the law authorizing the purchase of land to enlarge the Capitol grounds and especially referring to a certain lot of land west of First Street NW., opposite the Driscoll Hotel and commonly known as the old Census Building property, belonging to the Bliss estate. The only value this land has is due to the fact that the United States Government located its Capitol and has spent millions of dollars in its vicinity. It is the most conspicuous example of the unearned increment.

We do not need this land at this time, and the owner is demanding several times the assessed value thereof as an additional excuse to extort a high price from the Government. I believe you will agree with me that the Government has been terribly imposed upon in most instances where it has bought property in the District of Columbia. No doubt you agree that the cost of the land on which the Department of Commerce Building was erected represents several times its true value, commercially, industrially, or otherwise.

Many citizens of the United States visiting Washington recently have been not only surprised but outraged and some of them have been enraged by the wasteful destruction of buildings along Pennsylvania Avenue, which are worth millions of dollars and which may be used this next winter to house the destitute, homeless, and hungry people. When these people have learned that the land on which these buildings stood is to constitute a mere pleasure park and beauty spot, and that this land has cost tens of millions of dollars, their rage seems to know no bounds.

This old Census Building, the purchase of which I am seeking to stop, is far better than the house in which you and I were born and the schoolhouses which you and I attended when little boys. That building would house and care for a thousand hungry and destitute men during a severe spell of weather next winter. To wreck it in order to produce a beautiful lawn of grass may be all right in times of prosperity, but in times like these it will not do.

Mr. President, I have written to the Attorney General, begging him to stop the pending condemnation proceedings, and I have written to the district attorney, begging him to do so, and I am urging the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to give me an early hearing so that the committee may report my joint resolution before we adjourn in the hope that it may become law. If all of these other recourses fail, it is in your power, Mr. President, to order the Attorney General to suspend the condemnation proceedings, and I earnestly beg you to do so. Even after Congress adjourns, I will make inquiry from you from time to time to ascertain what your attitude is with reference to this unnecessary expenditure of money at this time in the interest of vanity only. I do not oppose the erection of any buildings here at this time, because that gives employment to labor, but I do oppose the paying for land more than it is worth merely to wreck a good building and to create a beauty grass plot on that spot.

Trusting that you may give this matter early consideration and begging you to order the suspension of the condemnation proceedings, I am

Yours very respectfully,

J. J. MCSWAIN.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1932.

Hon. WILLIAM D. MITCHELL,
Attorney General of the United States,
Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: I respectfully call your attention to House Joint Resolution 438, introduced by me yesterday, and I intend to push vigorously for the passage of this resolution before Congress adjourns. However, if Congress should adjourn before its passage, I expect to seek vigorously its passage at the next session of Congress. I am therefore respectfully urging that you order the district attorney to suspend all proceedings now pending for the condemnation of this property at this time of national distress, when millions are out of employment and tens of millions facing hunger next winter, and it is no time to be spending money merely to gratify pride and vanity.

I respectfully urge you to take this matter up with the President of the United States, who has been making a great fight for economy.

With great respect, I am,

Yours truly,

J. J. MCSWAIN

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1932.

Hon. LEO ROVER,
United States District Attorney,
United States Courthouse, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. DISTRICT ATTORNEY: I am respectfully calling your attention to House Joint Resolution 438, introduced by me yesterday, and beg to say that I have applied to the President to order these proceedings stopped. I have applied to the Attorney General to order these proceedings stopped. I am now applying to you also to stop these proceedings of condemnation. I expect to push for the passage of my resolution. If it fails to become a law at this time, if you will suspend condemnation proceedings until Congress convenes in December that will give us a chance to pass the resolution at this time. No public interest is involved, but merely a matter of pride. It will not stop construction but will stop destruction. I am, therefore, respectfully asking you to exercise your own power, even if the President and the Attorney General do not do so, to hold up condemnation proceedings.

Yours very sincerely,

J. J. McSWAIN.

JUNE 20, 1932.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I wrote you yesterday, June 19, concerning the necessity for practicing economy by stopping the acquisition of further land in the District of Columbia for purposes of mere beauty. Of course, where a building is to be erected on the site, and this building construction will employ labor, that presents a different case, and I am strongly in favor of that. But to buy land on which are buildings that are worth millions of dollars, and then to wreck these buildings and to convert the land into a mere park for purposes of proper pride under ordinary conditions is, under the present conditions, an unjustifiable extravagance and waste.

As I am rushing House Joint Resolution 438 to action at this session, if possible, I should be pleased to have your cooperation in this item of economy. Will you not, therefore, please send your answer to these two letters by a special messenger, in order that I may have the same in time to present to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to-morrow, Tuesday, June 21, at 10.30 a. m.?

Mr. President, we have been working with you in every possible way to effect economy, and I believe that you will thank me for calling your attention to this one other way by which we can practice economy.

Certainly the people throughout the country feel that they are not having an even break with Washington. With Government pay rolls going on in Washington, retail and wholesale business is about as good as ever. With many millions of dollars being expended in Government buildings, labor has employment. In other parts of the country real-estate prices are down to 25 per cent of normal. In Washington, where the Government is buying property, it is more than 25 per cent above a fair price.

Something must be done in order to prove to the people of the Nation that these professions of desire to practice economy are sincere. Washington must not continue to prosper and have her real-estate owners revel in luxury and wealth while the real-estate owners in other parts of the country are weltering under terrific burdens and are not able to collect enough rents to pay taxes and insurance.

These are facts, Mr. President, and I am confidently counting upon your cooperation in this further step toward economy.

Yours very respectfully,

J. J. McSWAIN.

Hon. HERBERT HOOVER,
President of the United States,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

JUNE 20, 1932.

MY DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: I respectfully call your attention to House Joint Resolution 438, and respectfully ask that you have your commission meet at an early date, for the purpose of stopping the condemnation proceedings now pending in relation to the property mentioned in said joint resolution.

I feel sure that you agree with me that this is no time in our country's history to be paying high prices for real estate to be converted into a grass plot.

The proposed enlargement of the capitol grounds progressed too slowly for the celebration of the George Washington bicentennial. Therefore, there is no use, at this time, of acquiring additional land. It is my humble opinion that the acquisition of any more land at this time should be stopped. With millions of people out of jobs, and tens of millions of them hungry, to be paying high prices for Washington real estate is unjustifiable. The real-estate owners throughout the rest of the Nation are struggling under burdens of taxation that they can not pay. Many of them would be glad to sell their real-estate holdings at half of what they cost. I am in that fix. To be paying fancy prices in Washington, merely to create a pretty park, will meet the condemnation of the country.

For that reason I am appealing to you to call the commission together and to stop all further proceedings, so that the money may be diverted to the useful purpose of relieving the people and of furnishing employment to the millions of unemployed.

With great respect, I am,

Yours sincerely,

JOHN J. McSWAIN.

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS,
Vice President of the United States,
Chairman of the Capitol Grounds Commission,
The Capitol, Washington, D. C.

Here is copy of House Joint Resolution 438:

Joint resolution to repeal the authority to buy, and to stop condemnation proceedings to acquire, that lot of land west of First Street NW., and opposite the Driscoll Hotel, and commonly known as the old Census Building property, belonging to the Bliss estate

Resolved, etc., That any authority heretofore granted for the purchase of that lot of land in the District of Columbia, immediately west of First Street NW. and opposite the Driscoll Hotel, and known as the old Census Building property, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and that any condemnation proceedings now pending for the purchase of said lot of land be, and the same are hereby, terminated and ended, for the reason that it appears that the owner thereof is demanding an excessive and unreasonable price therefor, and that the condition of the Treasury and the country will not justify the purchase of said property at this time, and that its use is not now necessary, and that the owner thereof has procured the property to be assessed at more than twice its former assessment, since the owner thereof learned that the United States Government would probably desire to purchase said property, and that the purpose of the owner in so raising the assessment was to justify a demand for an excessive and unreasonable price therefor.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I call up conference report on the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama calls up conference report on the bill H. R. 11267 and asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk began the reading of the statement.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the conference report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I question whether the request does not come too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, it is too late to reserve points of order on the report.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Points of order on a conference report should be made at the time the report is filed.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. No; I have looked that up. I spent the Sabbath in that way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the statement.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, are my points of order reserved?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, the reservation of points of order came too late, inasmuch as the statement was being read.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I made my point of order before the report was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman will permit, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE] asked unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report, and the Clerk began the reading of the statement. Thereupon, after a part of the statement had been read, the gentleman from New York sought to interpose a reservation of points of order. The request came too late.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will bear with me a moment, it seems to me that points of order may be reserved either before the statement is read or before the report is read. The decisions are clear on that point, if the Chair is going to be technical. As soon as the gentleman asked unanimous consent to have the statement read, I was on my feet.

I sought to get the attention of the Chair, and it seems to me that on a reservation of a point of order the Speaker might at any time look the other way while the Clerk starts the reading of the report and thereby deprive a Member and the House of reserving points of order, which he has the right to do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not reasonably be expected to anticipate the action of Members on the floor. The Chair is compelled to conform to the rules of the House, and the reading of the statement in lieu of the report was held by Speaker Gillett as precluding the right to interpose a point of order against the conference report. That decision was made on April 3, 1922, and may be found on page 4947 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has ruled. The gentleman can appeal from the decision of the Chair if he desires to do so.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What is the Clerk reading now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The statement of the conferees for which unanimous consent was given by the House. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the statement.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, had the Clerk started to read the statement?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk had started the reading of the statement.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, we want to be fair. I do not think there is anything to be gained by rushing too fast. I did not understand the Clerk had started to read any statement, and I think in the interest of fair play——

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I submit to the House as a whole that the Clerk had read a paragraph.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, no.

Mr. BLANTON. The House is not responsible for gentlemen not taking advantage of their rights under the rules. The rule is plain, and the Speaker has properly ruled.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. Assuming the Clerk had commenced the reading and that the Chair is correct in the ruling, inasmuch as this is a matter in which we are all interested and all want to be fair, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings up to the point where the Clerk was directed to read the statement be vacated.

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker. There is a proper time for making points of order. If our friends can not conform to the rules, it is their own fault. The Chair has ruled correctly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas objects. The Clerk will continue the reading of the statement.

Mr. SNELL. We will govern ourselves accordingly.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the report be read later?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report will not be read. The House gave unanimous consent for the reading of the statement in lieu of the report.

The Clerk completed the reading of the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate (Nos. 46–168, both inclusive), to the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment No. 46: On this amendment, embracing Title I of Part II of the bill, relating to furloughs, permanent and temporary salary reductions, etc., the committee of conference have reached no agreement.

On amendment No. 47: This amendment eliminates the House provision requiring the permanent separation from the service of employees who reach or have reached the retirement age. The House recedes with an amendment restoring the House provision and adding a proviso which authorizes the President to exempt from the operation of the section, when in his judgment the public interest requires, persons designated by him.

On amendment No. 48: This amendment inserts a section heading. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 49: This amendment makes a change in a section number. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 50: This amendment provides that deductions from compensation for the purposes of making up retirement funds shall be based on the regular rate of compensation of employees, rather than on the rate as temporarily reduced by this act. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 51: This amendment makes a change in a section number. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 52: This amendment strikes out the House provision reducing certain traveling and per diem allowances by $2 each; and the House recedes. This amendment and amendments 57 to 60, inclusive, are complementary.

On amendment No. 53: This amendment makes a clerical change in a subsection letter; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 54: This amendment brings officers of the military services under the provisions of law relating to per mile allowances for motor-cycle and automobile travel in cases where such travel is authorized. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 55 and 56: These amendments make changes in subsection letters; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 57: This amendment is a substitute for the matter struck out by amendment No. 52. It changes the present law by substituting for the expense allowance for travel in the continental United States now provided by section 3 of the subsistence expense account of 1926, amounting to $7 per day, and likewise for the $6 per diem allowance in lieu of expenses provided by section 4 of such act, a per diem allowance of $5 per day for such travel; and the expense allowance for travel outside the continental United States, under section 5 of such act, amounting to $8 per day, as well as the $7 per diem allowance in lieu of expenses under section 6 thereof are replaced by a per diem allowance of $6 per day for such travel. The House recedes with an amendment changing the section number.

On amendment No. 58: This amendment repeals the provisions of existing law, which amendment No. 57 makes superfluous, and also makes a change in section 7 of the subsistence expense act of 1926, relating to rules and regulations, made necessary by the abolition of allowances for actual expenses, accomplished by amendment No. 57. The House recedes with an amendment making a change in a section number and a clarifying change in language.

On amendment No. 59: This amendment prohibits payment by the Government of the expense connected with the transportation of automobiles belonging to individuals, but authorizes the War Department and the Navy Department each to spend not more than $5,000 in any fiscal year for such transportation. The House recedes with an amendment changing the section number.

On amendment No. 60: This amendment repeals existing law so far as inconsistent with the matter added by amendments Nos. 57, 58, and 59. The House recedes with an amendment changing a section number and making the sections inserted by amendments Nos. 57, 58, and 59 effective July 1, 1932.

On amendment No. 61: This amendment strikes out the House provision relating to a higher rate of compensation for overtime, night, Sunday, and holiday work. The House bill provided that in certain cases such work should be done by substitutes. The amendment provides that it be done by substitutes or unemployed regulars. The House recedes with an amendment inserting the substance of the House provision, except that the differential in compensation for regular night work is reduced by one-half instead of eliminated, and the Senate provision on unemployed regulars is included.

On amendment No. 62: This amendment makes a change in the section number, and the House recedes with an amendment making a further change in the section number.

On amendment No. 62½: This amendment substitutes for the House provision that any officer retired from the military services and holding a civilian office or position under the United States or the District of Columbia shall not be entitled to retired pay in excess of an amount which combined with the annual rate of compensation from such office or position makes the total rate from both sources more than $3,000, a provision that the combined rate from both sources shall not exceed the rate of pay and allowances which such officer was receiving immediately before his retirement. The Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 63 and 64: Amendment No. 63 strikes out the House provision which excepted from the provisions of the House bill limiting the retired pay of persons employed by the Government officers on the emergency officers' retired list and persons retired for disability incurred in line of duty. Amendment No. 64 excepts persons whose retired pay, plus civilian pay, amounts to less than $3,000, and emergency officers' retired for disability incurred in combat with an enemy of the United States. The House recedes on amendment No. 63 and recedes with an amendment on amendment No. 64 excepting from the section regular officers retired for combat disability.

On amendment No. 65: This amendment makes a change in a section heading. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 66: This amendment makes a change in a section number. The House recedes with an amendment making a further change in the section number.

On amendment No. 67: This amendment strikes out the provision of the House bill relating to the dismissal of married persons in any reduction in personnel in the Government service. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 68: This amendment strikes out the provision of the House bill authorizing the Postmaster General to make temporary assignments in the Postal Service during the fiscal year 1933. The effect of the conference action is to restore the House provision with a change in the section number.

On amendment No. 69: This amendment provides that hereafter no civilian officer or employee of the Government who receives both annual and sick leave with pay shall be granted leave of absence with pay in excess of 15 days excluding Sundays and legal holidays. Leave unused in any year may be cumulative for any succeeding year. Civilian officers and employees of the Panama Canal located on the Isthmus who are American citizens and officers and employees of the Foreign Service are excepted. The period during which pay may be allowed under existing laws for so-called sick leave for absence is not limited, but such sick leave of absence within the limits now authorized shall be administered under regulations prescribed by the President so as to obtain uniformity in the various departments and establishments.

The House recedes with an amendment under which no civilian officer or employee of the Government who receives annual leave with pay shall be granted annual leave of absence with pay in excess of 15 days in any one year, excluding Sundays and legal holidays. Leave unused in any year may be cumulative for any succeeding year. Civilian officers and employees of the Panama Canal located on the Isthmus who are American citizens, and officers and employees of the Foreign Services holding official station outside the continental United States are excepted. The provision is not to be construed as affecting the period during which pay may be allowed under existing law for sick leave, and sick leave as now authorized is to be administered under regulations prescribed by the President so as to obtain uniformity in the various departments and establishments. The amendment also makes a change in the section number.

On amendment No. 70: This amendment authorizes and directs the heads of departments and establishments of the Government to furlough without pay such employees carried on their rolls such time as in their judgment is necessary to keep within the appropriations made for the fiscal year 1933. The higher salaried shall be furloughed first whenever possible without injury to the service and rules and regulations shall be promulgated by the President to secure uniform action by the heads of departments and establishments in applying this section. The House recedes with an amendment changing the section number.

On amendment No. 71: This amendment makes a change in the heading of three sections. The Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 72 and 73: These amendments substitute for the $10,000,000 limitation contained in the House bill, upon the amount which may be expended for printing and binding, a limitation of $8,000,000 upon the amount which may be obligated for such purpose. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 74: This amendment strikes out the allocations made by the House bill, of $2,500,000 to the legislative branch, and $225,000 for farmers' bulletins, and includes within the limitation upon obligations, certain printing done elsewhere than at the Government Printing Office. The House recedes with an amendment inserting the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, restoring the House provision relating to the legislative branch, and eliminating the provision for farmers' bulletins.

On amendment No. 75: This amendment strikes out the provision in the House bill relating to distribution, by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, among the various agencies of the Government, of the funds available for printing and binding. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 76: This amendment excepts the legislative branch of the Government and the manufacture of postal cards and money orders from the operation of section 302. The House recedes with an amendment eliminating that part of the Senate provision relating to the legislative branch.

On amendment No. 77: This amendment strikes out the limitation upon expenditures for paper, contained in the House bill. The Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 78, 79, and 80: These amendments make changes in section numbers, and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 81: This amendment provides that the United States Shipping Board shall hereafter consist of three members, whereas the House bill provided for four members. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 82: This amendment provides that one commissioner of the Shipping Board shall be appointed from the States touching the Atlantic Ocean or a navigable river directly tributary thereto. The House bill provided that such commissioner should be appointed from the States touching the Atlantic Ocean. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 83: This amendment strikes out the House provision that one commissioner should be appointed from the States touching the Great Lakes. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 84, 85, and 88: These amendments make clerical changes which are necessary because of amendments Nos. 81 and 86. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 86: This amendment reduces the term of office of the commissioners from four years, as provided in the House bill, to three years. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 87: This amendment provides that the commissioners shall hold office until their successors are appointed and qualify. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 89: This amendment provides that the concurrence of two commissioners shall be compliance with existing law requiring the concurrence of four or more. The House bill required the concurrence of three commissioners for the same purpose. The House recedes.

The House recedes with an amendment making changes in section numbers.

No appropriation is to be increased more than 15 per cent by such transfers. Statements of such transfers are to be included in the Budget for the fiscal year 1935; and those made up to the time of the submission of the Budget for the fiscal year 1934, and all contemplated for the remainder of the fiscal year 1933 are to be included in the Budget for the fiscal year 1934. The House recedes with an amendment changing the section number.

On amendment No. 108: This amendment—

(1) Limits the amount authorized to be appropriated under the George-Reed Act to $1,500,000 for the fiscal year 1933;

(2) Reduces the amounts appropriated for the fiscal year 1933 by the Smith-Hughes Act for vocational education by 10 per cent throughout, except in the case of the Federal Board for Vocational Education;

(3) Substitutes for the appropriation for the fiscal year 1933 made by the Smith-Hughes Act for the Federal Board for Vocational Education an authorization of an appropriation of the same amount; and

(4) Reduces the amounts authorized to be appropriated and expended for the fiscal year 1933 for vocational education in Hawaii and Puerto Rico by 10 per cent in each case.

The House recedes with an amendment inserting the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment except the provision substituting for the appropriation for the fiscal year 1933 made by the Smith-Hughes Act for the Federal Board for Vocational Education an authorization of an appropriation of the same amount, changing the section number, and making a change in a subsection letter.

On amendment No. 109: This amendment reduces the rate of interest upon any judgment against the United States or upon any overpayment in respect of any internal-revenue tax to 4 per cent. The House recedes with an amendment making a change in the section number and a clarifying change in language.

Where a contract has been made at a cost less than that upon which the authorization is based, the cost shall not be increased by changes not essential for completion of the project.

The House recedes with an amendment changing the section number and changing the last sentence of the Senate provision so as to provide that where a contract has been made at a cost less than that upon which the authorization was based, such cost shall not, unless authorized by the President, be increased by any changes not essential for the completion of the project.

On amendment No. 112: This amendment provides that except as otherwise specifically provided by law, the leasing of buildings and properties of the United States shall be for a money consideration only, and that the leases shall not contain provisions for the alteration, repair, or improvement of the buildings or properties as a part of the consideration for the rental. The House recedes with an amendment changing the section number.

On amendment No. 113: This amendment provides that in case of leases hereafter made or renewals of leases previously made, the rental paid for any building or part of a building to be occupied for Government purposes shall not exceed the per annum rate of 15 per cent of the fair market value of the rented premises at the date of the lease, and that no expenditure shall be made for alteration, improvements, or repairs of such premises in excess of 25 per cent of the amount of rent for the first year of the rental term or for the rental term if less than one year. not be abolished), and Mexican Water and Boundary Commission, and to merge such activities of the War and Navy Departments relating to the purchase of supplies and matériel as will effect economies. The amendment also excepts the United States Employees' Compensation Commission from the operation of the section amended. The House recedes with an amendment which inserts the provisions of the Senate amendment except those relating to the War and Navy Departments. In the case of those departments the provision applies to the merging of such activities, except those of a purely military nature, as, in the judgment of the President, may be common to both and where the consolidation thereof in either one of the departments will effect economies in Federal expenditure.

JOHN McDUFFIE,
L. W. DOUGLAS,
WILL R. WOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McDUFFIE was recognized.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I would rather proceed, unless the gentleman has a point upon which he is exceedingly disturbed. Will not the gentleman make it after I have completed my statement?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for one hour.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose to yield to the gentleman from Indiana one-half hour after I have made at least a partial statement covering the items involved in these points of difference, which were agreed upon in the conference by the committee. If I may have the attention of the House, I shall endeavor to do that briefly.

Gentlemen, one who has not served in this effort to economize and curtail the Government expenses can not appreciate what a burdensome task it is, and in some instances what a painful task it is in all of the difficulties to be overcome.

It matters not what we do in our effort to adjust ourselves to new conditions in this country, it means that some sort of a sacrifice must be made. Indeed, the time has come, just as it comes in war, when every citizen of this country, and especially that citizen who is so fortunate as to be employed by Uncle Sam in these distressing times, should be patriotic enough to contribute his part under these conditions. I believe we all have that desire.

Few nations in the world have had to undergo what we have undergone within recent months. The reserve, the conservative state of mind of the American people under most trying and terrible conditions is most commendable. I am sure that attitude will continue. I am sure that the American people believe that this Congress is using every effort to alleviate, where it is possible, the suffering throughout the country, and to so adjust by legislation conditions, wherever it can be done, to create new conditions and new opportunities, in order to bring us out of this slough of despond and distress.

The legislative branch of the Government, in my opinion, is doing everything possible to meet conditions. I believe the American people and the American taxpayer everywhere, especially since we have been forced to put additional burdens on them in the tax bill we have just passed, are demanding the strictest economy in the Federal Government.

Since we placed additional burdens on the people to maintain the Government, certainly no man in this House will deny that it is the duty of the House to curtail the expenses of this Government wherever possible.

The salary roll of this Government amounts to $1,330,000,000—more than 25 per cent of the total cost of the Government. How are you going to retrench, how are you to effect economies in government, if we do not attack this salary roll? But I can not go into that just now, and I will discuss the reduction later on.

I wish to direct your attention to the report. The report is not at all satisfactory to me, it is not satisfactory to many gentlemen here, but you all know that legislation is largely a matter of compromise. I can not have my way, the gentleman from Indiana can not have his way. Gentlemen on the Senate side, neither one, can have his way, but you know the very purpose of conference committees is to compromise or strike a happy medium. We have tried to bring to you what we thought was feasible, equitable, and fair.

Now, you may say that there are certain discriminations, even in the particulars we have agreed upon.

Gentlemen complain about the question of the dismissal from the service, in the reduction of personnel, of married women or married men, when both are on the Government pay rolls. Here is the reason we did that. In a time like this when there are many men without employment, and many men eligible for Government employment; where there are men on the pay roll with large families; and on the other hand in cases where men and their families are on the pay roll, it seemed but fair, in the event dismissals must come, they should be made in cases where two or more of the same family are on the Government pay roll. Thus an opportunity is given to the man with dependents who is on the pay roll to retain his job. One bread-winner, at least in every family, was the thought behind the consideration of this report, and should be the thought of those who have the power to dismiss. So much for that.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. In a moment.

Mr. YATES. Will there be a separate vote upon that particular question?

Mr. McDUFFIE. No; not on the question of married women in the service. That is a part of the conference report.

Mr. YATES. Then there is no way to vote on that question?

Mr. McDUFFIE. No; there is no way to divide it here. Of course, if the conference report is voted down, the gentleman from Illinois knows that we go back to conference.

Mr. YATES. I simply have my convictions upon that subject and want to have an opportunity to vote on it separately.

Mr. McDUFFIE. As to the savings in the bill outside of the salary reductions, I made an estimate—in fact, several—and checked over the figures presented to both the Senate and the House committees. Those figures were secured from gentlemen who are supposed to be experts, actuaries of the Government, gentlemen of long experience. According to my calculation, outside of any salary reduction at all, using the figures presented to each committee, there will be only $50,000,000 savings in this conference report, or, giving myself more latitude, I will say, hoping I am correct, between $50,000,000 and $75,000,000. I can not see any more. Under the furlough plan, if it be adopted, as written by the Senate, they claim, and no one can be definite about it, that we might add $80,000,000 more to that.

Title I, Part II, dealing with the question of retirement pay, is a matter that doubtless all are interested in, and I shall try to touch on those phases which might be deemed controversial. Both the Senate and the House committees were under the impression that where a man is drawing retired pay and a salary from the Government in some civil position, he should elect to have the one or the other in the event both salaries exceeded $3,000.

We have not estimated the savings to be accomplished by that section, but gentlemen know that there are hundreds of officers drawing salaries from the Government in civil positions as well as their retired pay. The question came and the difference came largely on the question of who might be exempted. We agreed to exempt any officer, either regular or emergency, and the term "emergency" includes provisional officers who were actually hurt in combat with the enemy.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Did the gentleman take into consideration when he provided for this exemption on the part of those hurt in combat, let us say, an aviator, back of the lines, who is on a practice required by the regulations, who crashed? We will say that the aviator hurt in combat had his leg cut off, and that the man back of the line on a practice flight who crashed also had his leg taken off. There would seem to be some discrimination there as against the aviator back of the lines. Can not the words by unanimous consent be so fixed as to include those who were actually hurt in service in line of duty.

Mr. McDUFFIE. If we do that, unquestionably we will fail to reach many on the pay roll, and there are 225 of them in the Veterans' Bureau alone, who play golf, play baseball, drive automobiles, and still draw large salaries, some of them as high as $9,000 a year from the Government in addition to their retired pay, which ranges from $106 to $325 a month.

Mr. BULWINKLE. That may be so, but is it not a fact that you are permitting an injustice against those men who were actually hurt in the service?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I do not think there will be great discrimination.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is this the provision in respect to those who were hurt in combat?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes. If there be an injustice, we hope in the future to remedy it, but the gentleman knows that we can not write a bill of this character and reach every man and prevent every little injustice. I doubt if there are a dozen men who will be adversely affected by the provisions of this report. If a man were shot down by the enemy, unquestionably he was in combat, and unquestionably the provisions of this bill do not affect him.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. On that score would an airplane crash be considered combat?

Mr. BULWINKLE. No; and that is the trouble that I am bringing to the gentleman's attention. If a man were in battle with the enemy, undoubtedly it will be considered combat.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If he lost a leg, it would make no difference how it occurred.

Mr. BULWINKLE. That is what I am saying.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I wish you two gentleman had had the burden of doing this job so far as that is concerned. We have done the very best that we could. [Applause.] We can not please everyone. A man shot down in an airplane may or may not be on the Government pay roll or be drawing a salary in some civilian position, but undoubtedly the Government is taking care of him, and, by the way, this Government is taking care of its soldiers ten times better to-day than any other Government to-day or in all the history of this world. [Applause.]

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman permit another interruption?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Just a short one.

Mr. BULWINKLE. That may be true, but there is no reason why any soldier should have an injustice done him.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Nobody wants to do any soldier an injustice. I do not know how many men would be affected by this provision. We have changed it to include the regular who was injured in combat. We have gone as far as we could and at the same time preserve the original purpose of this particular section.

Now, may I proceed? I want to say one thing. We are going to cut the salaries of Members of Congress at a greater rate than we cut the salaries of men drawing lesser salaries, because the Congressmen are in the higher brackets. There is a mistaken idea abroad in this country that should be corrected. I think it should be said and I think the country ought to know it, that an injustice has been done to the legislative branch of the Government, and these gentlemen in the press gallery ought to tell the whole story to the country. They ought to tell those who believe that cutting the expenses of Congress would dissipate most of the burdensome overhead of Government that such is not the case. As a matter of fact, the cost of the legislative branch of the Government, eliminating the Library of Congress, the Botanic Garden and the Government Printing Office, is only about one-half of 1 per cent of the total annual cost of this Government. Yet the people back home in some instances seem to feel that if we cut the salaries of Congressmen we will have cured most of the evil.

The higher the salaries go the fewer there are on the pay roll, and when we get to the $10,000 bracket, of course, the bulk of those gentlemen are in the legislative branch of the Government. If the salaries of all Congressmen and clerks are eliminated, the amount as related to the whole is infinitesimal. I think the country should know that. We should take a cut and we are willing to, and we are to-day cutting our own salaries. In addition to the income-tax provisions, in addition to the cut in stationery allowance, in addition to the cut of 25 per cent on mileage, upon which we have agreed in this conference report, as compared with the rest of the cut or the program, if you please, certainly the country can not complain that we have favored ourselves in this economy program.

Mr. YATES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield.

Mr. YATES. How much is the salary cut of a Congressman right now?

Mr. McDUFFIE. We have not cut them in this conference report. I hope the House will do the cutting when we have completed this report and take up the amendment in disagreement, which deals with the question of cutting all salaries.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Do not both plans cut them 10 per cent?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Ten per cent. Under either plan a Congressman's salary is cut 10 per cent.

Now, the question comes on one more proposition that I want to call to your attention, and that is the question of extra compensation for overtime, night work, Sundays, and holidays. The House provision carried language that provided a reduction of the higher rates for overtime, night work, and so forth, than the average rate of pay of a man working in the daytime. We compromised on that. The Senate eliminated that provision. We compromised on work for overtime, holidays, and Sundays at the same rate of pay as that paid for regular time. As to night work, instead of making the pay for night work the same as day work, we provided a 7½ per cent differential rather than the 15 per cent differential which night work now enjoys. We go further and provide that in every instance, in order to have more employment, that a substitute must be used rather than have a man work overtime or on legal holidays after having already performed a day's work. In that way we hoped to be able to take care of some small part of the unemployment.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I fear the gentleman made a misstatement by stating the provision was 7½ per cent for night work instead of 15. The differential is 10 per cent, and under this amendment it is 5.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Well, it is the same ratio. It was just cut in two. That is all.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. The House bill provided $1.86 for traveling allowance for railway mail clerks. The railway mail clerk can not possibly live on $1.86. He must rent a room for $1——

Mr. McDUFFIE. Permit me to say that the gentleman is mistaken in his conclusion about that. In 1926, I think it was, the railway mail clerks had their allowance raised or made $3 per day. It was just a way of raising their salaries, of course. Under living conditions to-day I dare say there is not a single man amongst them who will tell you that he can not get every accommodation needed, and as comfortable as he did a year or two ago, for $2 a day; and that is all we did. We struck $1 from the $3. We have done that not only to these gentlemen but to every other man who travels for the Government.

Mr. KNUTSON. But those men are obliged to rent quarters at the other end of the line, and $2 a day is not sufficient.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Well, that is a difference of opinion. I think the gentleman is wrong about that. I have talked to one or two of those gentlemen—not to the paid lobbyists around here, but one or two of the boys who are on the job and pay these lobbyists—and their opinion was that they could live on the $2 a day. If that be true, there is certainly no great injustice done them. They are fortunate, as we are, to be on Uncle Sam's pay roll at a time like this.

Now, on the question of annual leave, under the provisions of the furlough the annual leave for 1933 is eliminated, while in the report leave is reduced to 15 days. That is not satisfactory to me. It is estimated there will be some saving by it. It depends, probably, on which plan of salary reduction is adopted. If we adopt the furlough plan, there is no saving by it. But there is the question of accrued leave that is distressing me. A man is in the foreign field or at home, and he has a lot of accumulated leave.

In 1933 we are providing there shall be no leave, but after 1933 we provide there shall be 15 days leave rather than 30 days. It does not interfere with his sick leave, but provides that the President by proper regulations may determine and fix the conditions under which sick leave may be granted. I do not know how you gentlemen feel about that; but if we are to carry through the policy approved by both the White House and by both committees of Congress, there is nothing else to do but accept the report on this provision.

The Senate committee estimated $22,000,000 savings on the 15-day leave provision, but I am not at all sure of it. I feel some provision should be made to take care of the accrued annual leave and, moreover, I feel the Public Health Service should be treated as we treat the Army and Navy personnel in this question of leave. Opinion was divided in the conference, and the next Congress, I hope, will make the necessary correction of any injustice.

Mr. DALLINGER. Why did the House conferees strike out the word "both" in the sixty-ninth amendment? The Senate put in the bill the language that if an employee receives both annual and sick leave it should be cut in two.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The per diem employees do not receive annual leave.

Mr. DALLINGER. They do not get any annual leave; is that right?

Mr. McDUFFIE. They do not get any annual leave, and we did not think it was fair to apply this to one set of employees and not apply it to the other. I think the House will agree to that proposal.

There are two more suggestions I want to make, and then I wish to yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

The first is the question of public works. You will recall that the House passed a provision establishing a Department of Public Works. I was heartily in favor of it because I thought it offered some hope for savings to the Public Treasury. The Senate struck it out absolutely, and we found an inclination on the part of some Members of the Senate to eliminate from its operation not only rivers and harbors work, and yards and docks, as we had done, but to eliminate all work in reclamation construction, eliminate all work on highways, and eliminate all work on flood control. What is left for this proposed bureau except public buildings? So, your conferees decided that if they had to yield for the elimination of more than three-quarters of the public works of the country, we should not set up another large bureau here in Washington.

We were also impressed with the fact that the committee studying this problem for more than a month had great difficulty in bringing it out on the floor or putting it on the Calendar. The Economy Committee, I might say, having in its membership the chairman of the Committee on Public Expenditures, and the ranking Republican member of that committee, inserted the public-works provision as part of our program. I regret we could not prevail in conference and I hope you will be satisfied with what we have done.

There is one more proposal in the conference report that has given rise to some discussion. We took up the question of the saving of money in the construction of public buildings. The Senate included a provision that where authorizations were made a 10 per cent reduction should be had on the theory that both labor and material had declined in this country more than 10 per cent, and in that way an effort was made to conserve the funds of the Public Treasury.

Objection was made to section 319 by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]. We thought we were curing the trouble about which he complains. The provision is to the effect that where a contract has been let no changes could be made. In many instances it is said, where it is found that buildings can be constructed for less money than authorized and the contract is let, immediately the community affected, like your community or my community, tries to find some way by which they could utilize every penny of the authorized funds, whether needed or not. This has been done by having a different type of steps or by changing from brick to stone, or other changes. It was with a view of stopping that practice or that possibility, if you please, that we adopted those provisions as to construction.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that part of section 319 which provides where the contract has already been let. The agreement should be carried out after the contract has been signed. But the first paragraph of section 319 provides for a 10 per cent reduction where the contract has not been let. There is no economy there because it is going to require the architect to resubmit plans. For instance, I am told by the Treasury Department that if this paragraph stands, instead of constructing a 6-story building in St. Louis they will only be able to construct a 5-story building, as the architect must redraft his plans.

Further than that, the Swanson amendment to the naval appropriation bill adopted some years ago gave the Supervising Architect the right to award a contract if in excess not more than 5 per cent above the money appropriated. The first paragraph of section 319 will probably also eliminate the Swanson amendment. Therefore, you are not reducing the cost only 10 per cent, but you are probably reducing the cost 15 per cent. I may say to the gentleman from Alabama that this item is on page 80.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I can see grounds for the position taken by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]. I recognize that no one wishes to see a building that is to be constructed in his part of the country constructed at so much less as to destroy the very purpose of the construction of the building; and I may say to the gentleman frankly my understanding was that when we wrote in there the language that contracts must not be changed unless otherwise ordered by the President we were taking care of the very situation about which the gentleman complains.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That was my understanding, but I find the bill does not cover projects where the contract has not been awarded.

I may add that when the appropriation was authorized for the St. Louis building the Government intended to construct a 10-story building. They found the amount would only permit the construction of a 6-story building, and now, under this provision, it will be cut down to a 5-story building.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. We are paying about $75,000 a year in rentals for public agencies in St. Louis. Where is the economy?

Mr. McDUFFIE. That is another abuse we are endeavoring to correct. We are going to put a stop to exorbitant rentals for public buildings. We are providing in section 321, I think it is, that no appropriation shall be expended for rental of buildings at a rental in excess of 15 per cent of the fair market value of the building.

The question of rent paid for public buildings throughout this country has become almost scandalous and it is time for the Congress to take some affirmative action in an effort to remedy that situation. In another provision it is provided that when the Government rents or leases a building it must be for a money consideration and that the question of repairs shall not be a part of the consideration of the contract.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. For a brief question.

Mr. BRITTEN. It is my impression that this provision for an arbitrary cut of 10 per cent of the appropriations for buildings will result in extravagance rather than in economy, because of this fact: The architects in the Office of the Supervising Architect in the Treasury Department have drawn plans for certain buildings, based upon conditions to-day or of last month. Those plans are ready for submission to the contractors for bids. Now, if the Congress arbitrarily cuts 10 per cent from their estimates, are you not likely to have extravagance rather than economy?

Mr. McDUFFIE. The Comptroller General does not think so, and the conferees were inclined to believe that these provisions will not hinder greatly the work of the Treasury Department and likely save money. It is a Senate provision of the economy bill.

Let me say that we have touched vocational education. I am almost afraid to mention this to you, because I think there were 10 gentlemen on this floor who voted against striking it out of the House bill. The House bill provided no cut at all for 1933, but provided for a decrease in appropriations amounting to 10 per cent every year for 10 years, with the idea of getting the Government out of that field. A good many gentlemen to whom I have talked said it was nothing but fair that this activity should take its 10 per cent cut like everything else, and that if we did not disturb it for the years following 1933 there would be no objections. Therefore we have carried a cut of 10 per cent, which means a saving of $730,000 for the year 1933.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD]. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to occupy more than a few minutes upon this question. As you all know, the question before the House now is the conference report, and the first vote will be whether the House accepts or rejects that report. I appeal to every one of you to vote in favor of the adoption of the report.

For an entire week your conferees, together with the conferees of the Senate, labored long and earnestly to arrive at a conclusion as to that which was best to do. This report represents an unanimous agreement with reference to all the items outside of the pay cut or furlough proposition. As has been stated by the gentleman from Alabama, all in this report did not suit all the members of the conference. It would have been humanly impossible to have it so, but there, must be a spirit of compromise, made necessary by reason of the situation in which we find our country.

The whole country is looking toward Washington to-day to see whether or not we are honest in the declarations we have been making not only through the public press but by private letters that the Congress is endeavoring to reduce governmental expenditures. So far as the reduction of salaries is concerned and so far as a reduction of various departments is concerned, this is the last opportunity you will have during this session of Congress. I hope there will not be a dissenting voice, for I believe all of us are unanimous in the opinion that we must do something to reduce governmental expenditures.

That is all I desire to say upon this question. As I stated before, this was a compromise upon the part of the conferees. I wish to compliment the gentlemen on the other side and gentlemen upon our side for the unanimity and good spirit in which they arrived at their conclusions in adopting this unanimous report. [Applause.]

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, naturally the chief contest on the conference report will be made on the pay schedule, as to which there is no agreement.

Many Members have asked what opportunity they would have to vote to accept or to reject the various recessions and concessions made in the conference report. The parliamentary situation is that if the conference report is approved, then everything in agreement is approved. If the conference report is voted down, then the House will have an opportunity to pass upon each and every difference between the Senate bill and the House bill. I shall vote against the report for that reason.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say, in all kindliness and not in a spirit of criticism, that in this instance the House views were not sympathetically represented in conference. It is known, and is no secret, that on the salary question this House voted a salary reduction with an exemption of $2,500.

Gentlemen, it so happens that each of the House conferees were against that proposition, so that at no time, as far as we know, was the House proposal sponsored in conference. But that is a question which we shall have to take up in a few minutes.

The gentleman from Alabama said in the matter of vacations and leaves that he wanted to be fair, and therefore took in the per diem employees, who otherwise would have been excluded if the furlough plan of the Senate, including both annual and sick leave, had been retained. However, Mr. Speaker, that is not a provision applicable to all, because it is specifically limited to civilian employees and does not include the Army, the Navy, the Public Health Service, or the Geodetic Survey.

If the purpose of the conferees was to embarrass all in the service of the United States on the question of annual leave, I do not see why they did not so state instead of making an exception of the uniformed force of the United States.

Mr. McDUFFIE. May I say to the gentleman that in 1933 all leave for everybody is eliminated?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Then, by 1934, if this committee has done an injustice to anyone, surely the Congress will be ready to correct it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. For the present year, then, it is applicable to everybody?

Mr. McDUFFIE. For 1933.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That covers that point. By 1934 I hope Congress will have come to its senses and that decent, humane, and American working conditions and salaries will be restored.

Now, Mr. Speaker, on the question alluded to by the gentleman from Alabama——

Mr. McDUFFIE. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I beg the gentleman's pardon; the elimination of leave entirely for 1933 is in the furlough plan.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And that is applicable to everybody?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In the matter of the 10 per cent reduction on appropriations and authorizations heretofore made for public buildings, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the motive which prompted the Congress to appropriate for public buildings was to relieve the unemployment situation. I am told by every official of the Treasury Department, from the Secretary of the Treasury down, that this reduction will retard construction and will defeat the very purpose of the appropriation. It may in some cases prevent construction entirely; it will require in nearly all cases entirely new specifications, with indefinite delay.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that in this time of stress, when Congress has appropriated for public works, it is folly to bring out an arbitrary reduction, thereby necessitating the making of new specifications, new plans, retarding advertising for bids, and delaying the commencement of public works.

Have we reached the point where our only method of relieving distress is by creating more distress?

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that if we are not so lacking in resourcefulness, that this country's morale is not down so low that our only hope is to bring the whole standard of living down, we must do that. That is not my way of bringing relief.

In this connection I will state specifically what I believe Congress should do. Congress should do everything within its power to bring the country to a 5-day working week basis. As I have stated, while it has not the power to legislate a 5-day week for private industry, it can do so in many ramifications of trade and industry indirectly. It is within the power of the Government to force a 5-day week. I have introduced a series of bills carrying out such a policy. Under the provisions of this bill a great deal toward that end might be accomplished; for instance, provide that all Government contracts for construction of buildings, ships, work material, and supplies shall be produced on a 5-day-week basis.

Close the Post Office on Saturdays as well as the Customhouse, Internal Revenue, Comptroller of the Currency, and all Government agencies, thereby assisting trade and business also to close on Saturdays and Sundays and going on a 5-day week.

Require all national banks and banks members of the Federal reserve system to likewise close on Saturdays.

Place all railroad employees on a 5-day-week basis.

A 5-day-week basis will mean the immediate employment of 15 per cent additional workers now employed in industry, trade, and commerce.

But as I said before, it depends on the sincerity of a 5-day week and the will, courage, and determination to put it through. If it is not done and done real soon, I tell you now, my colleagues, that we will meet in this Chamber before very long to provide measures to meet a situation which is too terrible to contemplate. We should have provided a 5-day week long ago—and that is not enough. We must go to a shorter workday. It is the only way of meeting the machine age, the displacement of labor by machines, and the increased production. And that brings us to the very point now at issue.

Increased production, yes; but our trouble at this moment is decreased purchasing power. That is why I am against this whole question of wage reduction. It is not right. It is unsound. It is not the American way of solving the problem. It is not the progressive way. It is regression. Of course, there is a school of thought, I know it, who want to see a great class of impoverished people. I can tell these gentlemen that they are making the mistake of their lives. The American people will never submit to one enormous class of impoverished people and a small group owning all of the property and controlling the lives of the great mass of American people. Never. While certain gentlemen are to-day gloating and taking pride in the amount of money that will be saved to the Government, and as they say, to the taxpayers, I tell them that it will be no such saving. The $80,000,000 that this bill will take out of the pockets of Government employees is just $80,000,000 taken from circulation. Every cent of it is taken from circulation because almost every cent of the salaries of underpaid Government employees is immediately spent for necessities of life. None of this money goes into hoarding. Every cent of it is spent for living expenses. Government employees are not overpaid. That is not so. It is unfair to these loyal employees to create that impression. The propaganda that has been going out against Government employees would make the uninformed believe that they work little and are greatly overpaid.

I repeat, that is not so. But it is not only the Government employee that is involved. Just as sure as we are meeting here to-day, this reduction will be followed by private industry, by business, who will give their employees and workers another cut, another reduction in salary. All of this reduces the purchasing power of the American people. How, then, can we ever get back to normal conditions? Who furnishes the market for American industry? Not the few multimillionaires; not at all; but the great masses of wage earners and the white-collared class. This constant reduction of salaries and wages is simply prolonging the depression and increasing our economic troubles. At the very time that demand is made to reduce wages, to cut salaries, a systematic program of inflation is going on which must eventually increase commodity prices. Is it fair? Is it just? Why, is it decent? The plan is, of course, to take it all out of the wage earners and the white-collared class and make them pay the entire cost of the bankers' depression. Let me tell you, gentlemen, that American labor and American manhood and American womanhood will not submit to it. I pointed out in the days of prosperity just what was facing us ahead. I was not heeded then. It required no prophet to see that the orgy of speculation and the carnival of financial manipulation could not last.

I begged this Congress to do something constructive. I have been urging a legalized 5-day week with full pay for all Government departments and for all industries in any way connected or dependent on the Government. I have urged direct relief and I have pleaded for a large, comprehensive, far-reaching program of construction of public works, assistance in the way of loans for semipublic works, and aid for housing and the clearing out of slums in our cities, and I have even urged loans to stimulate private industry, commerce, and agriculture. I have presented time and time again a constructive program. I refuse to be a party to this destructive plan now before us. There are some who are so childish, who are so dull, who are so gullible as to believe that everything will adjust itself if we simply balance the Budget and reduce Federal pay and then go home. Suppose the Budget is balanced in this way. What of it? That will not put a single man to work. Suppose there is a nation-wide reduction of pays and salaries. That will not restore industry and business. A deceived American public may to-day believe and be the victim of a propaganda of false economics, but it will not be many months before they will learn how they have been deceived. The way to balance the national Budget is to balance the family budget. When the family budget is balanced it means more food being purchased, more clothes, more household effects, it means more homes being built—all of which means the restoration of American industry and American business, and what is more, the continuance of American institutions. I shall continue to fight for a constructive program. I shall continue to insist upon keeping the American scale of wages and the American standard of living. There is enough wealth in this country. We have sufficient natural resources in this country to keep up the American wage scale and the American standard of living. Less special privileges, less concentration of wealth, less control of the industries into a few hands, and we will soon get back to normal conditions. The economy in this bill will not be a lasting economy. It is a wasteful, unjust, unfair plan which can not be conducive to any real and lasting economy or to any good.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary situation, as I understand it, will require the House first to either approve or vote down that part of the conference report which has been agreed to by the conferees, and this relates to all items with the exception of the pay-cut provision.

The conferees have, to some extent, removed discrimination, eliminating and changing certain sections, but they still discriminate against the postal employees because of the fact that the postal employees are not only subject to either the furlough plan or the straight pay-cut plan, but they lose certain monetary rights in the way of allowances to which they have been entitled and which they have heretofore enjoyed under the law. In fixing the basic pay of postal employees the allowances I refer to were considered.

It is my understanding that the provision in reference to the rural carriers' allowance has been amended to make it more satisfactory. The original provision was most unfair. I exerted myself in an effort to have it changed and I do not have a rural carrier in my district.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in reference to the pay cut or furlough plan, I have introduced a bill providing for a 5-day week in the Government service. It was my belief then and it is my belief now, that the day has arrived in this country, due to labor-saving devices and mass production, when a shorter work day and a shorter work week must be agreed upon, not only by the Government, but by private industry.

You are going to hear a great deal with reference to the amount of money saved by the two proposed plans. You should take into consideration that the figures are based on the pay roll as of to-day. Cooperating with the Bureau of the Budget, the Appropriations Committee of the House sent the appropriations bills to the Senate with a reduction of over $627,000,000 below the present fiscal year. The Senate is further reducing the appropriations and the amount will exceed $650,000,000.

Do you mean to say that out of the savings, which will be approximately $650,000,000, some of it is not going to be taken from the pay roll of the United States? If this be correct, then the amount of saving which is brought about under either of the plans will not reach the figures which their sponsors claim for them.

In other words, I maintain you can not reduce the expenses of this Government as we have, and for which I voted, $650,000,000, without discharging thousands of Government employees. Therefore when the employees are discharged by reason of the pay-cut plan their salary will not be considered in the savings on salaries.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE], most sincere, and an able legislator, in his remarks would lead one who did not know the facts to conclude that the only savings the Congress is affording the taxpayers comes in this bill. Such, of course, is not the case. I have stated above and I will state again we have already reduced expenditures $650,000,000 and the taxpayers should know this. This bill will increase that amount to over $800,000,000.

The gentleman from Alabama says that the total savings in this bill other than through salaries is from $60,000,000 to $70,000,000. He should tell the House why. The Economy Committee, I can assure the House and the country, was prepared to bring in recommendations for reductions on many appropriations but the Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate agreed to recommend the reductions and therefore the Economy Committee was forced to abandon that field.

When you take into consideration that you can not reduce a permanent appropriation, other than by new legislation, I am sure the country will understand we have not failed the taxpayer in bringing about reductions in expenditures. When the facts are known the country will approve of our work. So many misleading statements have been made on this floor for political purposes that the taxpayer is not to be blamed for not understanding the situation.

Mr. Speaker, getting back to the savings by reason of reductions in personnel and salaries, regardless of arguments to the contrary the Government clerk, I mean the average Government clerk, has not been overpaid. The basic pay was arrived at after many years of careful study. The Government might be overmanned, and no doubt it is in many departments, but the duty to reduce the personnel rests with the officials who administer the laws, and not with the lawmakers. If the officials do not reduce the departments that are overmanned the Congress will.

Personally, I would rather see all Government employees work 11 months with pay than to see thousands dismissed and receive no pay. No Government official's or employee's job is secure regardless of whether he is a civil-service employee or not.

The only way the unemployed can be placed to work is to reduce the hours of labor.

This is being done all over the country. One of the great oil companies last week placed their men on a 4-day week rather than discharge a man. Two great factories in my section did likewise, while one industrial establishment instead of having three 8-hour shifts decided on four 6-hour shifts.

The business man sees the necessity for action along this line, why should the Government not take notice?

My effort since I became a member of the Economy Committee was to strive for fair play for all. Treat all classes of Government employees alike. We have not secured all that we desired, but some agreements have been reached and some discrimination eliminated.

What is our situation now? Vote for a straight reduction in salary for all Government employees receiving above $1,200 of 10 per cent or vote for a plan which requires all Government employees to receive a 30-day furlough without pay, provided their salaries are above $1,200.

One means a saving without putting thousands of employees out of a job, while the other means a like saving but also the discharge of thousands of employees.

This is no time to increase the number of unemployed. It is far better for the man to have earning power 11 months in the year than to have no earning power.

With the opinion I hold in reference to providing a shorter work week in order to take care of the unemployed in this country I feel it will be for the best interests of the country and for the best interests of the Government employees if we adopt the furlough plan rather than the straight pay-cut plan. [Applause.]

I propose to vote for the furlough plan rather than the straight pay-cut plan. I feel, while this will create a real saving, it will keep more people employed, whereas if we adopt the straight pay-cut plan, thousands and thousands of employees more than those that are already booked for dismissal will be added to the unemployed.

I have given a great deal of study to this question, and, as I understand it, we are not going to have an opportunity to vote upon anything except a straight pay cut affecting all employees receiving $1,200 and up, or the furlough plan, and I have come to the conclusion that it will be for the best interests of all concerned, employees and taxpayers, if the House adopts the furlough plan.

We must vote for one of the two plans. I still feel a mistake is being made in disturbing the employees in the low brackets. The man receiving barely a living wage will be the one to suffer most. I would far rather effect the savings by applying a higher percentage of reduction to those in the higher brackets, no matter what percentage is necessary to accomplish this saving, than to disturb the man with a family who receives a small salary and who is now striving hard to make both ends meet. [Applause.]

[Here the gravel fell.]

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield for a question?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] has referred to the rural carrier and my attention was called to the matter a moment ago. I would like to ask the gentleman to tell the House just what this report does with reference to the rural carrier.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Not a thing. The rural carrier is not involved in this report one way or the other.

The question with respect to the rural carrier will come on the question of which one of the plans or what plan may be adopted as to salary reduction.

Mr. BYRNS. It was stated to me that there was a cut made with reference to maintenance and also salary in the case of the rural carrier.

Mr. McDUFFIE. It is not in the report, I will say to the gentleman.

I now yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] five minutes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I wish to say, in answer to the argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] with reference to the 10 per cent reduction that was made upon public buildings, that it has been estimated—and I think the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] will bear me out in this statement—that in nine out of every ten contracts that have heretofore been let for public buildings under estimates that were made a year or two prior to that time, the bids have been from 10 to 25 per cent under the amount allocated for the construction of the building.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That would be quite proper, any saving which could be made should be made, but here you make it mandatory.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The only reason for that is that in some instances, where, we will say, there is allocated $500,000 for a public building, and the contract is let, not for $500,000, but for $400,000. Immediately after the contract is let all the influence possible is brought to bear on the Treasury Department to get changes made in the structure, in order to consume that extra $100,000, on the theory that inasmuch as $500,000 was allocated, the community is entitled to have $500,000 spent there. This will save that.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman from Indiana is not applying his remarks to what the gentleman from New York has said. The gentleman from Indiana is talking about one thing and the gentleman from New York about another. The gentleman from New York is complaining about the arbitrary cut of 10 per cent on appropriations for public buildings that have not been contracted for, and the gentleman from Indiana is talking about another condition.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am talking about conditions where allocations have been made. I say if the same rule is carried out as heretofore these contracts will be let for 10 or 25 per cent under the allocation, and then they will want the whole amount expended in that community.

Mr. BRITTEN. Conditions are not the same as they were two or three years ago. To-day the Supervising Architect has drawn the plans on conditions existing throughout the country at present. So the figures will not be those that the gentleman from Indiana is commenting on.

Now you are providing for extravagance on these contracts. Plans and specifications have been drawn on the basis of existing conditions, and now Congress steps in and says that existing appropriations be reduced 10 per cent. In many cases new plans will have to be drawn, new proposals advertised for, expensive delays will ocur, and the Treasury will suffer. That action will retard the work, as the gentleman from New York has properly said. This section will add to the distress of the country.

Mr. Speaker, the important question before the House is whether or not the many thousands of employees of the Federal Government in all parts of the United States should at this time have their salaries reduced. The pending proposal of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE], chairman of the so-called Economy Committee, is that all salaries be reduced 11 per cent above $1,000 exemption. In other words, he proposes to reduce salaries of postal carriers and clerks who now are receiving more than $85 per month; he proposes also to do away with the Saturday half-holiday; he proposes to stop differential pay for night work and would stop extra pay for work on holidays and Sundays.

Mr. Speaker, Uncle Sam is not a bankrupt, nor is he in the hands of a receiver. Such drastic and far-reaching action will have a bad effect upon the general morale of millions of people in every walk of life. It will break down our standards of living; it will destroy confidence in our Government; it will incite manufacturers and business men to further reduce the salaries of their employees; it will create still further depression, to say nothing of its shattering effect upon several hundred thousand Federal employees who are supporting average families of 4½ persons. This attempt at economy will not reduce taxes. It is wrong in principle. It is destructive. I shall vote for immediate salary reductions in all of the higher brackets and shall favor those provisions in the pending bill which authorize the President to reorganize and consolidate the executive departments in the interest of greater efficiency and economy in Government.

Mr. Speaker, I shall continue to support all economy measures presented to the House; but I will not give my support nor vote to reduce salaries in the lower brackets so long as the Government refuses to collect a tax on wholesome real beer, which would make salary reductions and nuisance taxes unnecessary. American standards must not suffer reductions because of costly ineffective prohibition.

Prosperity will never return through the vehicle of cheap labor, cheap prices, or lowered standards of living. Industry always suffers when the buying power of the masses is reduced through the imposition of wage reductions and unemployment increases.

Many of the reasons assigned for the reduction of wages in private industry do not at all apply to the Government or to the employees of the Federal Government. The competitive argument can not apply, nor can the alleged sheer necessities claims by private employers as a justification for reduction in wage earners' pay apply to the underpaid workers in the Federal Government.

The savings which would accrue to the Treasury of the United States as a result of pay cuts imposed upon Federal workers in the lower brackets would be comparatively unimportant. The Federal Budget can not be balanced by a reduction in salaries alone. There are certain expenditures which can not be curtailed, but there are many directions still open for ways of economy and these should be diligently pursued. Costly commissions and departments should be entirely wiped out. The Federal Farm Board has taken half a billion dollars out of the Treasury and will undoubtedly lose every dollar of it. The Federal Trade Commission, a large section of the Department of Commerce, the Department of the Interior, the Department of Agriculture, and of the Department of Labor could readily be dispensed with at an annual saving of hundreds of millions of dollars, and some of this may be accomplished by the bill now before the House. I certainly hope it does.

All of these directions for increased economy should be carefully analyzed before we give thought to a reduction of the lower-salaried Federal employees.

I have had a bill pending before this Congress for months which provided for a 5-day week, 8-hour day, as a means of equalizing the employment and saving money for the Treasury, but up to the present moment I have been unable to get even a hearing on this bill, much less its serious consideration, although the President himself and many Members of the House from time to time publicly express themselves in favor of a 5-day week. I recall this fact merely to show that there are many directions where economy might be practiced before we take the drastic step on general salary reductions.

The greatest task of the Government to-day is to provide work for the unemployed, to relieve existing human distress, and to restore the faith and confidence of the American people in American business. A return to normal conditions depends upon the development and application of sound, wise, constructive policies. Wage cutting in the lower brackets must cease and the people must be assured that it is at an end if buying power is to be restored and business is to be revived. Hoarding of cash will then stop. The time is here when the leadership of the Nation, both in private industry and in governmental affairs, must speak out, assuring the people that all our concentrated economic, industrial, and governmental power will be utilized in an effort to stop the decline in wage-earners' incomes and in commodity prices.

Uncle Sam should not take the lead in a direction which will hurt the little business man, the local storekeeper, and the merchant who knows his daily customer familiarly and who knows that his credit is sound. Let us not take a backward step to-day, but on the contrary, let us proceed with every confidence that better times are coming.

We, in Chicago, probably come into closer contact with our mail carrier than we do with any other Federal employee, and we do not like to think of his salary being reduced, because he struggled along during the very prosperous years of our country, with a bare living. When a vacancy occurred in the Postal Service it was hard to fill it because wages were high and there were very few able-bodied men who were willing and ready to become mail carriers and postal clerks at the low rates of wages and the high cost of living. To-day the situation is changed and the mail carrier with his steady job is indeed fortunate, but that is no reason why we should reduce his salary.

He is not in competition with anyone else nor is his employer in any sense a competitor with others. To reduce the postman's salary would give little comfort to others in his home neighborhood whose salaries had already been reduced by their respective employers. To reduce the postman's salary would give little comfort to the local storekeeper and merchant to whom he may already be indebted in a small amount. To reduce the postman's salary would add little to the Treasury of the United States and would but do harm in the little home neighborhood where he is more or less a fixture and a cheer carrier as well as a mail carrier. I believe in economy in government and I have been backing President Hoover in his desires for economy in every direction, but I truly believe, my good friends, that to reduce the postman's salary is not economy. It would be bad business practice and until Uncle Sam takes advantage of his many, many other opportunities for the establishment of economy, he should not disturb salaries in the lower brackets. To vote a reduction in his salary and at the same time allow salaries ranging from ten to seventy-five thousand dollars per annum in the Federal Farm Board to remain untouched would make me blush with shame, and I shall oppose it so long as there is breath in my body.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I dare say that there is not one out of ten where those conditions would obtain.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

I do not presume the reference in section 319 of the bill applies to the estimates not finally decided upon by the interdepartmental committee and ratified by Congress. It only applies to those submitted to Congress and ratified by specific authorization.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It applies to all where contracts have not been made.

Mr. BRIGGS. But there are some designations of public buildings, with estimates by the interdepartmental committee that have not yet been submitted to Congress for appropriation, although such buildings have been included in the public-buildings program.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It can not apply to those.

Mr. BRIGGS. Some of these estimates have not been sent to Congress for an appropriation, but have already been revised and cut down in view of the reduction in building costs, and this new provision in section 319 would not apply to those.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is correct.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, we might just as well not fool ourselves. This so-called economy bill, as shown by the conference report, is not going to save one-half of the money we expect to save. Every time we propose a retrenchment that affects any particular bunch of employees in the Government, you will find their organizations coming in and reading the law to us, and Members bow to their will, and no economy is effected.

What we ought to do in this bill is to cut every single salary in the Government above $1,500 at least 25 per cent. [Applause.] If we will exempt all salaries of $1,500—and it takes about $1,500 for an ordinary family to live—if we will exempt salaries up to $1,500 and then cut every other salary 25 per cent, we will save some money worth while.

We ought to begin with our own salaries, and cut them 25 per cent. That is what I propose in my resolution, H. J. Res. 344, which has been before and considered by the committee since March 19, 1932. And as I propose in that resolution, we ought to provide that no officials of this Government, other than the President and Supreme Court judges, over whom we have no control, shall draw salaries above $7,500. That ought to be the maximum. Neither Senators nor Congressmen ought to draw more than $7,500, and we will get just as loyal and faithful service for that amount as we have ever gotten for the Government.

It is simply ridiculous and absurd to continue allowing officials of this Government to draw salaries of $10,000, $12,000, $15,000, $20,000, $25,000, and $35,000. Just why do we not stop it? I am not in favor of it. If you are not in favor of it, why do not you vote with me to stop it? We can stop it in this bill, by limiting salaries to $7,500 maximum, and not allow any salary to go over that amount.

I know that the people I represent are not in favor of these large salaries. I know that they want them reduced. And for one I am going to keep hammering on this subject until we get them reduced. I do not intend to vote for another bill that allows salaries to go over $7,500. And I predict that before the second session of this Congress adjourns, we are going to reduce all salaries at least 25 per cent, and cut down all of the high salaries to a maximum of $7,500.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret that I can not yield to my friend, as I have only a few minutes. Take the Army appropriation bill of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS], who worked hard and faithfully, and brought in a bill here to cut 2,000 surplus Army officers off the pay roll of the Government, something that ought to be done. When that was under consideration we found their organizations in the gallery, and their representatives on this floor, coming in here and striking that provision out of the bill, until we got a roll call, and then we put it back in the bill.

Then the matter went to the Senate, and you found those same organizations besieging our Senators over there, and the Senate succumbed, and they took that provision out of the bill, and there will not be any cut of these surplus 2,000 officers, unless you stand behind Mr. COLLINS, as I am going to do, and make the Senate recede. But, before we get through—and mark my words—you are going to hear from the people back home, and you will have to effect some of these economies when you come back here in December. I do not know how your people are thinking about it, but I know what my constituents in my district are thinking about it. They want retrenchment, they want real retrenchment, they do not want any make-believe retrenchment or any camouflages. They want to cut down the expenses of the Government.

We are going to have to start some time on the fixed charges. The President, for four years, has been bringing in his $4,000,000,000 Budget annually, when he ought to have brought in a $3,000,000,000 Budget. He could kill any bureau right now by taking the money away from it. Why does not he do it?

This furlough plan, which the President has caused the Senate to place in this bill, will cause at least 33,000 additional employees to be placed on the pay roll. Would not that be absurd and foolish? Why, we ought to take off of the pay roll and send home right now at least 50,000, as we have that many more than we need. Yet this ridiculous furlough plan will add 33,000 new employees, whom we will never get off of the pay roll, and who will draw their retirement benefits. I am going to vote for both amendments that will be offered by my colleague from Alabama [Mr. MCDUFFIE], although I am against both, as they are less objectionable than the Senate furlough proposal, and will do the least harm. I do not like either, but I like less the proposal of the President, which he has had the Senate put on this bill, and which Mr. MCDUFFIE seeks to amend.

Mr. MCDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Am I correct that voting down the previous question will simply extend debate, or will that throw the conference report open to the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Voting down the previous question would simply extend debate, it would not indicate any action on the part of the House. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CONNERY) there were—ayes 210, noes 36.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Fifteen Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

So the conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE I. COMPENSATION REDUCTION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

COMPENSATION DEFINED

SECTION 101. As used in this title, the term "compensation" means any salary, pay, wage, allowance (except allowances for subsistance, quarters, heat, light, and travel), or other emolument paid for services rendered in any civilian or noncivilian office, position, or employment; and includes the retired pay of judges, and the retired pay of all commissioned and other personnel of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Lighthouse Service, and the Public Health Service, and the retired pay of all commissioned and other personnel (except enlisted) of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard; but does not include the active or retired pay of the enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard; and does not include payments out of any retirement, disability, or relief fund made up wholly or in part of contributions of employees.

APPROPRIATIONS IMPOUNDED

SEC. 108. The appropriations or portions of appropriations unexpended by reason of the operation of this title shall not be used for any purpose, but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order on the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman state the point of order?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the subject matter contained in the gentleman's motion at this time is not proper in that there is nothing before the House at this time which shows a change of attitude on the part of the House in its action on the question of salary reduction. There are two propositions before the House. One is the House bill providing for a reduction with a $2,500 exemption, and the other is the Senate so-called furlough plan. The gentleman seeks to concur in the Senate plan with an amendment, and the matter in the amendment is not germane to that plan. The gentleman's motion is beyond the province of conferees. The subject matter contained in the motion is an entirely new proposition. If conferees have failed to agree on either the House bill or Senate bill, then they should be discharged. If the gentleman seeks to carry out a reduction plan, then I submit that the House has not indicated by vote or otherwise that it recedes from its original position. What the gentleman is seeking to do is to get legislative action de novo on a matter which has already been passed on by the House. When we come to that point—enter on our own initiative or from the Senate—new conferees representing the views of the House should be and would be appointed. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the view of the House must first be presented by friends of the proposition to the Senate conferees. There is no indication in the report or otherwise that the House bill was actually sponsored in conference by the conferees on the part of the House, and I submit that at this stage we can not legislate de novo in order to carry out the personal views or preference of the conferees. The House should at least be given the opportunity to express itself on its own bill. In this roundabout method the House is compelled to take other action without first knowing what the attitude of the other body on the proposition may be.

Mr. Speaker, I also desire to make the additional points of order that the motion of the gentleman from Alabama contains subject matter which is not in the House bill, which is not in the Senate bill; and specifically I point to that part of the gentleman's motion which provides "that no court of the United States shall have jurisdiction of any suit against the United States, or (unless brought by the United States) against any officer, agency," and so forth.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman turn to page 48 of the Senate bill, where appears the limit of jurisdiction of courts; and in the House bill, see page 55, at the bottom of the page. It is the very language which is carried in both the House and Senate. That is not new matter.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Very well. I had not the gentleman's amendment and was compelled to take notes as the clerk was reading. I can not imagine anybody drawing a provision like that. Surely no one will for a moment contend the validity of such a proposition.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Well, strange things are happening these days.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will concede that. To recur, Mr. Speaker, on the purpose of the gentleman's amendment, I submit that it is not for the purpose of coming to an agreement on the legislative proposition which is the real purpose of the conference, and must be the only purpose of the conference report. It is seeking to foist upon the House a new proposition, upon which the House has already taken action, and for which there is no basis in the Senate bill or in the conference report. The conferees, I submit, can substitute their will and views for those of the House. The House conferees personally were not in favor of the House action in regard to pay reduction. That is well known. The House views were not in the hands of its friends. The House was not represented in that respect. The motion of the gentleman, therefore, would prevent the House from insisting on its bill and appointing new conferees. Therefore, I submit the motion is not proper at this time, the subject matter is not germane to the Senate bill, and the House has not as yet indicated any change in its attitude.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, the argument of the gentleman from New York seems to hinge entirely upon his own conjecture and conclusions as to what took place in the conference committee. The gentleman raised one specific point, if I remember correctly, and that was with reference to the provisions dealing with the jurisdiction of courts.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I withdrew that.

Mr. McDUFFIE. And it was pointed out to the gentleman that both the House and Senate had passed that provision. Now, I do not know any other specific point of order that the gentleman has raised. I do not recall one, and I think the gentleman's point of order is not well taken.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SCHAFER. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I believe the Chair should hold that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama is out of order, because the amendment goes beyond the range of difference between the action of the House and the Senate. The furlough plan incorporated in the bill by the Senate and the salary-reduction plan as passed by the House contain no salary reductions in salaries below $2,500 per year. I believe on that point alone the amendment is not germane, and therefore it is not in order, as the conferees have exceeded their authority.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I think the Chair has ample precedent for overruling the point of order raised by the gentleman from Wisconsin; because, in the first place, we are not dealing with a conference report; and, in the second place, I direct the attention of the Speaker to the fact that anything that is germane is permissible to be written in an amendment such as I have offered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BANKHEAD). The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] interposes a point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE] to the Senate proposal, upon the ground that it does not affirmatively appear that the House conferees really took into consideration the action and voice of the House in the conference. That, of course, is a matter entirely beyond the province of the Chair, and is a matter of speculation, necessarily. The Chair, therefore, overrules that point of order.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] raised the point of order that the provisions embodied in the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to recede and concur with an amendment to the Senate amendment was beyond the limits fixed in either the House bill or the Senate amendment. The Parliamentarian has furnished the Chair with a syllabus of an opinion by Chairman Hepburn, of Iowa, made on February 26, 1902, which may be found in Hinds' Precedents (vol. 5, sec. 6187). It is as follows: "In amending a Senate amendment the House is not confined within the limits of amount set by the original bill and the Senate amendment." The Chair thinks that that decision disposes of the point of order raised by the gentleman from Wisconsin. The Chair desires to say in passing upon these points of order that in cases of this kind the only requirement is that the amendment proposed in the motion to recede and concur with an amendment must be germane to the Senate amendment. This question arose on May 3, 1922, when Mr. Speaker Gillett, in overruling a point of order similar to this, held that to a Senate amendment providing a new method of taxation in the District of Columbia and revising the fiscal relationship of the District of Columbia and the United States with other incidental propositions and an amendment proposing a different scheme is germane, although different in detail.

The Chair thinks that these decisions fully cover points of order raised by the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Wisconsin, and therefore overrules the points of order.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, my purpose is to yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] one-half of the time to be used.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief. Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with a very serious question. The human equation that entered into the work of your committee was more effective than anything else. As I said a while ago, it is a painful duty, it is an unhappy task, to act upon the question of reduction of salaries.

If I read aright the sentiment that comes to my desk, expressed by thousands of letters in the last three months from all over the United States, the people of America are demanding that we cut down Government expenses. [Applause.]

Now, what do we propose here? We propose, without hurting any individual seriously, especially in the light of the fact that the cost of living has declined more than 10 per cent, to save for the taxpayers, those people upon whom we have recently placed additional burdens, $112,500,000. It may be that here in Washington the cost of living is high, but Washington must yield, as the rest of the country has done.

The House did pass a pay-cut proposal with an exemption of $2,500. At the same time the House turned down by an overwhelming vote the proposal to try to introduce into Government work the 5-day week or the staggering plan. The question here is, Shall we save some money for those who have these burdens to bear? To-day or next week, every time you buy a little candy, or go to a theater, or stamp a letter you will be paying a part of the money that goes to pay for Government salaries. I wish to repeat, more than one-quarter of the annual cost of operating the Government is involved in the salary roll. We do not propose to hurt anyone seriously by this amendment.

As a matter of fact, I think we should do to-day what every nation has done, what every State has done, what every municipality has done—take at least a 10 per cent salary cut from top to bottom. May I suggest that even 10 per cent is not enough? [Applause.]

The 5-day week policy may be a wise one for industry in this machine age. I shall not enter into a discussion of that at this time. It may be a very important question, but we should not settle it in this way. As a permanent policy I might not indorse it, but no man here can tell me that any government on earth has ever been able to make that policy apply in government work.

Why these gentlemen representing labor and industry continue to pound this Congress, and even reach the White House and reach the administration, and make them, if you please, embark upon a new field, a new policy known as the staggering or furlough plan, is more than I can understand. Why, they say, you are setting an example for industry. Mr. Speaker, industry has already set the example, and industry has necessarily made cuts from one end of this country to the other. There is no doubt about that.

They say also a 10 per cent cut will lower the standard of living in this country. Everyone knows the standard of living has already been lowered, and many a man who was a millionaire in 1929 is working with his hands to-day. The standard of living must under these conditions temporarily decline from what it was in 1929. The American people are now driven to a simpler mode of living. Nobody doubts that. If this plan could work in government successfully, it might be justified at a time like this; but why go into uncharted seas, if you please, when the plain, simple, businesslike, straightforward, manly, courageous thing to do is just to treat everybody alike and apply a flat pay cut from top to bottom?

What about the savings? Under the provisions as passed by the Senate it is estimated there will be $80,000,000 or $83,000,000 of savings. I do not care which figures you take, for no man has yet been able to say definitely how much it will save. The President of the United States wrote a letter some time in May to the engineers or somebody, and unfortunately addressed it to the wrong man. It was put in the RECORD by the distinguished gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. PRATT]. In that letter the President said the staggering plan will keep 100,000 people on the job and add 30,000 more.

Again I ask you, if your policy here is to save money, where is the economy in your staggering plan?

Is your policy here to-day—and that is what the President has very recently called upon us to do—to economize in government? All Americans are making the same call to-day, because they all pay a part of this. Why should not we have the courage to stand up and say: "Here is the businesslike thing to do"? Can we not get a little business in government? Must it be said that a political body can not act in a businesslike way in making adjustments to meet new conditions? The answer, of course, is that it is difficult, if not almost impossible.

Let me repeat: In the light of the fact that the cost of living is down 15 per cent and even more, 10 per cent cut is little enough to place upon any man who is fortunate enough to be on Uncle Sam's pay roll in times like these. The people will demand a greater reduction than we propose.

We regret, all of us regret, to see wages come down. But, Mr. Speaker, we are face to face with facts in this country, not theories. We know how men have been laid off in industry. We know how wages have been cut 20 to 25 per cent. We know that practically every city of the United States has made a flat cut. Now, why should the Government employee through his highly paid propagandist, one Luther Stewart, whose salary probably will not be cut, it matters not what we do, urge and insist that Congress, on the theory that we are establishing a great principle, get away from a businesslike method of salary reduction and adopt something that is problematical and untried and will eventually prove a disappointment?

Are you going to yield? Oh, I know the administration is now against this flat cut. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER], who was the father of this furlough plan originally in the House, says the President is for it, but every reasonable man knows it is not a sound policy.

I have not been a bitter partisan since I have been a Member of Congress, nor one who seeks to take undue advantage. I think my record will bear out this statement. What I am objecting to is that the President of the United States said in the newspapers, "Here is a great program. We are going to save $238,000,000 by the Senate bill." The Senate passed the bill, with the 10 per cent cut on all salaries over a thousand dollars, which of itself would have made a saving of $117,000,000 plus. Then the President demands his furlough plan as his own policy, and his followers in the Senate reverse their position, indorsing a furlough plan in preference to the other plan. He then goes to the country, if you please, with the impression, at least, that economy failed in the legislative branch of the Government, that we failed to economize in the legislative branch, and he, the great nominee of the Republican Party, the President of the United States, stands out as the only original economist, when by his own act he destroyed the economy measure in the Senate.

The result is the country gains the impression that the Congress is not doing its duty. He would climb to the heights over the dead bodies, politically speaking, of his own party Members of the Congress. It is selfish and unfair and unworthy of the President, I care not who changes his mind.

It is not fair to the House of Representatives and it is not fair to the legislative branch of the Government for the President to tell the country that this or that plan will save and then proceed to strike it down by his own hand. [Applause.] And you gentlemen know it. My beloved and distinguished friend over there, the minority leader, Mr. SNELL, is a business man. Deep down in his heart—and I can read it at this moment—he knows that it is a wild theory or an impossible theory to apply the furlough plan as written by the Senate in the work of this Government. In his plants he would not do that. In your business you would not do that. I challenge you to point to one government, point to one city or county if you please, point to any organization other than industrial which have adopted the furlough plan in preference to the flat cut.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman said that the estimated saving under the furlough plan was $83,000,000. What is the estimated saving under the gentleman's plan?

Mr. McDUFFIE. One hundred and twelve million five hundred thousand dollars, a difference of $33,000,000, provided the furlough can effect the amount claimed for it. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, of course, I can do nothing more in three minutes than explain my own position with reference to these two plans. It is impossible for me in that time to discuss either one of them.

I am going to vote for the proposition to reduce salaries by the percentage plan as proposed by the gentleman from Alabama. I confess to you it does not suit me, as I think every Member of this House knows. If I had my way I would begin at a certain percentage, with a proper exemption, and then I would go up to 25 per cent at least upon salaries of $10,000 and more. But here we are confronted with a proposition of accepting one or the other of these two plans. I can not see to save my life how the furlough plan is going to save the money which its proponents insist it will save. I can not see how we are going to save $80,000,000 or any other very large sum, and I predict that when the history of it is written you will find that this idea of saving $80,000,000 or $90,000,000 by the furlough plan is all a pipe dream. Of course, the election will be over then. Here we are confronted with a proposition by which we know what we are going to save. We know exactly how much it will keep in the Treasury. It will save not less than $112,500,000 and that can be easily and accurately calculated. Why should you and I, representing the taxpayers back home, turn the one down in order to accept a will-o'-the-wisp, something that nobody can tell and nobody can estimate as to its savings?

I would rather make this percentage a little less on these lower salaries but we can not get everything we want and we can not have everything we want. I am the more reconciled because the cost of living has gone down more than 10 per cent. We are faced here with the proposition of accepting one or the other. For my part, representing those who pay the taxes, as you and I do, I am going to take that proposition which guarantees how much you are going to save rather than something that many doubt will save as much as is claimed, and even those who claim a saving can not tell how much it will save. [Applause.]

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC].

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, when this proposition first came before this body I do not think there were very many who had a proper realization of the conditions that exist throughout the Nation. I feel that at the present time there is a greater emergency existing from the standpoint of the necessity of reducing expenditures than ever before. I take the same position as the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, who has just preceded me, and that is that we ought to have a graduated scale of reductions, so it might be said when we go home we were in a measure willing to do that which is now being done by certain kinds of private industry, and that is to reduce our own salaries in a proper proportion to that which is now being done by many institutions.

If I could have my way, I would present this amendment:

That the following scale of reductions in salaries shall apply to all officers, employees, and Members of Congress, unless otherwise exempted by law:
5 per cent on salaries of $2,000 to $3,000.
7½ per cent on salaries of $3,000 to $4,000.
10 per cent on salaries of $4,000 to $5,000.
15 per cent on salaries of $5,000 to $6,000.
20 per cent on salaries of $6,000 to $7,500.
25 per cent of all salaries exceeding $7,500.

On every roll call I voted with the Economy Committee on amendments to bring about reductions, and the chairman of the committee knows that I am in favor of reducing salaries of Members of Congress 25 per cent, so that the reduction will amount to twenty-five hundred dollars.

It does seem to me that such a reduction in salaries would be in line with present conditions. We know that the purchasing value of the dollar is practically 33⅓ per cent more than it was a few years ago. I take the position that if we can not get an amendment like that which I have read, we surely ought to be willing to vote for the proposition that is now before us, which will save us $30,000,000 more than that which is provided for in the furlough plan.

For that reason I am going to stand by the chairman of the committee, and I hope his amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I now yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], to be yielded as he sees fit.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER]. [Applause.]

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I thought the gentleman from Alabama would in his time explain to you just what is before the House and what further steps are contemplated.

There are two proposals before the House. One is known as the pay cut, which has been sponsored by the gentleman from Alabama for weeks; in fact, ever since there was an Economy Committee. That, in the shape it is here to-day, is a 10 per cent cut on all salaries of Federal employees except those who receive salaries of $1,200 or less. The other proposal is the furlough plan, which, as originally sponsored by me on the floor of this House, exempted salaries of Federal employees of $1,200 and less, and for officers and employees receiving $1,200 or more the 30-day furlough without pay applies. No salary would be reduced to less than $1,200 per annum.

I explained this before, and I have not the time in the few minutes I have to go over it again.

We are confronted with this peculiar situation: The gentleman from Alabama is in control of the time. He is offering this pay-cut amendment, for which he stands. If that fails, in his own time he is going to offer the furlough plan. Now, those who are for the furlough plan should vote down the pay-cut plan. Then the Members of the House will have an opportunity to vote for the furlough plan.

In the shape the two amendments are now in there is some difference of opinion as to just the amount of money that can be saved by the two plans. The difference is not large and the savings may be a little larger in the pay-cut plan. I can not go into the details of the two plans in the few minutes I have.

There is a principle involved here that is of vital concern to the whole country, and that is the 5-day week. We have about 8,000,000 men out of employment. If happily we could go back to the times we had in 1928 and 1929, there would still be 1,500,000 or 2,000,000 men out of employment. The only way you can get those people back to work and give them purchasing power is to shorten the number of days in the week and possibly shorten the number of hours in the day. There is absolutely no other solution of that.

Now our great Government comes along with this furlough plan and the most vital thing in this plan is the 5-day week. We have quite a number of per diem employees in the Government service. The Government undertakes to set an example to private industry and to the world by establishing the 5-day week. The way to take care of part of the unemployed, especially those technologically unemployed, is to pass the work around.

I want to tell my Republican colleagues that last week in Chicago, the Republican Party in its platform vigorously and enthusiastically declared for the 5-day week. Certainly no Republican can consistently, a week following that declaration I have just referred to, vote against the 5-day week proposal in the furlough plan.

I want to tell you Democrats that your convention is going to be next week and it is possible that your convention is going to indorse the 5-day week. Then, I ask you, why one week vote against the 5-day week when your party, the next week, may declare in favor of it?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman should also state that in that same Republican platform there is a plank on high salaries and high wages.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Here in the furlough plan we are maintaining the wage scale. We are not changing it, nor reducing it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three more minutes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. As I stated before, the savings in the furlough plan are about the same as the savings in the pay-cut plan.

It has been carefully worked out with respect to the Post Office Department. I had this chart [indicating] before you the other time this matter was up. This part shows you the working of the furlough plan. It shows the gross saving under the furlough plan and the net saving, so far as the Post Office Department is concerned. If this furlough plan is incorporated in the law it will not mean the discharge of any employees and will mean additional substitute employees of 14,500.

How it may work in the other departments I can not say, because I have only had time to study its operation as applied to the Post Office Department. The furlough plan saves money, is more humane, is abreast of the best thought in so far as treating labor fairly is concerned, and is a forward step in recognition of the 5-day week for employees in the Government service. The Government is setting an example for all industry to follow. [Applause.]

This furlough plan will save money and is more humane, and since I originally presented this furlough plan to this House, the labor leaders of the country have come out for it and have indorsed it.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. They have indorsed it as the lesser of two evils.

Mr. RAMSEYER. They have indorsed it. We have got to take one or the other, either the furlough plan or the pay-cut plan. You have only the two proposals before you and labor has come out definitely for the furlough plan, without any ifs or ands.

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I yield.

Mr. MOUSER. And the Letter Carriers' Association of a number of States has indorsed the furlough plan as their choice of the two.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I think the gentleman is correct. So far as the Government employees are concerned, there can be no question at all as to this furlough plan being much better for them, and at the same time saving considerably more money for the Treasury.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I yield.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Did not the gentleman hear Mr. Brown, the Postmaster General, say to the President in our presence at the White House in one of our conferences that he did not see how he could work the furlough plan in the Post Office Department?

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman is incorrect. The only thing Mr. Brown stated was that the furlough plan could not be applied to rural carriers and effect a saving. The gentleman knows how we propose to take care of the rural carriers. We intend to be fair to the rural carriers and to all Federal employees. In closing I want to emphasize that you vote down the McDuffie pay-cut amendment and then we can adopt the furlough plan. [Applause.]

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, in order to present accurately the Postmaster General's attitude on the furlough plan and his attitude toward the rural carriers, I present for the RECORD a letter from him which I received this morning, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 20, 1932.

Hon. C. WILLIAM RAMSEYER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: It has been reported to me that I have been quoted by certain Members of Congress as saying that the furlough plan could not satisfactorily be applied to the Postal Service. I have at no time made any such statement, and I would appreciate it if you will so advise those with whom you are associated in drafting the various provisions of the economy bill.

I have, of course, drawn attention to the fact that the furlough plan can not be applied to advantage in the Rural Free Delivery Service, where we have no surplus employees and where it would accordingly be necessary to replace every furloughed regular by a substitute who would draw the same compensation. With this exception, however, the furlough plan is admirably suited to the situation which now exists in the Postal Service. This exception was, of course, taken care of in your draft of the furlough legislation by a provision exempting rural carriers from the furlough and subjecting them, instead, to a reduction of 2½ cents per mile in their allowance for equipment maintenance.

It is my understanding that the conferees are now giving consideration to a provision, which would apply generally throughout the entire service, subjecting all employees who for any service reason can not advantageously be placed on furlough without pay to a reduction of 8⅓ per cent in salary. It is my opinion that this provision could be more equitably applied to rural carriers than the proposed reduction in their equipment-maintenance allowance, and I recommend, therefore, that the special provision dealing with rural carriers on the basis of their equipment allowance be eliminated from the legislation. In this connection, however, it would be advisable, in my judgment, to provide that the gross compensation of rural carriers, including the amount of the vehicle allowance, should be made subject to the proposed reduction.

Yours very truly,

WALTER F. BROWN.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON].

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the furlough plan, as has already been stated, will be very simple in operation. The present employees, on the average, take one month's leave with pay. Under the furlough plan, they will be obliged to take one month's leave during the fiscal year 1933 without pay. Those who say they can see no savings simply refuse to look at the facts. Under the furlough plan the employees will give exactly the same amount of time to their work that they are giving now, but each of them will receive one month's less pay. Multiply the number of employees by the amount they receive for one month and you get the exact saving. There is nothing complicated or uncertain about that. This computation will give you $85,000,000. This saving we know there is in the furlough plan. Other salary cuts and savings in the amendment which we propose to substitute for the McDuffie proposal will bring the savings up to about $100,000,000, making the total savings of the economy bill something like $165,000,000. At the same time, the furlough plan recognizes the principle of the 5-day week. This principle is being more and more recognized by business and industry as the only solution for our labor problem. We can not go on improving labor-saving machinery and speeding up mass production indefinitely without reducing the hours of labor, if labor is to find employment. It is better that the Government should pay its employees for 11 months only and keep them at work than to add thousands of them to the ranks of the unemployed. They ought not at this time to be sent out into the labor market to push out or prevent others from securing employment.

It is better that each individual should get less and that more should be employed. This is an emergency measure and all of us will have to make some sacrifices. Members of Congress take a 10 per cent straight cut on salary, a reduction of 25 per cent in mileage allowance, and 8.3 per cent on clerical services. This cut is proportionately heavier than the employees are required to take.

The question of how the rural carriers are affected has been raised a good many times during the morning. The rural carriers will receive exactly the same kind of cut on their basic pay that other employees receive who are affected by the furlough plan. Their equipment allowance is reduced one-eighth. The original provision left their basic pay untouched but cut their mileage allowance three-fifths. It was found that this operated unequally as between the carriers on short and long routes and discriminated unfairly against them as compared with other services. This discrimination is rectified by the amendment and is satisfactory to the carriers who have always expressed a willingness to take their share of any reduction that might be made.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, it must be made clear that there are two alternatives. One is the pay cut, with 10 per cent reduction and $1,200 limit, and the House plan, which provides for 11 per cent reduction and $2,500 exemption. Unfortunately that is not before us now. It should be. The parliamentary strategists are so far succeeding in keeping the House bill provision as to pay cuts away from the House itself.

As between the two plans, anyone with any sympathy for the wage earner will take the lesser of the two evils. The lesser of the two evils is indicated by a difference of $30,000,000. Under the modification contained in the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, according to his own statement, it would cost the Federal employees about $30,000,000 more if adopted than the furlough plan. I naturally want to save this $30,000,000 for the badly treated Federal employees.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman will recollect that labor was in favor of the $2,500 exemption.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; but unfortunately that is not before the House now. The only redeeming feature of the furlough plan is that it furnishes a basis for a 5-day week. That can be made a real basis, but it depends on how it is administered. If the administration is sincere, if the administration, I repeat, is sincere and honestly seeks to establish a 5-day week, the furlough plan affords an opportunity to do so; otherwise the poor Federal employee will simply suffer.

If the Treasury Department will put the Treasury Department, with the Internal Revenue, Comptroller of the Currency, customhouse, and other bureaus, on a 5-day basis, that will compel the banks and importers and exporters and business generally to go on a 5-day basis, and that in turn would force factories and industries on a 5-day week. If we can put banks, commerce, and industry on a 5-day-week basis, it will produce additional employment for 2,500,000 persons.

We have assurance from the Secretary of the Treasury, and responsible members of the administration have previously stated their approval of a 5-day week. Gentlemen, if the administration will translate that approval into action, a 5-day week can be established. I want to see results. The President is also on record as being in favor of the 5-day week. It takes more than a mere approval of the principles of this proposition. It now requires the will, the courage, and the determination to see it through. It requires the ability to resist the selfish demands of exploiters.

So I say that if Congress provides a furlough on the basis of a 5-day week, if properly administered, it may force industry, commerce, and banks to go on a 5-day week.

We can not legislate for a 5-day week in private industry under the limitations of the Federal Constitution, but we can by this provision, if honestly and properly administered, compel the banks, commerce, and industries to go on a 5-day week.

I would like to vote down the whole proposition and have new conferees, but that seems to be impossible. Yet I shall continue to fight against unjust pay reductions; but as between the two propositions I shall prefer the furlough plan. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield three minutes, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, there is not now before us the question as to what I or other individual Members would choose if we had the power to dictate action. Here are two alternatives, the 10 per cent wage cut or the furlough plan for governmental workers. Under all the circumstances I believe there should be no hesitation on the part of those who wish to give the greatest protection possible to the moderate wage standards of these competent and faithful employees in voting against the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE].

When the so-called economy bill was brought in, I stated that I did not believe that the wage cuts provided in it would help to lift us out of the swamp of depression in which we find ourselves submerged. I voted to exempt from reduction wages up to $2,500 a year, and I should be glad to vote again for that provision.

However, this parliamentary situation now forces us to choose between shorter hours with reduced pay or present hours with still greater reduction in pay. Facing such a choice, I vote for the furlough plan.

The adoption of this furlough plan will have one great advantage. It will be a step in the direction of the 5-day week. Unfortunately the workers will have to pay the total cost of the shorter hours for the year, but I am hopeful that such a condition will not apply after 1933.

Under this plan, the wage standards which have been secured only after many years of devoted effort will be left untouched. With our return to normal times, there should be no hesitation in making those wage schedules apply to the 40-hour week.

Every vote in this House should be weighed as to its effect upon employment. Unemployment is a menace to national safety and security. It must be overcome and the only cure for unemployment is employment.

For 10 years American industry substituted machine power for man power without the slightest regard for the consequences. During that period 1 out of every 14 men was fired while the remaining 13 turned out the production of 18 men. In 1929 our factories produced 42 per cent more than they did in 1919, with 456,000 fewer workers. American railroads transported more business with 253,000 fewer employees. Coal corporations increased the output per man 23 per cent and discharged 100,000 mine workers.

Mr. Speaker, it is a great thing to have improved machinery and more efficient methods of production, but if there is any wisdom and enlightened common sense among us, we must make sure that for every worker put out of a job by these machines and methods, there is a job created by shortened hours.

If the 40-hour week could be established in all industry, 8,000,000 or more idle workers would have their hands busy with productive tasks within 30 days. It is a remedy which goes to causes, not symptoms.

It is in accordance with American progress and creates no revolutionary change in our system. It would permit the production of all the necessities, comforts, and luxuries needed by every American family.

Therefore, since we must choose between present working hours with reduced pay and shorter hours with reduced income, I choose the shorter hours. If we must adopt a policy of reduced purchasing power for Government workers, let us also adopt the policy of the 5-day week. Then we may hope to salvage a great and permanent benefit for Government workers in the future and set an example to private industry, which, when adopted, will prove that our great inventions and labor-saving devices have not been a curse to human beings.

We can master these machines by shorter hours and make possible a higher standard of living and a more abundant life for the workers of this Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I noted from the chart displayed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER], that the furlough plan will mean a reduction of $39,000,000 from the pay roll of the Postal Service, the largest and most comprehensive agency of the Government for advancing the public welfare.

If I had the time I should like to analyze the action already taken by the House in relation to this great service institution.

The estimated revenues for the fiscal year 1932 are $597,000,000 and the total expenditures for all postal and nonpostal activities will be $797,000,000.

The revenues dropped $60,000,000 in 1932 over 1931 but the deficit will increase only $52,000,000 which shows that $8,000,000 was absorbed by various economies in the service.

Now the legislation passed in this session affecting the service will apply to the fiscal year 1933.

The 1-cent tax on first-class mail is estimated to yield $135,000,000. The second-class increase will amount to $5,000,000 according to the department. The increased rates and weights approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the increased rates on special services passed by the House, will mean increased revenues of $34,750,000.

In other words, there is in sight an estimated increase in postal revenues of $174,750,000.

Now, if we calculate that the normal revenues will continue for 1933 at only the abnormally low returns of 1932, the total revenues for 1933 would be $772,000,000.

That is the revenue side of this equation. Let us turn to the expenditures. In 1932 the total expenditures are $797,000,000. Of this amount the total expended for salaries and wages was $555,000,000.

The decreased compensation to postal workers under the furlough plan at 8.3 per cent will amount to $39,000,000.

The elimination of automatic promotion amounts to $1,800,000.

Leaving vacancies unfilled will save $7,000,000.

The cut in travel allowance will mean a lessened cost amounting to $1,500,000.

The cut for supervisors and postmasters due to decreased receipts in the offices will mean $2,600,000.

With the night differential of 10 per cent cut in half, there will be a reduction of $2,500,000.

The total amount involved in these curtailing measures is a little over $54,000,000.

If we take this amount from the expenditures for 1932, we have $743,000,000 as the total for 1933.

In 1932 the sum of $50,000,000 was paid for air mail and merchant marine subsidies and the other policies which Congress has declared to be charges against the Treasury and not the postal budget.

Taking the same figure for 1933, we find that there will be expended in that year the sum of $693,000,000 for truly postal operations.

Receipts at $772,000,000 and expenditures at $693,000,000 means that we have not simply balanced the postal budget, but have forced a surplus of $79,000,000.

Surely on such a showing under the furlough plan no one should now contend that we should go still farther and under the wage-cut proposal before us take more than $10,000,000 in addition from the pay envelopes of postal workers.

I have taken opportunity to confer with the official representatives of the leading postal organizations. These men are patriotic leaders of patriotic American workers. They know the conditions, and while they believe, as I do, that reducing purchasing power at this time will not help in this time of trouble, I believe I speak their sentiment when I say that they gladly choose the furlough plan in preference to this 10 per cent wage cut with all that is involved in it.

I hope the motion before us will be voted down and the furlough plan will be substituted for it. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD].

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, a strange situation confronts us to-day in that we are called upon by the conferees to vote either for or against two plans, both of which the House has heretofore rejected. Certainly, the pay-cut plan has no right before us to-day, and the only right the furlough plan has for consideration is the fact that it was written into the bill in the Senate by friends of the workers who insisted that it was by far the best policy to adopt at this time, the only forward-looking economic policy considered at this session of Congress. The pay-cut plan is a backward economic plan and should not be countenanced by the Congress. Speaking as a member of the Post Office Committee, I am in favor of the furlough plan as proposed by the progressive Senators of both Democratic and Republican Parties in the Senate. I can say to you it will be more acceptable to the postal employees than the wage-reduction plan. Already postal receipts have been reduced in the past two years by 30 per cent. We have increased the postal rates which will further reduce postal business. We are now threatened with a 10 per cent cut in the Post Office appropriation bill, and in this very bill in the second section there is a mandatory-furlough plan that will require the Postmaster General and the head of every other department to furlough the employees in order to keep within their appropriations. The only difference between that furlough plan, which has been already accepted by the House and Senate conferees and which will be left in the bill, no matter what we do now, and the furlough plan we are now debating, is that it is a disorderly plan and it should be obviated by accepting this orderly plan. I plead with you, my colleagues, to defeat this pay-cut plan, which we repudiated before, and to accept the furlough plan as the least of evils. A furlough plan may eventually be forced on the employees of the Post Office Department, because the provisions in section 2 of the bill, the drastic cut in the appropriations, the tremendous decrease in the volume of postal business are bound to result in a furlough, but we do not want a furlough and a pay cut also. The Democratic Convention next week in Chicago will go on record for the 5-day plan, and if the gentleman from Alabama takes his pay-cut plan to the convention at Chicago, I am sure it will be voted down by the resolutions committee. The Republican Convention has approved a 5-day week. By accepting this plan we can expect to secure a permanent 5-day week for all Federal employees in the near future. A shorter work day and a shorter work week is the necessary solution of the unemployment situation that confronts the country to-day.

Our rejection of the furlough plan to-day sets the House against the 5-day week and we may expect the conferees to come back with a horizontal reduction in wages and salaries of all Government employees that will be followed by further wage cuts in private business throughout the entire country. Let us maintain wage standards and the sacrifice we make to-day will result in a greater victory for the workers everywhere. [Applause.]

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER].

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, the members of the Economy Committee of the House and of the Senate have labored long and hard in trying to bring in a bill whereby we would be able to reduce salaries of Government employees, including our own salaries. At this late date in the session we have come to the place where we have the privilege only of voting up the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE] or accepting the furlough plan proposed by the President. As far as I am concerned, I do not believe we will have a very great amount of savings from either of these plans. To-day down in South Carolina farmers are trucking into Washington and into the markets of the country their products and are unable to get a price that will pay them enough to pay for the trucking or the express thereon.

This Congress is now being called upon by the people of the country, including the farmers as well as every other type of citizens, requesting Congress to reduce Government expenses, including salaries, just as they have had to reduce expenses in their business. Now in the closing days of Congress you come in with this measly cut or with the furlough plan that will bring only a very small saving into the Treasury at this time. A number of amendments were offered when the House bill was under consideration, going as high as a 25 per cent cut in salaries of $10,000 and over, your salary and my salary. I voted for these amendments, but they were promptly voted down. It is no wonder that the press and the people of the country are lambasting Congress with all kinds of statements about the way that we are trying to legislate and requesting that Congress adjourn.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. The gentleman speaks of the farmers selling their products. Does he not think that if we were to spread out employment and give more by a staggering system that that would help the farmer sell his produce which he now can not sell?

Mr. FULMER. If I had my way about it, we would pass legislation, call it emergency or what not, to give the farmer a fair price for that which he produces. If you will do that, you would not be called upon to reduce anybody's salary.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. But that is not before the House.

Mr. FULMER. Well, I will say to the gentleman, if I have my way about it, this type of legislation will come before the House before we adjourn.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for the proposal advocated by the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE] for the reason that it proposes a larger cut in Government expenditures than does what is known as the furlough plan.

I do not think there is a great deal of difference in the two plans, as far as the results to be obtained are concerned. My only objection to both is that the reduction is not great enough. If there is any one thing that the taxpayers of this country are insisting upon, and with every reason, it is that the expenses of Government shall be curtailed or reduced. My mail is loaded down every day with requests that we reduce Government expenses. In fact the taxpayers are demanding that it be done.

In my judgment, Mr. Speaker, the first thing we should have done when Congress convened, before considering a revenue bill, before imposing additional taxes to burden those who are already heavily burdened, would have been to work out a well-considered plan of economy whereby the expenses of Government would have been reduced. We should have balanced the Budget in this way. That is what the administration should have recommended instead of waiting until the closing hours of this Congress and then come forward with some plan which will only make slight reductions. Mr. Speaker, we should effect drastic reductions in the expenses of the Government. States are finding it necessary to economize to the limit. Counties are finding it necessary to economize. Municipalities, individuals, all classes of business and all conditions of people are finding it absolutely necessary to curtail expenses. I have the kindliest feeling for the Government employees, but those who are so fortunate as to have Government positions at this time, whose salaries are secure and safe and certain, should, with patriotic spirit voluntarily come before Congress and request their salaries to be reduced.

Mr. Speaker, we, the representatives of the people in the Congress, should show our good faith first by reducing our own salaries at least 20 or 25 per cent. Then we could with perfect justification proceed to reduce the salaries of others who work for the Government. The cuts should be smaller in salaries in the lower brackets; that is, from $1,200 to $2,000 per annum. In my judgment, they should be reduced 5 per cent; from $2,000 to $5,000, 10 per cent; from $10,000 to $20,000, 25 per cent, and above that a still greater reduction should be made.

Had this course been pursued, it would not have been necessary to impose additional taxes to burden the people at a time when they are unable to bear present burdens. If we are not willing to meet this just demand of our constituents, or if we fail to do so, in my opinion, they will send representatives here who will respond to their requests. Not a dollar of additional taxes should have been imposed until the most rigid economy possible, consistent, of course, with efficiency in Government, had been brought about.

It would not be necessary to explain to the people why burdensome and irritating taxes had been imposed if we had at the outset reduced expenses of the Government in keeping with present conditions existing throughout the country.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the advocacy of the pay-cut plan offered by the chairman of the conferees of the House in preference to the furlough plan, and I listened to the discussion by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropirations of this body. The only argument for the pay-cut plan rather than the furlough plan was that it could be more readily understood by the intellectually indolent. [Laughter and applause.] There is no question at all that equal if not greater savings will result from the furlough plan rather than the pay-cut plan, but the pay cut provides a reduction in salary without any change of the days and hours of employment. With the savings effected throughout the appropriation bills and reduced appropriations for the various bureaus and divisions of the departments it will mean a discharge of thousands of employees who can be saved on the pay rolls if each of them will do a little less work and take a little less money. [Applause.] Because it is harder to understand the furlough plan than the pay-cut plan is no reason why we should be so mentally lazy as to turn thousands of employees out on the street to swell the army of unemployed when it is not necessary. [Applause.] Let no one fear to vote against the pay cut and vote for the furlough plan, lest the pay-cut plan carry, and he be in a position where apparently he may have voted against economy, because everybody interested in this question throughout the length and breadth of the land knows that the alternative is between the brutal pay cut, and the humane thing is the furlough system. That is the issue we will vote on.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Why is it that every other nation, every State, every municipality has dealt with it in the way that the gentleman says can be understood by the intellectually indolent?

Mr. LEHLBACH. That is the reason why we, the representatives of the people in their Federal Legislature, should point the right way. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF].

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, this House has before it at this time an opportunity to accomplish more for working America than has been presented to this House at any time during my 14 years' service here. Everyone present knows that in this country to-day there are more than 8,000,000 workers out of employment. Everyone ought to know that one of the contributing factors to that unemployment is the production and use of labor-displacing machinery in this country, together with the continuation of the 6-day week and the 8-hour day. Everyone ought to know that our production capacity because of these labor-displacing devices has reached a point where we can supply everything we can consume in eight or nine months in the year if we continue to operate our institutions the accustomed number of hours per week. Everyone ought to know unemployment had become a serious problem in this country even in 1928 and 1929, the years when prosperity was at its height, and all because of the conditions I have just described. Everyone ought to know also that the time has come when mass production and the operation of labor-saving machinery for six days a week and eight hours a day has to stop. Otherwise we will have a continually growing army of unemployed.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] stated a moment ago that if we could adopt a 5-day week in this country, all of the 8,000,000 men who are now unemployed will be put back to work. We must go farther than that. We must establish not alone the 5-day week but in times of stress, such as we have now, we must reduce the hours of work per day.

Statistics show us that if we could distribute the present available work among all desiring work and put them upon a 5-day-week and a 6-hour-day basis, every unemployed man in this country could go to work; bread lines would disappear; those ragged, hungry, penniless, disheartened bonus marchers who are here would not be here to-day. They would each have a job, and, after all, that is what they most desire. There would be a job for everybody everywhere in this country, with a remuneration that would at least give to every family in the country the necessities of life.

I say to you, my friends, that the thing that confronts this House is the selection of the road which we must follow in the years to come. To adopt the pay-cut slash with no reduction of either the days per week or the hours per day, offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE], is to discourage all attempts to find the real solution of the problem facing the country, to retard or delay for no one knows how long, a return to more normal conditions, and after such return to hasten another advent of the present distressing conditions.

To adopt the 5-day week furlough plan is to really install the 5-day foundation upon which the work week should be based to give needed encouragement to industry everywhere to do likewise. When this has been accomplished we will have a happier, a more prosperous, a more contented people. By all means this House should go on record as favoring the policy which definitely will accomplish this result. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, no man appreciates better than I do the importance of economy at this time and that the people of the United States are looking to us for economy measures. No man has worked harder than I have from the beginning of this session of Congress to keep down the appropriations. I also appreciate the fact that we must go even farther than that.

I fully appreciate the importance of the statement made by the chairman of your committee that it is impossible to overlook the $1,336,000,000 paid for Federal salaries. I agree with him that there must be at this time some decrease in that amount of money. The only difference between the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE] and myself is the way in which to accomplish that result.

Personally, I am in favor of the furlough plan for two definite reasons. I am in favor of it, first, because it adopts the principle of the 5-day week. When this country gets back to the condition where every laboring man in America is employed for five days a week we will be mighty happy. [Applause.]

I am confidentially informed that several of the largest corporations of the United States at the present time either have adopted or immediately are going to adopt the 5-day-work week, and it is all right for the Federal Government to set the example.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman from New York left the impression that by the adoption of the furlough plan we would soon be back to that happy condition in this country.

Mr. SNELL. We hope we are on the way toward realizing that condition, and I am sure we will arrive there quicker by the furlough plan than by adopting the straight-cut plan, for we will not separate any man from the pay roll under the furlough plan—just give him a month vacation without pay.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Then you will not save any money, will you?

Mr. SNELL. We are going to give every man, under the furlough plan, a month's vacation without pay, and that will save just about the same amount of money. Furthermore, I am opposed to reducing the basic-wage rate at the present time. This wage rate, or scale of Government employees' salaries, has been arrived at after very careful consideration by Congress and various committees, and we should not by one stroke of the pen cut it all off and destroy it.

This is exactly the same proposition the President suggested to the employers of labor two years ago: Stagger your employees, try and keep them all on the pay roll, give them all some work at a reasonable wage, and then the money will be equally distributed among all.

There is nothing indefinite about the furlough plan. Every single man or woman gets a month's leave without pay, and those employees that are indispensable have their wages cut 8⅓ per cent. So economy is accomplished clear down and it is absolutely definite. There is nothing indefinite about it, nothing that you can not understand.

Mr. PARSONS. How will there be any saving when you propose to add 35,000 employees to the pay roll?

Mr. SNELL. You simply put them on part-time pay, when the regulars are laid off.

Mr. PARSONS. If you do that you will only have a saving of $48,000,000 in the bill.

Mr. SNELL. No; you save just as much money, or a very little different amount than the 10 per cent straight cut.

And we must vote down this amendment in order to get a straight vote on the furlough plan.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER] such time as he desires.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I favor the pay-cut plan because it is definite and certain. The furlough program, commonly called the staggering plan, is indefinite and uncertain.

Those who are most opposed to the pay-cut plan base their opposition upon the grounds that it sets a bad precedent to cut Government salaries. What the people of the country are demanding is a cut in Federal salaries. The cost of living has been reduced in the country generally in the neighborhood of 20 per cent; certainly Government employees ought to be willing to accept a 10 per cent cut. This proposition will make a savings of $112,500,000, whereas it is claimed that only $80,000,000 will be saved by the furlough plan. This furlough plan provides for a 5-day week. It means that an employee shall only work five days in the week and that some one else will be hired to fill in the rest of the week. I can not understand how there will be a saving to the Government by reason of this procedure, and no one can explain it successfully. The pay cut will not only be more economical and save the taxpayers more money but it will work to the great interest and benefit of the employees. Industries and railroads have cut their employees' salaries, and it is nothing more than right that Government employees should take a cut in their salaries.

This Congress has passed a tax bill to produce more than a billion dollars for the year ending June 30, 1933. Government employees should not complain at accepting a cut. I know that the Federal employees in my district are willing to accept a 10 per cent cut, and I know they will not be hurt as much by this cut as they would by the adoption of the furlough plan, which requires them to take a month's vacation without pay. Where these vacations are taken some one has to take their place and draw the same salary. In my opinion, the so-called furlough or staggering plan is just an easy way of putting this matter over until after the election and will amount to no saving and no economy for the Government. Both plans provide for the same cut in the Congressman's salaries. Considering the reduction in a Congressman's salary of $1,000, the increase he will have to pay on his income tax, the deductions for clerk hire, stationery, and mileage will mean that each Congressman is contributing in the neighborhood of $2,000 to this economy program, and none are complaining.

If we do not practice economy in the reduction of salaries, men are going to be sent to this Congress next fall who will make a radical reduction. The people of this Nation are justly demanding it, and it is poor policy to advocate that a pay cut should not be made simply because it would set a bad precedent. If we adopt a 5-day week plan—mark my prediction—with the organization back of the civil-service employees, they will come to future sessions of Congress and continue until they are successful in having enacted a law giving them their full pay for a 5-day week. It will mean more people on the pay roll and a greater expense instead of economy for the Government. The furlough plan is not practicable and not workable. It is just a question of deciding upon a certain plan of economy for an uncertain experiment.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, the country is demanding economy in government. We have under consideration the conference report of the Economy Committee for the reduction of Federal salaries.

TWO PLANS

There are two methods. One is the reduction of 10 per cent of all salaries in excess of $1,000, known as the pay-cut plan, and the other method is the so-called furlough or staggering plan, advocated by President Hoover, which contemplates 12 months' work for 11 months' pay. The 10 per cent or pay-cut plan is definite and certain and would result in reductions in salaries aggregating $112,500,000. The furlough plan is indefinite and uncertain and is estimated to save in salaries $80,000,000.

It is said that the furlough plan provides for less work and less salary. It is advocated under the guise of promoting the 5-day week in industry. If the purpose is to do less work, there will not be much economy. Economy can only result by doing the same work for a smaller salary. The 5-day week really contemplates less compensation for fewer days. If industry is to pay the same compensation for five days' work that is being paid for six days' work, there will be no economy and there will be no opportunity for increasing the number of workers.

FURLOUGH INDEFINITE

Again it is said that the furlough plan will enable the Government to retain thousands of employees more than could be retained under the pay-cut plan.

It is urged that under the furlough plan 30,000 additional workers will be given employment. Where are the savings? Where are the ultimate reductions? Where does the taxpayer come in?

When the economy measure was being considered by the House on April 30, I stated that the real opportunity for economy in government was the reduction of the salaries of Federal employees. The statement stands. The Federal Budget is approximately $4,000,000,000. Federal salaries aggregate $1,341,670,730. We might as well face the facts. Economy in government means the reduction of salaries and it means the elimination of useless and unnecessary employees. One-third of the Budget is for salaries and one-fourth is for veterans.

Those who advocate the furlough plan are side-stepping the issue. The taxpayer is demanding economy. Where would be the benefit if one employee is retained at the same salary and then furloughed, to be replaced by a substitute at the same or similar salary? The President has been preaching economy. The furlough plan, as proposed by him, would enable the Chief Executive to expend the one-twelfth of all salaries in employing other Government clerks and officials. There would be no real economy. The argument for a 5-day week to support the furlough plan is deceptive and fallacious. There is a place for the 5-day week. It is not necessary, however, in order to foster the 5-day week, for the Government to pay for six days and only get five days' work.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], frankly admitted that no State or municipality had adopted the furlough or staggering plan. He asserted that Congress will be setting the example to both States and municipalities, as well as to industry. But it will be a sorry example. Can it be that the 435 Members of the House and the 96 Members of the Senate are right, and that all of the States, municipalities, and industries of the country are wrong? Can it be that the wisdom of Congress surpasses the combined wisdom of the Nation? I suggest that we ought to follow wise examples rather than set unwise precedents. Congress should follow the examples of economy set by all States and municipalities, as well as by industry.

PAY CUT DEFINITE

I observe that the Members of Congress who opposed any salary reductions whatsoever are now supporting the staggering plan. I am, therefore, confirmed in the view that the reduction by the pay-cut plan is more economical. In other words, the definite and certain economy under the pay-cut plan would result in savings to the Government of at least $33,000,000 more than under the furlough plan. Those who opposed any salary reduction at all recognize this fact.

It is interesting that the opponents of salary reductions are now advocating the furlough plan. Evidently the taxpayers are being heard from. The issue should be met squarely. Taxpayers are asking for real reductions and not furloughs.

The furlough plan is indefinite in many particulars. It is difficult to determine whether it contemplates the payment of eleven-twelfths of the existing salaries by the month or whether the same salary shall be paid and work done for the last month without any salary. There is a stipulation in the bill, however, that provides for impounding the savings of salaries for one month. This provision should be safeguarded. There should be no provision for the employment of substitutes or additional employees out of this fund. Otherwise there will be no real economy.

REAL SAVINGS

The President of the United States urges economy. It is to be regretted that the administration is opposing the definite and certain economies, which all can understand, provided in the percentage reduction of all salaries and wages. The furlough plan is calculated to mislead. In pleading for the furlough plan the President has urged that opportunity will be given for taking on additional workers. In the next breath the President of the United States complains that Congress has not given him full authority to reorganize the executive departments of the Government, without any report to Congress. What does the reorganization of government mean? What does the elimination of waste mean? What is involved in governmental extravagance? Nothing more or less than the elimination and discharge of unnecessary employees. Reorganization without the elimination of unnecessary employees is worse than useless. It means no economy whatsoever. If the President side-steps the issue by substituting furlough for percentage reduction, he can very easily side-step the issue by reorganizing and combining with no resulting economy, for economy will come only and largely by the elimination of Federal employees. If our sympathy for those who are to lose employment is to get the better of our judgment there will never be any elimination of waste and duplication. It is noticeable that those who opposed the reduction of salaries of Government employees 60 days ago have reversed themselves. They see the fallacy of their former arguments. If high salaries with oppressive taxes will relieve the depression, it would follow that increased salaries with still higher taxes would cure the depression. Such an argument is absurd.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

The only people who have not been affected by world-wide economic conditions have been Government employees. Thus far their salaries have not been reduced. Ten million men and women are out of work to-day. Railroads are unable to earn their fixed charges. Stocks have declined from $200 to $10 in many cases. Invested capital is bringing smaller and smaller returns. Farm commodities are selling at new low prices. The Government employees who oppose salary reductions are selfish. If they oppose reductions during the depression, how can they be heard to advocate increases in prosperous times? All must bear their share of the public burdens.

The National Industrial Conference Board finds that during the past two years wages have been cut 14 per cent, subordinate salaries 16 per cent, and the salaries of executives over 20 per cent. The Government should follow the example of industry. When the economy bill was being previously considered in the House I urged a greater percentage of reduction in the higher salaries. I advocated graduated reductions. I maintained then, and I maintain now, that the higher salaries should be reduced, and I will gladly vote again for a 25 per cent reduction in salaries of $10,000 and more. There should be a greater percentage of reduction in the higher salaries than in the lower salaries. Under the pending bill the salaries of Members of Congress are reduced $1,000, office assistance one-twelfth, and mileage one-third.

It is fair to say, however, that the Classification Board of the Federal Government reports that Government employees receiving salaries of $2,000 and less are receiving larger compensation than is paid for comparable work in private enterprises.

I have voted for every economy measure thus far proposed. I shall continue to support all measures for retrenchment in Government. I prefer that Government employees take a reasonable reduction, as otherwise an outraged public will demand reduction not only in salaries but reduction in the number of employees. The wise policy is for all employees to accept gracefully and thankfully a reasonable reduction in their salaries. I have no patience with those who say that the morale of Government employees will be lowered by the reduction of their salaries. It is a reflection upon their loyalty and their patriotism. If they are not satisfied, others will gladly take their places and at greatly reduced salaries.

It has been said that "patriotism consists just as much in believing in one's country in a depression as in fighting for it in war." All should do their bit and play their part as good soldiers. There is no place for the selfish nor is there any place for the slacker.

On January 1, 1932, aside from the military and naval forces, there were 741,775 Federal employees, and of these 525,342 were permanent employees and 216,433 temporary employees. It becomes important, therefore, I repeat, if the furlough plan is adopted, to impound the savings, if there is to be real economy, otherwise, every dollar taken from one employee will be given to another and no savings will result.

DEPRESSION

On March 21, 1932, Justice Brandeis, of the Supreme Court of the United States, in a notable opinion, among other things, said: "The people of the United States are now confronted with an emergency more serious than war." Many causes for the depression are assigned. Unbridled competition, labor-saving machinery, high and unduly excessive tariffs, unjustifiable inflation and wild speculation have been advanced as causes. All thinking men agree, however, that increased expenditures in government have had much to do with the depression. If these expenditures caused the crisis, their reduction will cure the depression.

The capitalistic system is on trial. There are those who advocate a choice between salvaging capitalism and embracing communism. The destiny of the United States, as well as the fate of democracy everywhere, is largely in the hands of Congress. The need of the hour is courageous statesmanship. To me the path of duty is plain. If citizens must economize, so must the Government. The steps are few but important. The expenses of government must be reduced; secondly, there should be no appropriations or new charges which are not necessary except for humanitarian purposes; and thirdly, taxes with as broad bases as possible should be levied to balance the Budget.

I therefore oppose the so-called relief bills providing for billions of dollars for public buildings in aid of unemployment. We now know that further borrowing by the Government means bankruptcy. The Government can no longer underwrite business. It is like administering oxygen and like blood transfusions. There is a saturation point in both appropriations and taxation. The Government can only spend as it collects. Governmental extravagance and overtaxation, like overdevelopment in industry, must be eliminated. We have had enough of palliatives and of artificial stimulants. We oppose a dole to the individual. We likewise oppose doles to industry and agriculture. They are temporary measures, but they will be burdensome to the taxpayers. They do not lead to the fundamental solution of our difficulties. There must be revival of trade and commerce. There must be the restoration of commodity prices. Confidence must be restored, faith must be instilled, and hoarding must stop. We should come more and more to realize that it is the duty of the citizen to support the Government and not the function of the Government to support the citizen.

Many causes contributed to the depression. There was extravagance in government and industry. There was mad speculation in the boom years. We sold our future in wheat, cotton, iron, and steel in advance. Sometimes we sold by wholesale and at other times in installments. Billions were loaned abroad by our bankers and foreign securities scattered throughout the Nation have shrunk in value. We know the way in. We are trying to find the way out. We now realize that it is not an easy way.

Government expenses must come down and duplication and overlapping must be eliminated. Bureaucracy, while firmly intrenched, must be reduced and controlled. It will take rare courage to do the job.

MOUNTING EXPENDITURES

Taxes—local, State, and national—took 6.4 per cent of the national income in 1913, and 14.4 per cent in 1930. Our income has decreased, and for the year 1932 the total tax burden will be approximately 20 per cent of the national income. The national income in our prosperous years amounted to about $70,000,000,000, and $14,000,000,000 of this amount was taken by the tax collector in 1929. This is twice the gross value of the farm production in 1929. The people are contributing directly or indirectly $33,000,000 a day for the support of local and State governments and $13,000,000 additional for the Federal Government. The Government takes the equivalent of one day's work a week for all of us in one form or another.

Whether we know it or not, we pay it just the same. Taxes have mounted silently but steadily. They have come upon us like a thief in the night. We did not mind so much in the fat years, but they are unbearable these lean years. At least 20 cents of every dollar earned on capital and labor goes to the expense of government, local, State, and National. Every man, woman, and child has to pay $100 a year to live in this free country. If not paid directly, it is paid indirectly in the increased cost of living.

It is fair to say, however, that the burden of taxes for the most part is local. The city taxes, county taxes, and State taxes are the taxes that are hurting and destroying. The taxes for schools and highways are burdensome. This is no excuse, however, for failing to reduce Federal taxes.

Statistics furnished by the Bureau of the Census show that State revenues increased from $458,232,597 in 1915 to $2,243,110,687 in 1930, while the expenditures increased from $494,907,084 to $2,290,270,069. There was a deficit, notwithstanding the tremendous increases in taxes of $1,290,270,059.

Counties have followed the same course. Revenues have been exceeded by expenditures. The revenues for 1912 were $370,043,046. The expenditures were $385,181,760. The gross debts were $395,207,409. In 10 years, the taxes collected amount to $745,000,000, and the gross debts were $1,386,430,000.

No factor contributed more to the economic distress that now prevails than the excess of current expenditures over current revenues in government. Deficits are largely responsible for the depression, hence the necessity for balancing all governmental budgets.

EXPENDITURES 1927 AND 1932

Members of Congress have received many letters from their constituents based upon statements that have been sent out by the Du Pont Co., of Delaware, the Standard Oil Co., Armour & Co., Marshall Field & Co., and other large institutions as to the increase in Federal expenditures from the year 1927 to the year 1932. The statement points out that there was expended by the major departments in 1927 $1,964,000,000, while the expenditures for 1932 amounted to $3,195,000,000. It was stated that there was an increase of $1,231,100,000. The statement unless explained and analyzed is startling. I do not undertake to justify Congress in the many expenditures that have been made. I believe that the Federal Budget should be reduced materially. It is fair to say that one-half of the Budget of approximately $4,000,000,000 is for fixed charges. The interest and sinking funds aggregate $1,000,000,000.

Veterans' relief takes another billion dollars. The ordinary expenditures are therefore approximately $2,000,000,000. Congress, during the present session, has already reduced the expenditures for 1933 by approximately $800,000,000. In his recommendations to Congress, the President asked for the expenditure of $369,000,000 less than the estimates for 1932. Congress has reduced the President's estimate by approximately $450,000,000. Apparently the President gets credit for economies while Congress really makes them. The apparent difference between the Budgets for 1927 and 1932 is easily explained. Practically all increases were due to emergency appropriations or are made in the interest of highways, agriculture, veterans, and public buildings. The postal deficit was approximately $167,000,000, the agricultural marketing fund was approximately $155,000,000, the merchant marine took $75,000,000, aircraft construction $47,000,000, veterans' expenses $246,000,000, and war claims $37,000,000, accounting for practically the differences referred to in the statement of $1,231,100,000.

In reality, there was an increase of only $69,000,000 from 1927 to 1932. It represented aid to agriculture, strengthening the activities of the Department of Justice, and providing facilities at the penal institutions, immigration and naturalization activities, and providing for the decennial census of 1930. The truth is that if we eliminate veterans' relief, public construction, and items having to do with creating labor for the unemployed, the proposed Budget for 1933 is the lowest the Government of the United States has had since pre-war days.

In common with other Members of Congress, I welcome the interest of the citizen and taxpayer in governmental expenditures. I know that every American is ready to do his bit in paying necessary taxes, but he has the right to insist that these taxes be expended for the general welfare and not disbursed for the benefit of any particular class or group.

In the world-wide depression, it seems that everybody knows what ought to be done but nobody can do it. We have learned, however, that we have had enough credit. We now know that producers of cotton, corn, and wheat need prices and not credit. We know that labor needs work and not a dole. While we can not tax ourselves out of the depression, we know that there can be no return to stability and prosperity unless we pay as we go. The organized minorities have brought us to ruin in Government expenditures, but the unorganized majorities are now demanding that special favors be shown to none, that equal rights be given to all and that justice obtain in legislation.

While the depression is worse than war, the morale of the American people has always conquered. A spirit of defeatism is more dangerous now than it would have been in 1917. Panic and despair would precipitate indescribable disaster. Calm courage and triumphant confidence will win in the future as the combination of faith and work has always won in the past. The United States has never lost a war and will not lose this one. Economy is more desirable than taxation, and taxation is better than borrowing, but the reduction of the costs of government is the first step toward economic recovery. [Applause.]

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GRIFFIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. It has been represented to me that if we vote for this pay-cut plan we are going to disturb the basis upon which retirement pay is determined.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I can not agree with the gentleman at all.

Mr. GRIFFIN. And that we will lessen the pay of Federal employees who are on the retired list.

Mr. McDUFFIE. That is true, if the retired pay amounts to more than $1,200; but it does not affect retired pay of enlisted men of the various services. Are you here to-day to fix a policy? On the other hand, are you here to-day to save something for the taxpayers of America? That is the question to be decided. The President of the United States has told the country that he will need $150,000,000 in addition to the savings in this bill. I would not be surprised if he needs $500,000,000 on the 1st day of July instead of $150,000,000. Here is an opportunity to come to the relief of the taxpayers and to save at least a part of the funds that the President of the United States says are absolutely necessary if we are to continue on an even keel financially in running the Government.

We live here in Washington in this keyed-up atmosphere and under pressure. We are surrounded by lobbyists of this minority and of that minority. These fine and splendid gentlemen and ladies are urging you to do this and do that, but do not be swept off of your feet, gentlemen, by them.

Go back in your minds to your homes. Think of those back home and the people who put up the money to pay these salaries. I appeal to you gentlemen on that side to join with us in a definite saving of at least $112,500,000. If this Congress does not take some affirmative action in making a reasonable cut in the salaries of those who are on the payroll of the Government let me warn you that the next Congress is coming here with a mandate and it will cut until it hurts. [Applause.] The people back home are going to speak to the next Congress in no uncertain terms. In behalf of the employees themselves, regardless of what Mr. Green says and regardless of what Mr. Steward says, I beg of you to save the employees from themselves and make a reasonable cut now, without serious hurt to anybody. It will place employees in better light before the country. In the light of the lower cost of living, the next Congress, representing the taxpayers will, I fear, cut salaries and in a way that will hurt the employees more than they can be hurt by this program. [Applause.]

In the next Congress you will see here the representatives of the taxpayers who will urge their cause before Congress. The great unorganized majority is going to organize; they will speak and in no uncertain terms. Let us not forget them to-day. Their eyes are upon us now and they will call us to give answer for what we do here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired. All time has expired.

TITLE I.—FURLOUGH OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

FURLOUGH PROVISIONS

SEC. 101. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933—

(a) The days of work of a per diem officer or employee receiving compensation at a rate which is equivalent to more than $1,000 per annum shall not exceed five in any one week, and the compensation for five days shall be ten-elevenths of that payable for a week's work of five and one-half days: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as modifying the method of fixing the daily rate of compensation of per diem officers or employees as now authorized by law: Provided further, That where the nature of the duties of a per diem officer or employee render it advisable, the provisions of subsection (b) may be applied in lieu of the provisions of this subsection.

(b) Each officer or employee receiving compensation on an annual basis at the rate of more than $1,000 per annum shall be furloughed without compensation for one calendar month, or for such periods as shall in the aggregate be equivalent to one calendar month, for which latter purpose 24 working days (counting Saturday as one-half day) shall be considered as the equivalent of one calendar month: Provided, That where the nature of the duties of any such officer or employee render it advisable, the provisions of subsection (a) may be applied in lieu of the provisions of this subsection: Provided further, That no officer or employee shall, without his consent, be furloughed under this subsection for more than five days in any one calendar month: Provided further, That the rate of compensation of any employee furloughed under the provisions of this act shall not be reduced by reason of the action of any wage board during the fiscal year 1933.

(c) If the application of the provisions of subsections (a) and (b) to any officer or employee would reduce his rate of compensation to less than $1,000 per annum, such provisions shall be applied to him only to the extent necessary to reduce his rate of compensation to $1,000 per annum.

SEC. 102. No officer or employee shall be exempted from the provisions of subsections (a) and (b) of section 101, except in those cases where the public service requires that the position be continuously filled and a suitable substitute can not be provided, and then only when authorized or approved in writing by the President of the United States. The Director of the Bureau of the Budget shall report to Congress on the first Monday in December in 1932 and 1933 the exemptions made under this section, divided according to salary, grade, and class.

SEC. 112. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, payments for equipment maintenance to carriers in the rural mail delivery service shall be seven-eighths of the amount now provided by law.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will there be an opportunity to offer an amendment to the present motion? Would the Speaker recognize a Member for that purpose?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama is in control of the measure.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman will agree with me that if we start amending this proposal we will be here a week or perhaps two weeks or three weeks. This is the furlough plan that the gentleman has suggested or, rather, it is a policy which the gentleman has indorsed.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The House amendment had a limitation of $2,500, the Senate had a limitation of $1,200, and the gentleman brings it down to $1,000.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is the point to which I want to offer an amendment, if the gentleman will yield for that purpose.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I do not want the gentleman to feel that I am arbitrary in the matter.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman is entirely within his rights.

Mr. McDUFFIE. If we bring it up to $1,200, why not carry it on to $1,500, or $2,000, or $2,500?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would favor bringing it up to $2,100.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman can see that we would never stop the amendments.

Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER].

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, this amendment which has just been offered by the gentleman from Alabama is the furlough plan, almost identical with the plan I originally offered on the floor of the House when the economy bill was before you.

The gentleman from Alabama, and the other conferees on the part of the House, Saturday worked out two amendments; one was the one that you have just voted down, and the other is the furlough amendment that is now before us for consideration.

The gentleman from Alabama has carried out his word to the letter, and nobody expected him to do otherwise; he has retained control of the time on conference report and offered the pay-cut amendment, and then, after that was lost, he has offered this furlough-plan amendment.

There is a provision in here that I have been asked to explain, and that is the treatment of the rural letter carriers. As it was in the original plan, the pay of the rural carriers was reduced by reducing the equipment allowance. That reduction on an average standard route was about a month's pay. But we discovered afterwards that as the mileage increased it reduced them out of all proportion to the reduction in pay of other Government employees. So in this amendment the rural carrier is reduced in his compensation just 8⅓ per cent and on his equipment allowance he is reduced one-eighth. I suggested 8⅓ per cent reduction on both compensation and equipment allowance, but the House conferees think that the reduction as carried in the amendment is fair.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes.

Mr. DYER. In the House provision it carried an exemption of $1,200, and in this you reduce it to $1,000.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes; that is a change in the plan as originally offered, but really there is not much difference.

Mr. DYER. How much is the Government going to gain by reducing the exemption from $1,200 to $1,000?

Mr. RAMSEYER. About $2,500,000.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. In the proposed amendment in reference to postmasters, supervisors and employees, it states that they shall not be reduced below 91⅔. What does that mean?

Mr. RAMSEYER. It means that they can not reduce them again, if they have been reduced to 91⅔ of the 1931 compensation.

Mr. DYER. What would be the total saving under this plan?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Between $90,000,000 and $100,000,000. I hope the House will speedily adopt this furlough-plan amendment.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama to explain the difference between the amendment that he has offered and that adopted by the Senate.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, if the House will bear with me, I will be glad to do so. Under the Senate provision for the furlough, or staggering plan, as some call it, employees, excepting those determined to be indispensable in the service of the Government, are to be furloughed for one month without pay.

Under the provisions of the furlough plan as presented and changed by this amendment every man, even though he be held indispensable in the service must contribute from his salary just as those who are furloughed for a month without pay. [Applause.]

In other words, in the last analysis, this is a pay cut disguised as a furlough. The only difference between the two is that my plan proposed 10 per cent on all salaries above $1,200, and this plan takes 8⅓ per cent of the salaries above $1,000. When the salary amounts to $10,000, the salary of a Member of Congress, the cut is 10 per cent, rather than 8⅓ per cent.

The furlough plan as originally presented to this House and as passed by the Senate took from the rural mail carriers five-eighths of their equipment allowance. As the amendment is changed and now presented to you, the rural carriers give up only one-eighth of their allowance plus 8⅓ per cent of their base pay. It prevents such gross discrimination as that of the Senate bill and saves them on an average about $45 per annum more than the Senate bill. It results in approximately 9 per cent cut in their total compensation. As this amendment now reads it means they sacrifice two-thirds of 1 per cent more than the other employees.

The clerk hire of Members of the House is reduced under this amendment 8⅓ per cent. The mileage was taken care of in the conference report already adopted cutting it 25 per cent. When the salary amounts to $12,000, and there is no furlough, that man gives up 12 per cent. When it gets to $15,000 he gives up 15 per cent, and when it gets to $20,000, he gives up 20 per cent. I say "gives up." I mean that much is deducted from his annual salary. That is the difference, in short, between the two plans. The amount saved under this plan, as best I could figure it—I am not an actuary by any means—is approximately $100,000,000, whereas the amount saved under the other pay-cut plan would be $112,500,000, under the $1,200 exemption and 10 per cent applied on all salaries above that. Provided, of course, that no substitutes are hired; the more substitutes hired the less the savings. That is the trouble about the furlough.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. In order to answer a question in respect to a reduction from $1,200 to $1,000 of the exemption the gentleman's first proposal excepted all those receiving not more than $1,200. This proposal exempts only those receiving up to $1,000. I am sorry the gentleman has changed that figure.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I regret very much that the gentleman does not agree with those of us who believe that is fair. In the first place, this is an 8⅓ per cent cut rather than a 10 per cent cut, and because of that it occurred to us that since we are lowering the percentage of cut, we might well lower the exemption.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to recede and concur with an amendment.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 326, nays 45, answered present 1, not voting 58, as follows:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—LEGISLATION APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days within which to extend their remarks on the conference report just adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to any salary cut affecting the incomes of the thousands of loyal men and women who work for our Government in humble capacities and receive meager pay which we see fit to give them for their services. I have before me a chart prepared from official sources which shows that out of the 732,460 men and women who receive pay or compensation from the Federal Government 124,618 or approximately one-fifth of the entire total employed by our Government receive less than $1,000. It is proposed not to cut the salaries of those whose pay is $1,000 or less.

I am wholly in accord with that, but it does not require a great deal of imagination to see that these employees whose salaries are as low as $1,000 per year can not possibly be subject to any cut in salary, because if their salaries were to be cut you may as well close all Government offices and make Government employment disappear from the face of the earth.

But do not deceive yourselves into thinking that by exempting from proposed salary cuts the lowest paid employees of the Government you will have done your duty by them. Do not forget that in addition to cutting the pay of Government employees you have seen fit to recommend to Congress that hereafter no promotions should be had in the Government service unless the President should, in a special case, order such promotions. In other words you are holding out the prospect to the 124,618 employees of the Government that no matter what happens and no matter how valuable they should become in the future, and no matter how much their needs require by way of additional compensation or salary they should not receive it. One thousand dollars is hereby established as a dead line of their earnings in the future. Is this to be our new standard of Government pay?

I am particularly afraid that this policy if brought into effect would result in "emulation" by our States and cities, and just as the Federal Government is now establishing a standard of pay at $1,000 per year our cities and States will very soon fall in line and do the same with their employees.

If the ultimate object of our present economic legislation was to restore confidence in our Government and reestablish prosperity, then we shall surely miss our aim if, instead of bringing happiness and well-being into the homes of thousands of Americans, we shall create a condition of gloom, fear, and depression.

After all, these 124,618 persons receiving a salary of $1,000 or less and the others composing the balance of the 732,460 Government employees affected by this proposed legislation are not producers but consumers of goods. Any money received by them is not invested in public or private securities but is spent for the necessities of life, and only to the extent to which these low-paid employees have the money to spend on necessities of life can the wheels of our industry turn and keep on producing.

If we stop this source from which this great purchasing power of our Nation comes and if by our own action we prevent these thousands of employees from spending for the necessities of their lives, we will be thereby diminishing the recuperative powers of the Nation and prevent great industries from turning out goods to satisfy the wants and needs of these thousands. Every cent withdrawn from circulation in this manner will simply mean that by that we shall retard and not advance a resumption of normal business and national prosperity.

We shall find a condition wherein ultimately the price of goods will keep on falling, and there will not be enough to purchase goods even at the lowered or falling prices.

Let us not deliberately bring about a ruin of our whole economic structure by this unscientific attempt to curtail our national expenditures. I have seen figures which claim that by doing what Congress sees fit to do we shall be able to cut down our national expenditures by $300,000,000 a year. While I doubt very much whether these figures are correct, and in fact I am inclined to believe they are not, yet I can not conceive the necessity of lopping off this comparatively small sum of money from our National Budget of $4,000,000,000 and thereby curtail the possibility of economic recovery of this country.

I believe our economic recovery can be advanced only if the well-being of thousands is looked after and if there will be no diminution in the purchasing power of the masses.

Seven hundred and thirty-two thousand four hundred and sixty persons receiving their pay from the Federal Government are a large mass of people who can easily affect the economic life of the country, and if we add to that amount the many thousands of proposed millions employed by the cities, counties, and States whose salaries may likewise eventually be cut, if they follow the example set by our Government, there surely is nothing but disaster staring us in the face in the future.

Some years ago, when the prosperity of the farmer was threatened by a drop in the price of the commodities raised or sold by him, it was our aim and ambition to accord relief to him, and Congress did not hesitate a minute to pass appropriate legislation to enable the farmer to get back on his feet economically in a manner in which Congress then saw the light. However, at the present time the tendency seems to be the other way.

We care nothing for the little fellow; let him shift for himself; if he is economically unable to care for himself, let him go under. Such, at least, seems to be the policy of the Economy Committee.

I do not believe that by any stretch of imagination can such a position be justified. I believe our duty to the country is to restore as speedily as possible confidence in our Government and in our economic well-being; by not doing anything to affect the progress of our business life, by letting the economic situation take care of itself, by permitting trade and business to readjust itself, and particularly by not curtailing the purchasing power of the masses we will be able to put an end speedily to the intolerable business conditions as they affect our Nation, will bring happiness to the many and prosperity to the country.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Speaker, this bill, H. R. 11267, under consideration to-day, which provides that no person holding a civil office or a position, appointive or elective, under the United States Government or the municipal government of the District of Columbia or any corporation the majority of stock of which is owned by the Government, shall be entitled to retired pay from the United States under the emergency officers' act, meets with my approval.

If I should be critical of this section and should make any suggestions, I would amend the section to read that no person who receives retired pay and a Government salary that total $2,000 a year would be entitled to draw retired pay for his disability.

However, since the conferees of the House and Senate have agreed upon $3,000 as the maximum amount, I am willing to abide by their findings.

Several months ago I spoke to members of the Economy Committee of the House and called attention to the fact that, in my opinion, no Member of Congress or anyone in the employ of the Government should draw both retired pay and the salary of that office. This might be permissible in better times, but even then I doubt as to whether or not two salaries should ever be paid out of the moneys of the United States Treasury to one person.

I realize, as has been said in the House, that this retirement pay is to compensate for a disability, and I also realize that some are not entitled to receive it at all. However, there are many officers who are entitled to it, and I believe it is for the good of those who are really entitled to it and who are incapacitated for work and carrying on that a law should be passed compelling those receiving retired pay to elect as to whether or not they should receive retirement pay or their Government salaries.

Personally I received compensation and retirement pay a great many years before I became a Congressman, and I have always felt since I have been elected, as is evidenced by my appearance before the committee, that retired pay and salaries should not be paid at the same time.

Several Members of Congress who have also been receiving compensation and retired pay feel as I do, and we welcome this opportunity of going on record as being against payment of salaries and retired pay to Members of Congress and those employed in Government positions.

I am happy, indeed, to support this section of the economy bill. I am of the opinion, however, that provision should be made in case of disabled men who are in civilian and Government employ that after they cease this employment they may again take advantage of compensation or retired pay, providing their physical condition at that time shows them to be entitled to it.

This bill makes ample provision along these lines. I am sure that no one who is able to earn $3,000 a year should object to having his retired pay taken away, as there are many, many people in the United States who are getting along with a great deal less.

As I have said, if I had my way, I would make the amount $2,000 instead of $3,000.

I compliment the committee upon having brought out this saving, and I only regret that the bill was not brought out for vote before this time. I also desire to thank the committee for having listened to some of my suggestions along these lines in reporting this bill that will not permit retired pay to those holding civil and elective office. I shall of course vote for and support the bill.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to a grave injustice that is being worked by the economy bill whether we place in effect the furlough plan or the straight wage-reduction plan. If we are to have a wage reduction, it should affect all alike. I am sorry that this bill is brought out under a rule that will not permit of amendment. I regret that so long a time has elapsed that this bill must be disposed of in a hurry. I think that if we had been given the proper information as to the condition of the Treasury in the first place, and had been given correct figures by the Secretary of the Treasury, that many of the injustices in this bill could have been eliminated.

I sympathize with the committee. I know that it was hard on them to be in a position where they had to accept Mr. Mellon's and Mr. Mills's figures as approved by the President and build a plan thereon, only to be called in by the President each time they had perfected a plan and told that the figures given had been in error and that they must change their whole plan of economy to fit a new set of figures. Such negligence on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury, when he has a vast army of experts at his command, seems to me most inexcusable.

Whether we adopt the straight percentage-cut plan or the furlough plan recommended by the President, in the final analysis it means a cut in wages. To call the plan a furlough plan does not change the result. That result is a reduction in purchasing power of the employee. That result is a further depletion of the money in circulation. And the result is that it falls heaviest on those least able to stand the reduction. On the man with an income from between $1,000 and $2,500 per year. I am sure that there is not a Member here who would insist that a man in that class is drawing too much money, that he is likely to become a menace to the country because of the wealth that he may amass. Yet he is the great burden bearer of this cut.

VETERANS' BUREAU EMPLOYEES

This bill is particularly unjust to the employees in United States Veterans' Bureau hospitals and in national military homes. I have such a hospital in my district. The employees there are faithful Government servants. The vast majority of them come within the lower income brackets. Many of them are married men with families and receive less than $1,400 per year. Some of them receive as low as $120 per month. Some receive lower than that. They are under the civil service. Under the civil service act they are supposed to work only eight hours per day. The intent of the act was that a civil-service employee was to work 8 hours and then have 16 hours for his own. This is not the fact in many of these hospitals and military homes if the information that I have is correct. Many of these employees are required to sleep at the institution. They are required to eat there. The orderlies or attendants are housed in dormitories. They do not have private rooms. Many are required to sleep in one room. Yet for this bed space they are required to pay the Government.

It is a violation of the intent of the civil service act to require these men and women to sleep on the premises. It is a violation of the spirit of the civil service act, because it means that the Veterans' Bureau exercises authority over them more than eight hours a day. They are not free from duty 16 hours a day as contemplated by the act, and they do not receive extra compensation for this extra time they are required to spend on the premises. Far from it. They are actually charged by the Government for that extra time. The Government uses these employees as a means of making a profit. They are required to pay to the institution $35 per month for room and board. For room and board, the equal of which, they can get in the city of Marion, Ind., for $20 to $25 per month.

These employees pay the Government at the rate of 83⅓ cents a day for board. They eat the same food as the patients. I have been informed that in the same hospital the patients are fed at a cost of 35 cents per day. Is this just to these employees?

Many of them have families that they are supporting. If allowed to remain at home with their families this $35 per month would go far toward maintaining that family. After deductions are made by the Government for board and the deduction is made for the civil-service retirement and pension fund with other authorized deductions, many of these employees have only $70 a month left to pay rent and buy food and clothing for their children and dependents. We need economy in government. But it is not fair or just on the part of the administration to argue that wages of Government employees should be reduced because the cost of living has been reduced and at the same time not reduce the amount that it is charging these employees for the cost of living that the Government supplies. A year ago we gave a moratorium of $250,000,000 to citizens of foreign countries. We are finding the answer to that gift now when to help make up that two hundred and fifty million we cut one hundred million off the family budgets of our own citizens. I opposed the moratorium, because I foresaw this result.

GOVERNMENT COMPETITION

In a way, and to the extent that the Government rooms and boards these employees, it is entering into competition with the owner of rental property and the business men of the district. Every dollar that the Government deducts from the salary of these employees means just that many dollars less for circulation among the business men in the communities where these institutions are located. I am opposed to the Government entering into competition with its citizens that it taxes for the benefit of government.

EFFECT ON DOCTORS AND OFFICIALS

This bill is also unjust to those employees for whom the Government provides private living quarters. The doctors and officials of these institutions. The cost of these homes located on the institution grounds were figured in on the basic salary. Now we cut the salary. But we do not cut the prices that were figured in on the basic pay for those living quarters. If the salary of the officer was based on $3,500, and he is compelled to accept living quarters in the institution when available, and the charge for such living quarters is $500 per year, he has left $3,000 per year due him from the Government. By this bill you would cut that $3,000 eight and one-third per cent. If you do so, it is only fair that you should give him the benefit of an 8⅓ per cent cut in the living quarters. The cost of his living quarters should be cut, too, and the benefit of that cut added on to his salary.

As before stated I regret that this conference report is not subject to amendment under the rules. I shall vote for the furlough plan as the least objectionable of the two plans. I wish that we might amend the bill so as to prevent this injustice. Since we can not, it is my intention to introduce a resolution, the intent of which is to remove the mandate requiring these employees to live and eat in the institution and to make such residence within the institution optional with the employee.

A law, whether it be an economy measure or any other legislation, should operate on all citizens alike. There should be no discrimination and under the conference agreement as given to the House this legislation does not place the employees of the Veterans' Bureau in hospitals on an equal basis with other employees.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 29) authorizing the printing and distribution of copies of the Federal laws relating to the veterans of various wars, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. SHIPSTEAD, Mr. MOSES, and Mr. FLETCHER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3847) entitled "An act to amend the act approved March 3, 1931, relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on public buildings."

FEDERAL AID IN CONSTRUCTION OF RURAL POST ROADS

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 36) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes, with certain amendments.

SEC. 7. All acts or parts of acts in any way inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed, and this act shall take effect on its passage.

Mr. STAFFORD and Mr. BRAND of Ohio rose.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COLTON. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRAND], a member of the committee, was on his feet seeking recognition to demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under such circumstances the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRAND] is entitled to demand a second.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I wish to inquire whether the gentleman from Ohio is opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman from Ohio opposed to the bill?

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. I am opposed to the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman qualifies and says he is opposed to the Senate bill, which is being considered.

The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, this is the same character of bill that has been enacted at the long session of Congress every two years since 1916, when we commenced national aid to roads. The Senate bill now being considered, with amendments by the Committee on Roads——

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield for me to propound a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. ALMON. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRAND] stated he was opposed to the Senate bill. The Senate bill is not being considered. The bill being considered is the Senate bill with certain amendments. I would like to inquire whether the gentleman from Ohio can qualify in stating he is opposed to the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Answering the inquiry of the gentleman, the gentleman from Ohio qualified by saying he was opposed to the Senate bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Senate bill is not under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON] moved to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no, Mr. Speaker. The bill that has been read is the Senate bill with certain House amendments. That is what is pending for consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not in disagreement with the gentleman on the facts, but the gentleman from Ohio did qualify by saying he was a member of the committee and that he was opposed to the Senate bill which has been reported.

Mr. STAFFORD. No, Mr. Speaker; with all respect, I wish to assert he did not qualify. I would like——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman from Ohio is qualified.

The gentleman from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. ALMON. I will state that this comes with a unanimous report from the Committee on Roads. It reduces the authorization in the Senate bill by $34,000,000.

The Senate bill authorized $125,000,000 a year for each of the fiscal years 1934 and 1935. We reduced that to $100,000,000, with the proviso that $16,000,000 in each of those years should be deducted or subtracted on account of the emergency highway bill that was passed by the last Congress which was expended last year. So that the bill reported by the Committee on Roads provides for only $84,000,000 as national aid to roads for the fiscal year 1934 and the fiscal year 1935.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. This bill authorizes an appropriation for 1934. We have just been trying to balance the Budget for 1933. What is the necessity of authorizing an additional appropriation for the building of roads throughout the country at this time until we have some idea as to what our income and our revenue for 1934 will be? [Applause.]

Mr. ALMON. I shall be very glad to answer that question. The national aid for highways law provides and requires the Secretary of Agriculture to report on or before the 1st day of January the allocations that are to be made for the two subsequent years. This has been done every two years since 1916. That is necessary in order that the States may be prepared to meet those allocations.

I have telegrams and requests from the State highway commissions of practically all the States urging that this be done at this time. This is a reduction, and I do not think anybody should object to it.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. I yield.

Mr. MAPES. Is it not true that Congress is being criticized now because the appropriations for the current year are not materially reduced? They were made nearly 18 months ago, and few, if any, could foresee then the economic conditions as they exist to-day. No one can tell now what the economic condition of the country will be one year or two years from now, and is it not a great mistake for us to authorize an appropriation of $100,000,000 or more for 1934 until we know what the economic condition then will be? [Applause.]

Mr. ALMON. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. COLTON. May I say to the gentleman from Michigan that the Budget estimates for 1934 are made up before Congress convenes again, and unless this authorization is passed the budget for road work can not be included.

Mr. MAPES. That is all the more reason, let me say to the gentleman, why we ought not to be building up a lot of expense here now when none of us know whether conditions are going to be any better then than they are now.

Mr. COLTON. Does the gentleman believe we might as well stop all road building?

Mr. MAPES. I do, until we are able to pay for it.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. I may say to the gentleman in reply to his question that the authorization for the appropriation does not make it necessary or mandatory that the money be appropriated. If conditions are such at the next session of Congress that Congress does not want to make them, the appropriations do not have to be made.

Mr. MAPES. But the gentleman knows we are making an authorization and that the State highway departments will plan upon the money if we pass this bill, and the pressure brought to bear upon Congress to make the appropriation will be almost irresistible when the time comes. [Applause.]

Mr. ALMON. Now, Mr. Speaker, let us not get excited about this. It is a very plain, simple duty we have to perform. I have got the Bureau of Public Roads to furnish me a statement showing the amount that will be allocated to the various States. You will find it at the end of the report. It is as follows:

The above statement was prepared by the Bureau of Public Roads at the request of the committee.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. No; I want to make my statement first.

We have heard a great deal about carrying out the recommendations of the Budget Bureau. The report here shows that the Bureau of the Budget, the Department of Agriculture, and the Department of the Interior have indorsed these amounts.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. ALMON. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman has suggested a list showing what the States will get. The point I am about to make is that we have got too much of this "pork-barrel" stuff.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman ask his question?

Mr. MICHENER. And it is not a question of what the States are going to get, but a question of how much is coming out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. ALMON. There is nothing unusual about this. We have been doing it every two years since 1916. We have cut down the amounts fixed in Senate bill 36, which passed the Senate on June 8, 1932, $34,000,000 on account of the financial condition of the Treasury and in accordance with the recommendations of the Bureau of the Budget, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of the Interior. Now, that ought to satisfy you.

It is necessary that these allocations be made and authorized in order that the States may make their plans to meet them, and as has been said by the gentleman from Illinois, if the next Congress does not see fit to appropriate the amounts they do not have to.

Mr. MOUSER. Suppose the Senate passes the $132,000,000 Federal aid bill that we passed. Would not that have some effect upon this bill?

Mr. ALMON. No. That bill authorizes an emergency appropriation to give employment to many who are unemployed and must be spent on or before July 1, 1933. It has no connection with this. This is for the fiscal years 1934 and 1935.

Mr. MOUSER. What happens to the $132,000,000?

Mr. ALMON. If that bill passes the Senate, as I have said, it will be expended on or before July 1, 1933.

Mr. MOUSER. In addition to what has already been appropriated?

Mr. ALMON. Yes; and the same thing was done by the last Congress when the $80,000,000 emergency appropriation was made. There are many more unemployed now than then.

The emergency bill of $132,000,000 the gentleman is talking about was to be used prior to the 1st of July, 1933, to give employment to the unemployed. It is considered that there is a greater percentage of every dollar expended in highway construction which goes into labor than that expended for any other purpose—at least 85 or 90 per cent.

Mr. MOUSER. If the Senate adopts that bill, we will be expending for Federal aid to the States $132,000,000 more than we commonly would expend.

Mr. ALMON. We would then be spending $125,000,000 less than we spent last year.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What I am concerned about is this: In the House bill which was passed in the hope of providing employment we had a provision against convict labor. Where is that provision in this bill that the gentleman is calling up under suspension of the rules?

Mr. ALMON. That is provided for in another bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But not in this bill.

Mr. ALMON. That could be provided for when the money is appropriated.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask my friend, the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, if he believes the House in its present mood and environment can sanely legislate? Certainly it can not, and I think we ought to adjourn. At least it would be wise to withdraw the bill and not vote upon it under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. ALMON. I think this will be settled in a few minutes. Nobody is going to oppose this bill unless it is someone who is opposed to national aid to roads.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is to decide whether or not it wants to go ahead with the regular road program which we have followed for at least the last 10 years. We began in about 1922 by authorizing two years ahead about $75,000,000 a year. We went ahead with that until 1930 and then we changed the amount to $125,000,000 a year, and the Senate has passed a bill for that amount for 1934 and 1935. Our road committee after a whole week's consideration of this question every day decided that we should not authorize more than $100,000,000 for the road program. The main reason we found for changing from $125,000,000 to $100,000,000 was that you can build just as many miles of road with $100,000,000 a year now as you could two years ago with $125,000,000. The cost of building roads and the cost of the materials has materially declined, and we, therefore, reported out a bill unanimously for $100,000,000 in place of the Senate bill for $125,000,000.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If the gentleman's committee would have waited, say, six months or nine months, it might have discovered that the same amount of work could be done for $80,000,000. [Applause.]

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. Here is another point. We have agreed to take off $16,000,000 that the States used last year so that there is only $84,000,000 in this program left.

Why should we pass this now? That is the point I want to get at. The legislatures will be meeting next winter. Some of them meet only once in two years. They could take up their program of matching this national Federal aid at that time, and they ought to know, and they always have known, what they could depend upon from the National Government when they meet.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. The point has been made that this is only an authorization and that Congress can determine a year or two years from now as to whether or not it will actually make the appropriation. Is not the gentleman making a conclusive argument that Congress must make the appropriation when the time comes, because after all these States have matched our authorization they will demand that our authorization or promise be carried out.

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. I will say this, that we are not under absolute obligations to appropriate this $100,000,000 if conditions are against us at that time. If conditions are against us at that time, we can appropriate less.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Under the arrangement by which we have advanced money to the States and made deductions we would not know how much ought to be deducted from the various States, and that would seriously interfere with the road program.

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. We have only obligated ourselves to take off $16,000,000 a year. If it were more, then that would be our responsibility.

Mr. ALMON. When the $80,000,000 was appropriated it provided an additional deduction for the next year, so it was not necessary to put that in the bill, because the law requires that to be deducted.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. The point I make is, How would the legislatures know what they could depend upon if that program goes through?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. In regard to the argument of the gentleman that this is simply a notification to the States, is not the action of the House to-day practically a mandate upon the State legislatures to appropriate money to meet the Federal aid?

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. No; I would not say it is mandatory upon the States, but it gives them some idea that we are going ahead with the program under the same method we have followed for the last 10 years.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman knows I have always been friendly to our Federal-aid system. When the House passed the bill providing $132,000,000 we wrote in the bill a limitation prohibiting the use of convict labor. We wrote the same limitation in the appropriation bill and here comes a Senate bill which it is proposed to pass under suspenson of the rules, where we can not offer an amendment. Unless we can get the convict-labor provision in the bill I am going to vote against it and the bill will be lost because you will need a two-thirds vote. I do not think that is treating us quite right.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. As I recall it, we passed the $132,500,000 authorization bill for work to be done in 1933. Is that correct?

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. It has failed to become law.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. We have also passed the regular appropriation of $125,000,000 for the fiscal years 1932 and 1933, under the act approved April 4, 1930, as I recall it.

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. That is correct. However, the amount was not $125,000,000.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. How much was it?

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. One hundred million dollars.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In the Garner bill, in section 321, we authorized an appropriation of $150,000,000, to be immediately available, for expenditure in emergency construction on the Federal highway systems, to be performed before June 30, 1933. That makes $132,500,000 plus $100,000,000 plus $150,000,000 that have been passed during this session by the House, and now you are proposing to add $100,000,000 for each of the years 1934 and 1935. Will there be any end to this construction program?

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. I am not yielding for a speech. The gentleman has asked his question, and I will say to the gentleman that the only thing this bill does is to provide an authorization for the appropriation of $100,000,000; and the other bills he mentions have not become law, and the only thing we are to consider is whether we are to continue the regular program year after year.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Irrespective of what one's attitude may be as to the wisdom of building roads in the future, this should be said in justification of the action of the committee:

Evidently they were prompted to report this bill since they recognized that in order that the President and the Bureau of the Budget might have an opportunity to at least consider whether they would submit recommendations to Congress when it meets in December they had to have this authorization. The appropriation bill for the year 1934 must be taken up and acted on in the months of December, January, and February, since this Congress will adjourn on March 4, next.

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And this authorization was necessary in order to put the matter in shape so that Congress and the President could give it consideration. It carries no appropriation.

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. Yes.

I may say, in conclusion, we carefully investigated the wishes of the administration, so far as we could, and we did think we were doing exactly what the other end of the Avenue wanted done.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not true that this authorization has the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. It has; yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And it is necessary to pass this authorization if the Congress is to make any appropriation whatsoever at the next session so the matter can be submitted by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. That is what the committee concluded.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And this is the usual authorization?

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. When was this approved by the Secretary of Agriculture? I notice the date here is January 26, 1932. Conditions have vastly changed since last January. We found this to be true in attempting to balance the Budget.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. But the Secretary of Agriculture has not changed and he has not changed that report.

Mr. STAFFORD. How does the gentleman know that? The Secretary was not asked about it.

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. I may say that we had this matter up with the Secretary of Agriculture about three weeks ago when we passed the bill out of committee.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] two minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me it is about time that the House of Representatives really went on record for economy. [Applause.]

We have come to the point in our Government where we have to cut the pay of the Federal employees $100,000,000 a year.

We have now got to stop authorizing large expenditures if we are going to stop large appropriations. [Applause.] This is the only possible way to do it. We can not say, "You can have all this money," and then turn around in a year and say, "No." We have got to put our foot down now. We must not go further with Federal-aid programs until the country is in a position to go ahead with them and pay the bill. [Applause.]

We have about "busted" every State in the Union by extravagant highway programs and there will not be any bottom left in any treasury of any State in the Union or in the Federal Treasury if we go on with such things as this.

The only thing for us to do and the only way we can meet our responsibility to the taxpayers back home is by beating this bill, and beating it by a majority vote. [Applause.]

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, it is easy to mislead the general public by the kind of speech which my learned friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has just made. There are many people who fail to distinguish between an authorization and an appropriation, because they are unacquainted with the rules under which the House acts in matters of this kind.

It so happens that the House is on record at this session in saying, and I think it will say the same thing in December, if conditions are unchanged, that we will not approve any appropriation for which a Budget estimate has not been submitted. The House has adhered to that policy. You have given no initial approval to any activity for which the President has not first submitted a Budget estimate.

Now, what has happened? This committee was not without justification in doing the orderly thing of providing an authorization for 1934 so that the Budget officer and the President might consider whether they desired to submit to the short session a Budget estimate for a road-building program in the fiscal year 1934.

It does not mean that this Congress is extravagant, when, pursuing the orderly way of legislation, you grant an authorization to give the President the opportunity of considering what he desires to submit in connection with a road program to the December session, which by operation of law ends on March 4 next.

Now, let me say that, before this Congress adjourns, whether you adjourn this week or next, this House, as well as the Senate, is going to give serious consideration to some form of aid or relief to the unemployed. I do not know what you will approve, but you will find, in view of the information now available, that if you are to avoid the dole system you must find employment for those now idle, yet willing and able to work. [Applause.]

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, it seems that it was not generally known that this bill would be brought up to-day, and in order to give you an opportunity to read the report. I intend to ask unanimous consent to withdraw my motion. I am firmly of the opinion that the Members of the House of Representatives are almost unanimously in favor of a continuation of Federal aid to roads, a system that was begun in 1916 and has proved universally popular. If this is brought up again later, I hope you will have read the report, and will vote for the bill. [Applause.]

Now, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to withdraw the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MOUSER. Reserving the right to object, I do not want to step on anybody's toes, but I think this House to-day, when we have reduced salaries of Government employees—the Members of the House are in a better frame of mind to remember from one hour to the next what they have done in the way of economy, in being asked to authorize the expenditure of a hundred million dollars for roads. However, in view of the situation, I will not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

CREATING A COMMISSION TO HOLD HEARINGS AND DRAFT SUITABLE BILLS FOR THE PROPER HANDLING OF PRIVATE CLAIMS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up House Joint Resolution 412, and pending this I wish to state to the Members of the House that this is a resolution calling for the appointment of a commission, composed of four Senators and four Representatives, to call witnesses and take testimony upon the adjournment of Congress and prepare a bill or bills to be submitted to the Congress in December designating some agency to handle private claims.

We passed a resolution exactly the same as this last year by unanimous consent, but it was not brought up for consideration in the Senate.

I have two amendments the purpose of which is to limit the expense to $5,000. It is my judgment that if we should designate an agency like the Comptroller General's office to settle private claims in an amount not to exceed $1,000 and to make recommendations to Congress on those above $1,000 in amount, that these claims will be speedily settled, save approximately $20,000,000, and at the same time save Members of Congress a great deal of time which is now spent in the consideration of trivial claims bills. No parliamentary body but ours wastes times with small-claims bills.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. May I ask the gentleman is this called up by unanimous consent?

Mr. COLLINS. It is.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a unanimous-consent request. On account of the fact that we have consumed so much time to-day in debate on the conference report the Consent Calendar has, of course, been displaced. I have been requested to ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, immediately after the consideration of the Sabath resolution, that it will be in order to call the Consent Calendar.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman will postpone that request until the majority leader makes it to-morrow. I object.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. In order that I may state to the gentleman that I am doing this at the request of the leadership of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WARREN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the majority leadership to present this unanimous-consent request, that to-morrow afternoon the House shall stand in recess until 8 o'clock p. m. at which time bills unobjected to on the Private Calendar shall be considered, beginning where we left off, and that the House shall adjourn at 10.30 o'clock p. m.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and I hope the gentleman will also withhold that until it can be made to-morrow by the majority leader.

Mr. WARREN. I am doing this at the request of the majority leader.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LAWS RELATING TO VETERANS

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Concurrent Resolution 29, authorizing the printing and distribution of copies of Federal laws relating to veterans of various wars, insist on the House amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Chair appoints the following conferees:

Mr. STEVENSON, Mr. LAMBETH, Mr. SHOTT.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, if we do not have the Unanimous Consent Calendar to-morrow, will the Chair kindly inform us the program that will be taken up?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair, on the floor Saturday before the House adjourned, announced that he would give to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] an opportunity to have a rule considered in respect to his resolution. After that it was contemplated that by unanimous consent we would take up the Consent Calendar to-morrow afternoon. The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] objects, and the matter of to-morrow's program, of course, under those circumstances can not be determined until the session begins to-morrow.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, in the event that unanimous consent is granted to-morrow to take up the Consent Calendar, would that include also suspensions?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would not include suspensions.

AMELIA EARHART PUTNAM

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 165, authorizing the President of the United States to present the distinguished-flying cross to Amelia Earhart Putnam, and agree to the same with an amendment which I shall offer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 165, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the committee, I reserve the right to object. I understand that the gentleman is going to offer an amendment to provide the distinguished-service medal instead of the distinguished-flying cross.

Mr. McSWAIN. That is correct.

Mr. SNELL. That will have nothing to do with granting rights to the floor of the House?

Mr. McSWAIN. Not at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. With the amendment suggested by the gentleman from South Carolina, it is satisfactory to me, because that is the amendment put on the Boardman-Polando bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. This lady is to be decorated to-morrow night by the National Geographic Society, and will be the guest of the House in the gallery to-morrow afternoon at 3 o'clock. We think it becoming to recognize her flight in this way at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 165

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized to present the distinguished flying cross to Amelia Earhart Putnam for displaying heroic courage and skill as a navigator, at the risk of her life, by her nonstop flight in her plane, unnamed, from Harbor Grace, Newfoundland, to Londonderry, Ireland, on May 20, 1932, by which she became the first and only woman, and the second person, to cross the Atlantic Ocean in a plane in solo flight, and also established new records for speed and elapsed time between the two continents.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the words "flying cross" and insert the words "service medal."

The amendment was agreed to and the Senate Joint Resolution 165 was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read: "Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States to present the distinguished-service medal to Amelia Earhart Putnam."

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, Miss Amelia Earhart happens to be a friend, a neighbor, and a constituent of mine, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point with reference to Miss Earhart.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, it is a great honor to be permitted to say a few words concerning the joint resolution now before the House authorizing the President of the United States to present the distinguished-flying cross to a constituent of mine who lives in the town of Rye, Westchester County, N. Y., Amelia Earhart Putnam, for displaying heroic courage and skill as a navigator at the risk of her life by her nonstop flight from Harbor Grace, Newfoundland, to Londonderry, Ireland, on May 20, 1932, by which she became the first and only woman and the second person to cross the Atlantic Ocean in a plane in solo flight and established new records for speed and elapsed time between the two continents.

Mrs. Putnam was born in Atchison, Kans. She was reared in California. Her early schooling was in Los Angeles. Her whole life story is one of absorbing interest. She was one of the earliest woman flyers, gaining her training in Los Angeles and San Diego. It was in California in 1918 she made her first solo flight, after but 10 hours' instruction. She held the altitude record for woman flyers with a mark of 14,000 feet for many years and other flying records for women.

While she was doing settlement work in Boston, the opportunity was presented to her to fly the Atlantic with Wilmer Stultz, pilot, and Louis Gordon, co-pilot. Mrs. Putnam has stated that the opportunity came as casually as an invitation to the matinee, and over the telephone.

Aviatrix, settlement worker, business woman, poet, student of literature, and possessed of enough wealth to make her independent of outside offers—such is one picture drawn of Amelia Earhart Putnam, the first successful woman to make a trans-Atlantic flight. The other side, her femininity, charming manners, perfect poise, and her sense of humor present a most delightful personality.

She made her notable trans-Atlantic flight on exactly the fifth anniversary of the flight of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh on May 20, 1927, which startled the whole world. She is the only person who ever crossed the Atlantic twice by airplane. She and Colonel Lindbergh are the only people who have crossed the Atlantic in solo flight.

Colonel Lindbergh went from New York to Paris in 33 hours and 30 minutes. Mrs. Putnam went from Harbor Grace to Ireland in 14 hours and 56 minutes, in record time. She is an extraordinary person. I know of no man who has more courage than she.

And in conclusion I wish to read to you some verses that were written by Mrs. Putnam. As has been well said by a friend of hers, they are eloquent of the spirit with which she meets each new developmnt in her own work.

Courage is the price that life exacts for granting peace.
The soul that knows it not, knows no release
From little things:
Knows not the livid loneliness of fear,
Nor mountain heights where bitter joy can hear
The sound of wings.
How can life grant us boon of living, compensate
For dull gray ugliness and pregnant hate
Unless we dare
The soul's dominion? Each time we make a choice, we pay
With courage to behold resistless day
And count it fair.

[Applause.]

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this resolution at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to indicate my hearty approval of the action of the Senate and House in passing this measure, Senate Joint Resolution 165, authorizing the President of the United States to present the distinguished-service cross to Amelia Earhart Putnam because of her heroic courage and marvelous skill in negotiating the first airplane solo flight by a woman across the Atlantic; because, also, she is the second person ever to cross the Atlantic in a plane in solo flight; and, in addition, because she also established new records for speed and elapsed time between the continents of North America and Europe.

A young woman of great energy and purpose, a doer of the deeds of high adventure, this second lone eagle of the seas has written her name across the heavens in letters of immortal flame. Only Lindbergh before, five years before to the day, had crossed the vast and treacherous expanse of water between the New World and the Old. He thrilled the entire earth by that unparalleled achievement. On May 21, 1927, I was in France, and I recall the great excitement and amazement of the French people occasioned by his great exploit. Since then it has been doubted whether ever again in this generation his deed would be matched or rivaled. Yet within one-fifth of a generation it has been rivaled by one of the opposite sex, possessing all of the characteristics of superb courage, cool judgment, perfect skill, endurance, and modesty which have so greatly distinguished the lone pilot of the Spirit of St. Louis.

In this day of gross materialism the accomplishments of men and women of this type stand out as the highest marks of inspiration for the youth of the world. The spirit which wrought these miracles of the air is greater than the things actually done, however dramatic and outstanding they may be.

Measured by all the qualities of mind and spirit Amelia Earhart Putnam has earned her place in the front rank of the world's doers of great deeds. We are honoring ourselves in this Chamber by according her the highest honor which is in our power to accord. To-morrow night the officials of that great scientific and travel organization, the National Geographic Society, in this city, will present to her its special medal, conferred only in rare instances for outstanding achievements. In recent years the few who have been likewise honored have included a Lindbergh, a Byrd, and an Eckener. Thus, for her wonderful achievement she will receive the distinguished-service medal, authorized by Congress, and the special medal of the National Geographic Society. These trophies of appreciation and others that will swiftly come to her she will wear with the quiet modesty that is so great and appealing an attribute of her character, and which has won for her a permanent place in the love and affection of the people of her own and other lands.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, this Congress will shortly adjourn. I have heard the question asked at both ends of the Capitol, "What have we done for agriculture?" The answer invariably is, "Nothing." If we were asked, "What have we done for the country at large?" I would answer, "Practically nothing."

True we have passed the moratorium, which has eased off our foreign creditors. We passed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, which has assisted the railroads and aided in the orderly liquidation of banks. These are merely palliatives, and but little assistance and little good have filtered down to the average business man or working man. Credit has not been loosened in the banks. Bank failures have only been checked, not stopped. Banks again are failing day by day and business is at a lower ebb than before we passed any of these measures. These measures were but stop-gap measures and were not fundamental. Our basic trouble is lack of trade. This I think will be admitted by everyone. Coupled with it is lack of confidence in the future. But once trade beings to pick up, confidence will be restored. If we accept as a fact that lack of trade, which naturally produces unemployment, is our basic trouble, then it is in order to ask what has become of our trade.

Mr. Hoover in his speech made on September 27, 1928, in Newark, N. J., said:

More than 2,000,000 families in the United States earn their living to-day producing goods for export, and another million families earn their living in the manufacture of raw materials which we import in exchange for our exports.

I will add that a half million more families did earn their living in the handling and distribution of the foreign goods which we imported.

In the same address Mr. Hoover said:

> Foreign trade is no artificial stimulant to employment. Its development is a vital contribution to the welfare of the American workman and the American merchant and the American farmer.

This was Mr. Hoover speaking before election.

I am quoting from a book called "The New Day," edited by Ray Lyman Wilbur, Secretary of the Interior, which contains all of Mr. Hoover's campaign speeches. I would advise my Democratic friends to obtain a copy of this book. It reads like Grimm's Fairy Tales. The picture he portrayed was glorious, but the reality is grim indeed.

Mr. Grundy had not yet called on him with reference to what his administration owed the manufacturers who put up the campaign funds. Immediately on the convening of Congress these manufacturers began their plans to stifle this foreign trade, which Mr. Hoover stated was so vital to the American workman and the American farmer. After the passage of this trade-destroying act, known as the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill, American capitalists accepted it as a permanent policy and began the exportation not of goods but of their capital for the building of plants in foreign lands. Between two and three thousands of these plants have now been established not for the employment of American workmen but for the employment of foreign workmen, leaving American labor to join the lengthening bread lines.

What has this to do with agriculture? The throwing out of work of these men has reduced the buying power of labor at home and started us on the down grade. But this was not the most vital factor. Retaliatory tariffs, the quota system, the licensing of processors of agricultural products in Europe so as to control the amount of foreign agricultural products practically barred our agricultural shipments to European nations. The world took the position that if we desired an isolation policy they would help us carry it out and they raised higher tariff walls. These higher tariffs have not only barred the sale of his surplus crops to Europe but have increased the proportionate cost between what the farmer has to sell and what he must buy. His foreign outlet being blocked, huge surpluses have weighed his markets down until he can no longer meet his fixed expenses to say nothing of buying goods produced in the cities.

What have we done in this session of Congress to relieve his conditions? Almost immediately upon the convening and the organization of this House by the Democrats we passed a Democratic tariff bill which authorized the President to call an economic conference for the purpose of reestablishing this lost trade with the world. Notwithstanding that the Senate is controlled by the opposition, there were enough fair-minded men that this measure was passed by the other body. It met a political veto. I think this veto can be well described as "playing politics with human misery." The excuse for the veto was the fear of "foreign entanglements." Statements made on the floor of the House were to the effect that we were going to inquire of our foreign neighbors what our tariffs should be.

We have recently sent representatives to Europe to discuss armaments. Shall we inquire of foreign nations what our armaments shall be? If we can discuss our armaments with Europe, we can surely discuss our trade relations. It is an old axiom that it takes two to make a trade. The Republicans ignored this axiom and decided that we would sell, but we would not buy. Trade means buying and selling. It is my contention that any uneconomic attempt to lift agriculture by its own boot straps will result in failure and more damage to the farmer. We have witnessed the interference with the normal course of the markets by the Federal Farm Board. We have also recorded the disastrous results and we have not yet seen the end. Our Republican brethren in convention assembled at Chicago resolved to carry on their Farm Board operations and decided to keep up their smoke screen to befuddle the farmer's mind, namely, cooperative marketing. To cooperative marketing I am not opposed, but I contend that it is not the business of this Government to drive any people into business nor to drive any people out of business. The Farm Board has been engaged in both, and should be eliminated at the very earliest date possible. No Washington bureau can direct the marketing forces of this Nation.

I am glad to note that one of the outstanding candidates whose name will be presented to the coming Democratic convention has had the courage and the foresight to outline a program that will not only aid agriculture but aid unemployment. In the meantime he is in favor of protecting the unemployed from want and hunger, recognizing that no palliatives will lead us out of this depression.

I here quote a wire sent by Franklin D. Roosevelt and printed in Collier's Weekly for June 25 which says:

> This Nation needs progressive leadership. We must recognize two parts of the problem: First, adequate immediate national, State, and local aid to prevent actual want in the present and immediate future. Second, a comprehensive plan covering all phases of our economic and social difficulties. I can cite only one phase of this in this limited space. The farming interests represent half our population. They have lost buying power, and this has been largely responsible for depressing industry. We must at once take the Farm Board out of speculation in wheat and cotton, try out a new plan to insure getting surplus crops out of the country without putting the Government in business, and set up machinery to save the mortgaged farm by cutting down amortization and lowering interest rates. These immediate steps must be followed by a land-utilization survey in order to eliminate marginal lands and start a very large reforestation and flood-control program. Finally, we must give assistance to those families in cities who may wish to return to good land. I use these as illustrations of the broad planning and active leadership which must extend to all the other problems because it is clear that the solution lies not in opportunism or in last-minute remedies but in going to the sources of the trouble.

I am glad to note that this outstanding candidate for the Presidency is in favor of taking the Government out of business. I am glad to note that he has the courage to do this in the face of so-called farm leaders. He will be denounced by those who are in favor of the Government's appropriating huge sums to back these political farmers. They have intimidated Congress. The halls and lobbies are filled with them daily endeavoring to get another fifty or one hundred million dollars to keep up their high salaries until the next session of Congress. These so-called farmer leaders have joined in with the high-tariff advocates and sold the farmer into bondage. They will not only sell the farmer but they will sell political parties. They will trade anything for power. I want to call attention to some facts brought out in the Caraway lobby investigation. If you will read the testimony, beginning on page 2954 and continuing to the bottom of page 2955, you will find that Mr. Chester Gray testified and admitted that he consulted with Claudius H. Huston, chairman of the Republican National Committee, with reference to a plank that was to be presented by the American Farm Bureau Federation at the Democratic convention held at Houston, Tex. Imagine, my Democratic friends, the American Farm Bureau Federation consulting with the chairman of the Republican National Committee on a plank to be presented to you to be written into our platform. And yet I notice my Democratic friends still consulting with this Uriah Heep of the farmers. To those of you who are not students of Dickens, I will call him the Gaston B. Means of the farmers.

These organizations do not represent the rank and file of agriculture. They misrepresent them.

I have opposed and will continue to oppose any political nostrums to mislead the farmer. We must return to the basic principles upon which agriculture was built, namely, an equal opportunity to buy and sell on a fair basis not only in this country, but in the markets of the world. This is my program for farm relief. It is the Democratic program, which the Democratic House tried to put into effect and upon which I am willing to go back to my farmers and stand or fall.

One more thing must be done to assist the farmer to carry and liquidate his burden of debt. He must be provided with low interest rates, his taxes must be reduced, and some revaluation of the dollar must take place. He can not deliver 4 bushels of wheat where he once delivered 1 bushel to obtain a dollar. He can not deliver 20 pounds of cotton where he formerly delivered 5 pounds. This burden is too great. The creditor class will have to recognize the situation or repudiation of agricultural debts and bankruptcy will follow.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SPENCE, at the request of Mr. CHAPMAN, on account of illness.

To Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. SIROVICH, for an indefinite period, on account of illness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, in view of the request of the chairman of the Committee on Patents, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH], to be excused indefinitely on account of illness, I ask unanimous consent that Wednesday of this week be set aside for consideration of the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the request of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLACK. Inasmuch as the chairman of the Committee on Patents, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH], according to the announcement of the Chair just made, is to be excused indefinitely on account of illness, I ask unanimous consent that the Private Calendar be considered on Wednesday. The gentleman from New York is chairman of the Committee on Patents, which, as I understand, was to have the call on Wednesday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair had information that the gentleman from New York expected to be here on Wednesday. The Chair undertook to protect the interest of the gentleman.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement just made by the Speaker, I withdraw the request.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—THE ECONOMIC SITUATION

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, many causes and cures have been offered for the widespread depression that confronts the American people. Commodity prices in many cases are the lowest in our history. Eight to nine million men are walking the streets without employment. The buying power of the farmer is gone. Fifty million of our people are out of the market as purchasers. Our foreign markets in which we sold our surpluses have been destroyed. Until the purchasing power of these people is returned and our foreign trade reestablished prosperity will not return.

In order to correct these conditions we must first know the causes. One of the elements that enters into the depression was the intense stock speculation prior to October, 1929. Men in high places of Government became "ballyhooers" for the stock exchange and were parties to the crime of selling to an unsuspecting public unsound securities at grossly inflated prices. Departments of Government approved foreign bonds which were sold by international bankers to the public as sound investments. When the crash came in October, 1929, it carried a destructive loss to the American public, reducing the purchasing power of the United States in the sum of sixty to one hundred billion dollars.

FOREIGN DEBTS AND MORATORIUM

In order to insure the payment of the privately owned debts their holders, organized by the international bankers, have been advocating cancellation of loans made by the United States during and after the war to our allies. A debt-funding commission was created. This commission and Congress canceled 50 per cent of these debts, amounting to $10,705,618,006.90. By this course this amount was transferred from the foreign nations to the backs of the American taxpayers.

The 50 per cent that was not canceled was extended in loans over a period of as much as 68 years and at rates of interest as low as 1½ per cent, while the American taxpayer is paying rates of interest as high as 4¼ per cent on the Government bonds that carry this loan. Not satisfied with this 50 per cent reduction in these foreign loans, during the recess of Congress President Hoover sent telegrams to the Members of the House and Senate inquiring of them as to their position granting a moratorium of one year, suspending the payments under our foreign-debt arrangements. This meant transferring this year's payment, which amounted to $252,000,000, to the American taxpayer. The foreign taxpayer was relieved of this burden, and the American taxpayer paid the bill. It was said a moratorium was necessary because Germany was not able to make her reparation payments for this year.

There is no connection between reparations and our foreign debts. Eight of the foreign powers that are relieved by the moratorium do not receive any sum from Germany in reparations. No one who is conversant with the facts will say that England, France, and Italy can not make these payments. These three nations would pay to us during the fiscal year of 1932 the sum of $224,227,125, while under the terms of the moratorium the American taxpayer is called upon to pay this amount instead.

I voted against these propositions as I am here charged with the duty of representing the best interests of the American taxpayer and not those of foreign nations and as long as I am a Member of this body I will not vote to shift an honest and fair foreign debt to the American taxpayer.

INCOME-TAX REFUNDS

Additional burdens were placed on the rank and file of the American taxpayer by refunds that have been made in Federal income taxes by the Treasury Department since 1921 to certain corporations and individuals in the amount of $3,000,000,000; $12,000,000 going to Mr. Mellon's own corporations without a court decision. You and I know that these corporations have the best of income-tax experts to make their tax returns.

TAXES

For years there has been an increase in Federal Government activities. New commissions, boards, and bureaus have been created which have become irritants to the public and costly to the taxpayer. Federal expenditures have increased until the cost of Federal Government is over $4,000,000,000 per year.

We are faced this year with a deficit of two and one-half billion dollars. Although the Nation is confronted with the greatest panic in our history, it became necessary to levy additional taxes in order to balance our books and maintain our national credit. The income, gift, and estate tax rates were doubled, yet this would not produce enough revenue, and it became necessary to find other means of taxation. When the bill was before this body I voted for a general manufacturers' excise tax of 2¼ per cent, to be paid by the manufacturer, exempting food, clothing, medicines, fertilizer, and farm implements. I am opposed to a general sales tax as a permanent taxing policy. The provision carried was a temporary tax for one year. Due to conditions that existed, I believed this was the best method of raising a part of the deficit. However, this provision was not adopted. I was opposed to the conference report on the bill in the House, as it carried many provisions placed in the bill by the Senate that I could not support. Tariff provisions, tax on electrical energy placed directly upon the consumer, a 2-cent tax on bank checks, and many other unfair and discriminatory provisions were included.

ECONOMY

No Congress had attempted to reduce Federal expenditures until this Congress met in December. Up to date the appropriations have been reduced for the next fiscal year $663,000,000 below the appropriations for the current year, with other measures pending that will increase this amount to over $700,000,000.

Realizing that it was imperative to reduce expenditures the House created a special committee, known as the Economy Committee, to make a survey of the situation with the view of weeding out useless boards, bureaus, and commissions, and, where there was overlapping, to consolidate them. The committee, with the very able and conscientious gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE] as chairman, after proper investigations and hearings, reported a bill to the House. This measure carried a saving of from two hundred to two hundred and fifty million dollars.

Through the insistence of the President, members of his Cabinet, and other administrative officers many controversial provisions were combined in one omnibus bill. This, of course, made possible a coalition of those opposed to the various items in the bill. I supported the bill reported by the committee, as I believed that Congress should reduce expenditures to a minimum in this time of great financial distress.

TARIFF

I hestitate to remind my Republican friends that their party has been in complete control of every branch of the Federal Government since March, 1921, except the House of Representatives, which was organized by the Democrats with a slim majority of five in December, 1931. With this complete control you could put into effect any policy that you desired.

President Hoover in his speech of acceptance at Palo Alto in 1928 stated that "if allowed to continue in effect the policies of the last eight years of Republican administration, poverty would be abolished and the poorhouse would vanish from among us."

Now, if President Hoover is so positive that the policies of his party brought about whatever prosperity we may have had, with a continuation of those same policies under his own administration he must accept the responsibility for the conditions that now exist.

President Hoover in a speech in Brazil following his election said: "International trade is the lifeblood of civilization." Yet he signed the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill which has destroyed our foreign trade. We must have foreign markets for our surplus farm commodities, as well as our manufactured articles. Since the passage of that measure 45 foreign nations have passed retaliatory tariff legislation against American goods. American capital has been driven to foreign countries and is there using foreign labor and raw materials to manufacture their products because of the discrimination against American goods brought about by our own prohibitive tariff law.

President McKinley, a great Republican authority on the protective tariff, said:

> The period of exclusiveness is past. The expansion of our trade and commerce is the pressing problem. * * * Reciprocity treaties are in harmony with the spirit of the times; measures of retaliation are not.

Our condition would not be what it is to-day if President Hoover had followed the statement of this great Republican when the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill was presented to him for his signature. Under the flexible provision of the tariff law the President can lower or raise a tariff rate 50 per cent. The President has failed to use this authority to renew our foreign trade in this emergency.

AGRICULTURE

After his election in 1928 President Hoover called the Congress into extraordinary session in order to put agriculture on a parity with industry. Two recommendations were made by him to do this—by a limited provision of the tariff for the benefit of agriculture, which as enacted became a general revision for the benefit of industry, and the enactment of the law creating the Federal Farm Board, which authorized the appropriation of $500,000,000 of the taxpayers' money to carry out its provisions. Through these two methods he proposed to lift the farmer of America out of the financial mire into which he had fallen. By the tariff the foreign markets for his surpluses have been destroyed and prices in the home market have been beaten down by the Farm Board until now all that he has left is the Hyde.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

This corporation was created to loan money to the railroads and other transportation companies, banks, insurance, and other financial companies. Five hundred million dollars of the taxpayers' money was authorized to be appropriated. Securities four times this amount could be issued making a capital of $2,000,000,000 guaranteed by the taxpayers of America. Yet after passing such a bill we hear those who voted for this measure talk about granting subsidies, Government going into business, and so forth. I could not bring myself to make a guarantor out of the Federal taxpayers for the obligations of private business institutions over the management of which they have no control. What the railroads need is more freight, not more debts. What the banks need are more depositors, not more debts. What the insurance companies need are more policy payers, not more debts. What the farmers need are better prices for his commodities, not more debts.

CONCLUSION

We can not by any magic wave of the hand dispel this depression. We can not legislate the natural laws of economics out of existence. We can not build a prohibitive tariff wall around us and expect to retain our foreign markets in which to sell our surpluses. We can not extend moratoriums and cancel our foreign debts and not overburden the American taxpayer. We can not assume the financial obligations of private business without cost to the taxpayers. We can not refund $3,000,000,000 of taxes paid into the Federal Treasury without having a deficit. We can not maintain the present elaborate machinery of the Federal Government and reduce taxes.

PORTLAND, OREG., June 21, 1932.

Hon. CHARLES L. MCNARY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

At unemployment conference to-day attended by representatives from all parts of State and by county judges resolution was unanimously adopted strongly urging passage of resolution providing employment relief from Federal sources. Local resources have been depleted, and Federal aid is essential if we are to avert hunger and suffering. Sense of meeting was that road work affords best means of providing employment for untrained labor. Trust you will confer with President Hoover regarding this and urge his support for appropriation funds for road work.

Kindest regards.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, the Senate has before it most comprehensive discussions of the Philippine question in all its phases, in the form of voluminous reports from both the House and the Senate committees on this subject, in addition to the hearings.

In the RECORD of June 13, 1932, all these reports, an analysis of the bill, and a discussion are to be found.

However, without occupying too much of the time of the Senate, I shall attempt to add to this accumulated information. I ask unanimous consent that the following discussion by me may be ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the body of the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, the grant of independence to the Filipinos is a duty imposed on us by our voluntary promises to them, and through them to the whole world. At the outset of our occupation of the Philippines we could have proclaimed our purpose to retain them for our own use and benefit, just as we have held Puerto Rico, another of the colonies we took from Spain. The statement of such an intention might have prompted some doubts of its consistency with American ideals or some question of its wisdom as a policy, but it could not have raised a moral issue. But we declared and reiterated that we did not design to hold the islands and their people. On the contrary we bound ourselves by pledges of the most unequivocal character to prepare the Filipino people for self-government and ultimate independence. Hardly any other American policy or obligation undertaken by the United States is as definite and unmistakable in its intent and as binding on the national conscience as our policy with respect to the Philippines. There is some uncertainty, for example, regarding the extent to which the Monroe Doctrine commits or permits us to concern ourselves with the internal affairs of Latin American governments. There is a good deal of haziness about our rights and duties under certain of our international treaties, especially those affecting China, but there is no room for honest misunderstanding of our obligation as to the Philippines. Presidents and the Congress of the United States have assumed that obligation in the name, by the authority and with the approval of the American people. Its existence has been recognized by every President from McKinley to Hoover.

After our defeat of Spain we had complete freedom to decide whether we should acquire the Philippines and to determine how we should use them. The world was accustomed to the transfer of peoples from one sovereignty to another, without reference to their wishes or welfare. We should have owed no apologies to others no matter what excuses we should have been obliged to make to ourselves if we had announced that we claimed the Philippines as part of the spoils of war and purposed to keep and exploit them for our own material advantage and wholly according to our own plans. But we adopted no such course. We declared instead that we were bringing the Filipino people under the American flag not for our benefit but for theirs; that we wished them to be free; and that we would make them fit for freedom.

In the light of history, then, we have seen by what attitudes, utterances, and actions of ours, when first we entered the Philippines, the people of the islands were impelled to the conviction that we intended not merely to liberate them from Spain but establish them—as we constituted Cuba—as an independent nation. We have read also in that same light how firmly and fervently (but fatuously and futilely, as some would persuade us to think) the Filipinos have clung to the belief that we will keep the faith they hold we plighted to them thirty-odd years ago and pledged anew many times since then.

It is necessary to a correct understanding of the Filipino's claims on us and it is vital to a right conception of our obligation to him to review the words and deeds by which we have at the least appeared to promise him the boon he craves most of all—independence. Whether it was advisable, from our point of view, to confirm and encourage the Filipino's aspirations is now beside the point. Whether our promise looked to the true welfare of the Philippines may still be a debatable question. But there is not a vestige of doubt that our assurances were received in good faith by the Filipino, and they can not now be withdrawn or revised without compromising and doing detriment to him.

Turn now to the long concatenation of statements by Presidents, members of presidential Cabinets, representatives of the United States in the Philippines, spokesmen for business, agriculture, and labor—protagonists and antagonists of Filipino nationhood:

President McKinley, at the very outset of the American occupation, said to the American people: "The Philippines are ours not to exploit, but to develop, to civilize, to educate, to train in the science of self-government." And he expressed the hope that the American commissioners would be received as bearers of "the richest blessings of a liberating rather than a conquering nation."

Jacob Gould Schurman, president of the first Philippine Commission, was undoubtedly speaking the mind of President McKinley as well as his own when he said: "The destiny of the Philippine Islands is not to be a State or a Territory in the United States of America, but a daughter republic of ours—a new birth of liberty on the other side of the Pacific, which shall animate and energize those lovely islands of the tropical seas, and rearing its head aloft, stand as a monument of progress and a beacon of hope to all the oppressed and benighted millions of the Asiatic Continent."

I have been unable to find any direct statement by William H. Taft when he was President, but he spoke pretty decisively on the subject when he was Secretary of War. In a report to President Roosevelt in 1908, Mr. Taft declared:

"Shortly stated, the national policy is to govern the Philippine Islands for the benefit and welfare and uplifting of the people of the islands and gradually to extend to them, as they shall show themselves fit to exercise it, a greater and greater measure of popular self-government. * * * What should be emphasized in the statement of our national policy is that we wish to prepare the Filipinos for popular self-government. This is plain from Mr. McKinley's letter of instructions and all of his utterances. * * * Another logical deduction from the main proposition is that when the Filipino people as a whole show themselves reasonably fit to conduct a popular self-government, maintaining law and order and offering equal protection of the laws and civil rights to rich and poor, and desire complete independence of the United States, they shall be given it."

The foregoing was but a reiteration with strong emphasis of what Mr. Taft had said three years earlier:

"What shall be done in the future * * * is a question which will doubtless have to be settled by another generation than the present, both of the American and of the Philippine people, to whose wisdom and generosity we may safely trust the solution of the problem. Should the Philippine people when fit for self-government demand independence, I should be strongly in favor of giving it to them, and I have no doubt that the American people of the next generation would be of the same opinion."

In 1908, President Roosevelt indicated, in a message to Congress, that the independence of the Philippines was a question to be determined by their inhabitants. "I trust that within a generation," he said, "the time will arrive when the Filipinos can decide for themselves whether it is well for them to become independent."

The generation of which President Roosevelt spoke at that time has passed.

On another occasion—and eight years later—Mr. Roosevelt counseled prompt action in respect to independence:

"The only good that has come to us as a nation has been the good that springs from knowledge that a great deed has been worthily performed. Personally I think it is a fine and high thing for a nation to have done such a deed with such a purpose. But we can not taint it with bad faith. If we act so that the natives understand us to have made a definite promise, then we should live up to that promise. The Philippines, from a military standpoint, are a source of weakness to us. The present administration has promised explicitly to let them go, and by its actions has rendered it difficult to hold them against any serious foreign foe. These being the circumstances, the islands should at an early moment be given their independence without any guaranty whatever by us and without our retaining any foothold in them."

Fifteen years after we came into possession of the Philippines, President Wilson took an advanced position in the matter of independence. In his message to the Filipino people, delivered by Governor General Harrison in 1913, he said:

"We regard ourselves as trustees acting not for the advantage of the United States but for the benefit of the people of the Philippine Islands. Every step we take will be taken with a view to ultimate independence of the islands and as a preparation for that independence."

Later in the same year he sent a message to Congress, and in it he spoke this of the Filipinos: "By their counsel and experience, rather than by our own, we shall learn how best to serve them and how soon it will be possible and wise to withdraw our supervision." Addressing Congress, in a message in 1920, the President used the following language: "Allow me to call your attention to the fact that the people of the Philippine Islands have succeeded in maintaining a stable government since the last action of the Congress in their behalf, and have thus fulfilled the condition set by the Congress as the precedent to a consideration of granting independence to the islands. I respectfully submit that this condition precedent having been fulfilled, it is now our liberty and our duty to keep our promise to the people of these islands by granting them the independence which they so honorably covet."

President Harding, in his reply to the Philippine independence mission of 1922, said:

"I can only commend the Philippine aspirations to independence and complete self-sovereignty. None in America would wish you to be without national aspirations. You would be unfitted for the solemn duties of self-government without them."

On February 21, 1924, President Coolidge wrote to Manuel Roxas, speaker of the Philippine House of Representatives and head of the Philippine mission to the United States in that year, saying:

"It is not possible to believe that the American people would wish to continue their responsibility in regard to the sovereignty and administration of the islands. It is not conceivable that they would desire, merely because they possessed the power, to continue exercising any measure of authority over a people who could better govern themselves on a basis of complete independence. If the time comes when it is apparent that independence would be better for the people of the Philippines from the point of view of both their domestic concerns and their status in the world; and if when that time comes the Filipino people desire complete independence it is not possible to doubt that the American Government and people will gladly accord it."

Thus far President Hoover has not expressed his own opinion, but he has admitted that "independence of the Philippines at some time has been directly or indirectly promised by every President and by the Congress."

Whenever the Republican Party has spoken on the subject it has recorded its sympathy with self-government for the Philippines. The Democratic Party has several times committed itself to the cause of independence.

If at any time during the period of our responsibility for the Philippines the President or other official of the United States had advocated our permanent retention and government of the islands, we could now say with some measure of plausibility that our intentions had been proclaimed and that, therefore, American and Filipino promoters of independence were countering a definite and decisive American policy. But for more than a quarter of a century, almost a generation, there has been a general understanding—in one case taking the form of an act of Congress—that the Filipino people should some day be free and independent. The act of Congress which, by reason of the promise of independence it contains, imposes on us an ethical and moral, though perhaps a juridic, obligation, is the Jones law, passed by Congress in 1916. The promise is in the preamble, which I quote in full:

"Whereas it was never the intention of the people of the United States in the incipiency of the war with Spain to make it a war of conquest or for territorial aggrandizement; and

"Whereas it is, as it has always been, the purpose of the people of the United States to withdraw their sovereignty over the Philippine Islands and to recognize their independence as soon as a stable government can be established therein; and

"Whereas for the speedy accomplishment of such purpose it is desirable to place in the hands of the people of the Philippines as large a control of their domestic affairs as can be given them without, in the meantime, impairing the exercise of the rights of sovereignty by the people of the United States, in order that by the use and exercise of popular franchise and governmental powers they may be the better prepared to fully assume the responsibilities and enjoy all the privileges of complete independence."

Some opponents of independence hold—at least they assert—that because this statement of our purposes was not in the body of the bill it is not a binding promise. Though but few cling to this contention, I nevertheless think it deserves an answer. In the first place, there was no other valid way in which Congress might express its opinion. It could not have included in the body of the bill such a declaration as the preamble recites without first having fixed a definite date for the termination of American sovereignty in the islands. Those who take refuge in the technicality—the triviality with which I am now dealing—might as well urge that our Declaration of Independence or the Monroe doctrine was not binding because it was not put in the body of a bill. Not only the preamble but also the title of the Jones Act proclaims our policy in reference to the Philippines. And it is a rule of law that the title of a bill shall adequately describe its intent. Here is the title of the Jones law:

"An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands."

This phrase "future political status," especially when read in connection with the preamble and the provisions of the bill, is certainly clear enough—the words, "to proponents and objectors" well understood that the preamble was not only a definition of policy but also a promise made in the name of, by the authority and with the concurrence of, the American people. One thing else: There was a separate vote on the preamble, and it was adopted by a considerable margin. Republicans as well as Democrats supported it.

The Filipinos shared the general view that the Jones Act was a pledge given to them by the American people. The Philippine Legislature, speaking for the inhabitants of the islands, viewed the Jones law as a program looking to independence and so acknowledged and accepted it.

The Filipino understanding of the American promise was given to the Senate committee by Manuel Roxas. I quote from his testimony:

"Granted the necessity of a final and definite declaration regarding the future status of the Philippine Islands, it is important to determine what that status should be. This question was formally and authoritatively defined by the Congress in the preamble of the Jones Act. That document states that 'it is, as it has always been, the purpose of the United States to withdraw their sovereignty over the Philippine Islands and to recognize their independence as soon as a stable government can be established therein.' This declared policy is in accord with authoritative pronouncements of American Presidents and other officials who could assume the right to speak on behalf of the American people. It is thus to be seen that independence is and has always been the goal and objective of America's Philippine policy. The Jones Act merely gave legal and constitutional sanction to that policy. * * * Its grant would be as much a fulfillment of that policy as the satisfaction of Filipino aspirations. It would be the happy outcome of the joint labors of two peoples undertaken with generosity on the one hand and with abiding confidence and faith on the other."

I have cited but a few of the official statements and the testimonies of recent observers and writers. There is little need to multiply such documentations. There is an impressive consensus in behalf of independence. Most significant has been the absence of open advocacy of the permanent retention of the Philippines. Not one witness appearing before the Senate committee proposed such a plan. Postponement of independence—that was the nearest to an outright repudiation of our pledges any witness ventured.

Every class and condition of Filipinos desires independence. Abundant attestation of that fact I found on my visit to the islands. Chambers of commerce, labor leaders, agricultural leaders, educators, bankers, the press, the legislature—all have petitioned for independence. There is no division among the people. Not one Filipino that I met or talked with or questioned opposed independence. The leaders of the Roman Catholic Church, the Protestant Church, the Aglipayan Church, the Moros, and the pagans, divergent as their religious tenets are, nevertheless are alike in their conviction that independence is the due and the destiny of the Filipino nation. These and other groups may differ as to the time for it—whether it should come at once or in the near future—but there can be no doubt that they all want it and will accept it on any terms that we may specify.

This brings me to the consideration of a point I wish to discuss. Some Americans who have discussed with Filipinos this question of opportuneness have learned that the latter in not a few instances deprecate the words "immediate, absolute, and complete independence." It is true that some Filipinos regard these words as involving serious difficulties, such, for example, as the internal economic dislocation that would ensue from sudden application of the American tariff to products of the Philippines. From this reservation in the minds of certain Filipinos these Americans derive the impression that the natives are insincere in their talk of independence. The frank admissions by Filipinos that independence for the Philippines means sacrifice as well as advantage have stirred doubts and suspicions in the minds of many of our people.

Those American manufacturers and merchants who are exerting influence to defeat Filipino independence are inviting detriment to themselves. If, as now seems certain, the desire for an independent nation in the Philippines becomes more fervent and widespread, the islanders may turn elsewhere for their needs. They could hardly be blamed for refusing to permit their own money to be a weapon against independence. It may as well be recognized also that we can not offer the Filipinos material prosperity as a substitute for independence. I have come to believe they would rather be poor and free than rich and dependent.

We Americans have always exalted freedom and self-government above material welfare and luxury. We have put the same ideal before the Filipinos. Their intellectuals, especially the graduates of American universities, are aware that we have always and everywhere honored and encouraged the aspiration of liberty and democracy. We have welcomed every new member of the family of independent nations. More than once the American people have raised funds for the cause of independence in other parts of the world. Within 35 years after this Government was established we lent assistance to the struggle for independence in South America and guaranteed the liberty won there. In the last generation we have given our sympathy to the efforts of the Greeks to erect a republic, to the Boers in South Africa, to the Young Turks. Eighty years ago we cheered the struggles of Kossuth to make Hungary free. Our aid to Ireland continued for a century or more. All these historic facts, I repeat, are known to the leaders of the Filipino people.

Sometimes there is a contrast between our preachments about liberty and our practices in the Philippines. This is only one of the incongruities for which our excursion into imperialism has been responsible. The Filipino sees these discrepancies and wonders.

Mr. President, discussed for more than 30 years in Congress and in the popular forum, the Philippine problem, which our victory over Spain thrust into our political life, seems now about to have a permanent and satisfactory solution. That solution is to be the fulfillment of the promise of independence the United States made to the Filipinos at the outset of the American control of the islands. Such consummation of our long and painstaking tutelage of this oriental people will vindicate the principles and ideals of America and assure the establishment of the first Christian republic in the Far East.

The present Congress, notwithstanding a vigorous propaganda against the proposal, is preponderantly in favor of granting independence. One bill looking to the bestowal of nationhood on the Philippines has passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 306 to 47. Eighty-one per cent of the Representatives were recorded in this vote, and 70 per cent of them supported the bill. A correspondingly large support, I am confident, will be given to the bill in the Senate, if it can be put on its passage. With so impressive an approval of independence by Congress—Republican in one branch and Democratic in the other—we may feel certain that President Hoover will give his concurrence also.

Powerful influences have been won to the cause of independence. Dr. Jacob Gould Schurman, president of the first Philippine commission appointed by Mr. McKinley, is one of these. Prior to his selection for that post he was president of Cornell University and afterwards served as American ambassador to Germany. His plea for Philippine independence was reiterated only three months ago—after the Hawes-Cutting bill had been reported to the Senate—in the course of a lecture at the University of Southern California.

"If the Filipinos themselves are willing to fill the higher governmental offices and to assume the problem of self-defense, we must recognize that it is their problem and leave the islands, whether we think we can run them better than they or not," Doctor Schurman said. "We have formally agreed to this by act of Congress," he continued, referring in this statement to the Jones law of 1916, by which the United States is pledged to confer complete self-rule on the Filipinos just as soon as they demonstrated their ability to establish "a stable government. "Our own Government is based on the consent of the governed, and the Filipinos appeal to us on the same ground to grant them independence," Doctor Schurman told his hearers.

In the roster of champions of independence are also W. Morgan Shuster (now president of the Century Co.), a member of the first Philippine commission—that headed by Doctor Schurman; Judge F. C. Fisher and Judge Adam C. Carson, former associate justices of the Philippine Supreme Court; Judge Richard Campbell, of New York; Frank L. Crone, former commissioner of education of the islands; and most of the Members of the present Congress, including, in particular, those Senators and Representatives who served on the committees which investigated the subject and drafted the pending bills.

There is, of course, a very vigorous opposition to the withdrawal of American sovereignty over the Philippines. Most of those who oppose independence are as sincere and patriotic as those who espouse it. Indeed, a strong—and, in my judgment, wrong—sense of patriotism is precisely what explains the opposition of not a few. These are so dead against "lowering the American flag" that to prevent that consequence they seem almost willing to lower the moral standards which the Stars and Stripes have always heretofore symbolized.

The promises of the United States are of supreme import. It is the ethical factor of the problem. They are a sacred obligation, unless we have come to believe that America's word of honor may be given and withdrawn as material advantage or political exigencies dictate. The final disposition of the Philippines must ultimately be determined in keeping with that pledge of ours, provided that the Filipino people shall not meanwhile, by some sort of collective pronouncement, absolve us from its redemption. The fact is, of course, that they confidently expect us to fulfill our promise—and so do all the other peoples of the Far East. They crave the opportunity to live their own national life. Few people in the world have had so long and so thorough a preparation for independent existence as they have had. The Spanish colonies of North and South America became republics with hardly any previous experience or autonomy. Even some of the new nations of Europe—Czechoslovakia, Latvia, Estonia, etc.—had little or no apprenticeship in self-government before the World War. The people of these new European states were one day the subjects of monarchies—and at least two of them the victims of autocracies—and the next day sovereigns among sovereigns. The Filipinos have been under American fostering—in the school of the greatest of all democracies—for a generation, and that after they had won the last of a series of struggles for liberation from Spanish rule. If independence comes to the Philippines no earlier than the approximate date fixed in the Hare bill, they will have been 43 years in training for it.

Japan could have taken the Philippines at any time in the half century before the United States acquired them. Her defeat of China in 1894 raised her at once to a position of dominance in the Far East and to a place among the great military and naval powers of the world. Spain could not possibly have resisted so mighty an adversary. History and current events make manifest that Japan's expansion has been steadily and of purpose to the mainland of Asia. Her conquests from Russia, her seizure of Korea, her present occupation of Manchuria—all these tell of her preference for a new empire on the Asiatic continent. She has undertaken only one annexation in the direction of the Tropics. That was her acquisition of Formosa as one of the spoils of her war with China. She has attempted to colonize the island with her own subjects, but after 37 years of governmental efforts to that end only about half a million Japanese have settled there. They do not flourish in a warm climate. For that reason they prefer Manchuria to the Philippines. They have been free to domicile themselves in the Philippines, but not more than 8,000 of them are to be found in the whole Archipelago. They were once more numerous there than they are now.

On two grounds, then, the "Japanese menace" to continuance of Philippine independence can not validly be urged as justification for America's withdrawal of her pledge she has given the Filipino people. First, there is no sound basis—past, present, or prospective—for the assertion that Japan covets the Philippines. The historic facts and the happenings of the moment coincide to negative any such conclusion. Secondly, the plea that because Japan may at some time, in some contingency, violate international comity by an attack on the islands, the United States should commit a breach of faith, here and now, is not very complimentary to the logic of those who utter it nor to the American people, to whom it is addressed. Such a course as these propagandists counsel would be no less impolitic than immoral. It would do immense detriment both to American prestige and American commerce in the Far East. It would cost America the high regard she has won in the Orient by her chivalrous conduct toward the oriental peoples—especially the Chinese and her own wards, the Filipinos. It is, indeed, a doctrine of such crass materialism and Machiavellianism that the American people can confidently be expected to reject and rebuke it as an affront to common sense and common decency alike.

"The bloody rebellion," it is said, will arise from the differences between the Christian majority and the Mohammedan minority. The prophets of this religious conflict always picture the Mohammedans as "proud Moros," compliment their prowess, and vision the war as involving the entire Philippine Archipelago and other regions of the Far East. Indeed, when one reads any of a dozen opponents of Philippine independence one is in doubt as to which of two calamities it will bring first—conquest of the islands by Japan or their depopulation by internecine conflict.

The non-Christian peoples of the Philippines number 800,000 of the total of 13,000,000 inhabitants; that is, 1 in 16. It is not credible that this minority, "proud" and sanguinary though it be, would be able—if willing—to make successful war on an overwhelming majority in control of the military and police of the islands. But the guaranty against a "bloody rebellion" in the Philippines is not supplied altogether by the preponderance of the Christians. It is afforded also by the good sense of the non-Christian people. They don't deserve the evil reputation their champions in the United States invent for them. They have no thought of warfare against their fellows of the Christian faith.

Large numbers of them, including their most important and influential representatives, are as eager for independence as the Christian Filipinos are. They have sent memorials to the United States petitioning for Philippine nationhood. They have acquiesced in the government of the islands by the Christian majority and have lived peaceably and prosperously under Christian governors of their Provinces. There has not been the least friction between the non-Christians and the Christians in recent years. Both realize that they must live together in concord. They regard each other with respect and do not allow their differences of religion to prevent their cooperation in civic enterprises.

If there were any tendency on the part of the great religious groups in the Philippines to engage in strife over creeds, those who are constantly exploiting such possibility would be incurring a grave responsibility. As it is, the worst result of the present exploitation—and it is bad enough—is its encouragement of a misconception on the part of many Americans respecting conditions in the Philippines.

Let us next consider the prophecy of economic disaster. It is quite gratuitous to say that the material progress of the Philippines would be halted by independence. The islands are rich in many things which the world requires. Their natural resources have in some significant instances been neglected because of the artificial character of the insular economic relations with the United States. The Filipinos have been practically stopped from trading with other nations than the United States. On our side we have had a virtual monopoly of the Philippine market. If reciprocity has helped certain Philippine industries—and it has—it has also hindered the development of new and different industrial undertakings in the islands.

Once the products of the Philippines are subjected to American tariffs, as those of other foreign countries are, the Filipino people will necessarily take stock of their wares and canvass their possible customers. They will adjust their production to the demands and opportunities offered in the various markets of the world. That is what much more backward and less resourceful and industrious peoples than the Filipinos have done and are doing.

It is easy to be dogmatic about the future. It is impossible to disprove mere potentialities. One can only forecast events of to-morrow by the light of to-day and yesterday. With that light to guide, however, one can see the Filipinos continuing the progress to which 34 years' experience in the management of their national household has given a powerful impetus. Thirty per cent of the Philippine budget is expended on the public schools of the islands. The Filipinos have shown not merely aptitude, but ambition to achieve success in government. Their social and intellectual standards are higher by a good deal than those of their Asiatic neighbors. Their cooperation with the United States for their cultural and material advancement is a mark of their fitness for self-rule and an earnest of their further development.

Shall a free Philippines become "a disturbing factor in the Far East," as the lugubrious soothsayers declare? Suppose we examine the facts. If Japan is even half as reckless and ruthless as represented for the purpose of making her an obstacle to Filipino nationhood, then an independent Philippines can hardly be more of "a disturbing factor in the Far East" than a dependent Philippines is. The United States is at present obliged to protect the islands, and that in the face of a treaty which forbids any fortifications on them. Japan is greedy, unscrupulous, aggressive, and very powerful, the foes of independence tell us in a tragic whisper, and then they support their statement by reminding us how, in despite of American warnings, in the teeth of the League of Nations, and in defiance of public opinion throughout the world, she planned and executed her recent invasion of Manchuria and China proper. If that be Japan's true character and her real disposition; if she neither fears nor respects the collective nations of the earth, she will surely not dread or regard the United States and—in the hypothesis presented—she will take the Philippines whenever their seizure bespeaks military or political or commercial advantage to her. In that eventuality, the United States will be bound to defend and retain the islands, even at the cost of a terrible war.

The Philippines have many products which we need and which we can not obtain in other countries or can not purchase elsewhere under more favorable conditions. On the other hand, Filipinos can buy in the United States much if not all the commodities they are buying now. American farmers and wage-workers are as conscious of their rights and interests and as eager and able to protect these as the opponents of Philippine independence are. Accordingly, these two groups—6,500,000 members of agricultural associations, and 5,000,000 members of labor organizations—not merely desire, they demand, the speedy enactment of legislation for an independent Philippines.

There are offsets to the economic losses and disadvantages which are prophesied as consequences of the disposal of the Philippines. According to one authority, the maintenance of the American Army and the Philippine Scouts in the islands cost taxpayers in this country—not those of the Philippines—a grand total of $685,613,504 for the period from May 1, 1898, to June 30, 1931. In the same 33 years, the expense of the Navy serving in the islands was $76,634,919, an average of $2,312,791 a year. In these days of stress in governmental finances the saving of this average annual charge of $22,000,000 for the Army and the Navy would be worth making. If we should have to enlarge our military and naval forces in the Philippines, the expense would, of course, increase proportionately. In addition to the cost of the Army in the islands there were also expenditures totaling about $17,000,000 for other insular purposes during the 33 years ending June 30, 1931. By the time the islands become independent under the terms of either of the pending bills, their cost to the United States will have risen to a billion dollars.

American economists, moreover, point to other offsets. They remind us that while only 9,178,380 of the aggregate of 73,216,124 acres of land in the islands are under cultivation, Philippine products are nevertheless in hurtful competition with the products of American farms, dairies, plantations, etc. Indeed, the various agricultural associations of the United States, as I have said, are urging Philippine independence not only for its own sake, but as a means of protecting the domestic market from Filipino competitors. If such be the situation with only 12 per cent of the Philippine land in production, what will happen when 30, 40, or 50 per cent is yielding rice, hemp, corn, tobacco, and sugar—all at much lower costs than they can possibly be produced in the United States?

But even if it were demonstrable—as it isn't—that American-Philippine trade should diminish or wholly disappear, they still remain under the moral compulsion of keeping their word to the Filipinos. We are not yet so pragmatic as to proclaim and practice the doctrine that promises whose fulfillment involve economic losses need not be kept.

One of the conventional arguments against Philippine independence is that "selfish interests" are promoting the cause and using the Filipinos as pawns in the game. Now it may well be that certain American groups or institutions or individuals are seeking profit from the political severance of the Philippines from the United States. But Philippine independence as a good thing in itself should not be halted or prevented because, as an incident, it brings benefit to some of the people of the United States. If these groups are seeking a good end for a bad purpose, what shall be said of the "selfish interests" that are attempting to defeat a worthy cause for an evil motive? For some very powerful coteries are in the opposition and are employing all their great resources to induce the Government of the United States to break faith with the Filipino people. There has been a good deal of criticism of the brief consideration given the Hare bill when it was put on its passage in the House of Representatives on April 4. The critics designedly leave the impression that the measure was passed by the House not only without understanding of its provisions, but contrary to their demands for a longer study of it. At frequent intervals ever since 1916 the Congress has had before it bills looking to the independence of the Philippines. On several of these bills there were exhaustive hearings. The testimony adduced at these hearings was printed and has been available to every Member of Congress. The Senate conducted an inquiry in 1930, and the information it gathered from friends and foes of Philippine nationhood is likewise open to Senators and Representatives. Besides all this, the Committee on Insular Affairs of the House last winter undertook its own inquiry and obtained the views of almost every important individual and organization concerned about the Philippines. These views also were published and made accessible to the Members of the House. Finally, the committee's report, containing conclusions derived from the testimony, and a recommendation in behalf of independence, was sent to every one of the 435 Representatives.

The prompt passage of the Hare bill by an overwhelming majority of the Members of the House, Republicans as well as Democrats, was, therefore, not a mark of "precipitance" or "carelessness" or "recklessness," as some few writers and speakers on the subject have alleged. It was precisely a sign and token that the Representatives had familiarized themselves with the facts and issues involved and voted with full knowledge and understanding.

It is quite patent, I think I have indicated, that either from considerations of intelligent self-aggrandizement or in solicitude for the national honor, every American, whether he be in official post or in private life, must give his support to Philippine independence. Righteous and generous treatment of the Filipinos—an oriental people—is sure to win for the United States the esteem of all the other nations of the Orient. And no other investment is so productive as that made in behalf of good will. For commerce follows friendship. Moreover, it is always a wholesome and salutary policy to be honest and honorable. Our Government can not be unjust to the people of other nations without sacrificing somewhat of the respect, obedience, and loyalty of its own citizens.

JOBLESS LIBERTY PARTY

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, by request, I present a letter from Col. J. H. Stolper, general counsel and chairman of the national executive committee, the American Veterans of All Wars, Muskogee, Okla., addressed to Rev. James R. Cox, Pittsburgh, Pa., on the subject of a "Jobless Liberty Party," which I request may be published in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MUSKOGEE, OKLA., May 14, 1932.

Subject: Jobless liberty party.

Rev. JAMES R. COX,

Liberty Avenue and Seventeenth Street, Pittsburgh, Pa.

MY DEAR REVEREND SIR: I have your letter of May 9, 1932, informing me of your plan to form a jobless liberty party and hold a convention in St. Louis, Mo., to nominate candidates for President and Vice President; also to pass resolutions, which you inclose, to be handed by you to the President, Vice President, and Speaker of the House. Some of your collaborators also inform me that a march upon Washington to the President and Congress is contemplated upon a large scale, and you request me to cooperate with you.

When a step affecting a large portion of the American people is contemplated, the first thought must be can there result any good from such step; second, can it be productive of any harm?

I feel that the passing of any set of resolutions can do no possible good. Let us be fair and just. Are such resolutions necessary? They are not. What could they do? Inform the President, the Vice President, and the Speaker of existing conditions. Do these officials need informing at this time? They do not. Is it not effecting a useless effort? I not only believe that your proposed action can and will do no good but it may do great harm, and for this reason not only can I not, and I will not associate myself with such a move, but I implore you in the name of right and love for our country to abandon such a step if you can do so.

The President of the United States is more than anyone just now fully acquainted with the great suffering that exists; he is and has for some time been doing everything humanly possible to meet and overcome the critical conditions. Why, then, harass the President any more? There is a limit to punishment. The President of the United States has had to meet a situation not of his making. Why increase his burden with a move of the kind you contemplate? It is an easy matter to get together a large number of unemployed, but you can never tell when an orderly mass of suffering and irresponsible people may turn into an uncontrollable mob and do unforeseen great injury to itself and the Nation.

No, sir; so long as our President is doing his utmost he deserves our support, and he will have the support not only of myself and this organization but every particle of influence that I can bring to it. We need no black, no red, and no blue shirts in the United States. We are neither in Italy nor in Germany. The depression will terminate in due time, the jobless will be reemployed, and there is no place for a jobless party or jobless army of any kind in the United States. I would obey and recognize only one army, the Army of the United States. Let us not incite any of our people to disorder or to gang together. Let us help bring out law and order and prosperity. You can do more for the jobless by helping the jobless to get a job than by making them conscious of desperate conditions they find themselves in.

I believe if the church would help get heads of families suffering in the cities to go and settle on a 10-acre tract of land and work it, while such family would not get rich it would be secure in shelter and have ample food.

Nothing the President can do will be as effective as what the person would do for himself, and every organization would be glad to help. I believe even the large insurance companies and other capital will be willing to help, but merely to get together large crowds of people, increase their dissatisfaction with conditions unforeseen, and which everyone is trying to remedy, will result in suffering and in harm; why undertake it?

Congress is trying to do something; let us help them. I do not contend that a certificate of election makes of the average man an all-wise statesman when he comes to Congress. There are great and good men and little and small men in Congress. To descend upon them with large masses is to repeat the European revolutionary experience; what good can it do? It will not teach Congress anything; the great and good men in Congress need no teaching; the small fellow who is playing small, petty, selfish politics while in Congress does not want to learn, and you can teach him nothing; hence what is the use of the marching to Washington? Your last march in the winter has accomplished nothing but suffering.

I very earnestly advise against the contemplated assembling of the unemployed; let us, irrespective of party affiliations, give our President and the constituted authorities our support when it is to the benefit of the Nation by each of us using our personal remedies; we may do just the opposite of what we are trying to do. If you desire to petition the President and Congress, circulate petitions; will be glad to help you, and it can be presented by half a dozen people just as good as by thousands, but it will not do so much harm, for whatever is being contemplated may lead to riots and bloodshed. We want nothing of the kind. Let us be Americans first; let us work for peace, for justice, for right, and for general prosperity, but let us not incite nor excite class animosity nor hatred. Let us all work for the common good of our country. God bless her.

Very respectfully,

J. H. STOLPER,
Lieutenant Colonel,
United States Army Reserve, Retired,
General Counsel and Chairman

MEMORIAL TO WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to report favorably without amendment from the Committee on the Library the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 182) amending the joint resolution authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to William Jennings Bryan.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, this is a matter pertaining to the location of a statue for William Jennings Bryan. An act was passed authorizing the selection of a place in the District of Columbia except in civic parks or on the Mall, and this is simply to strike out "civic parks," according to the recommendation of the chairman of the Commission of Fine Arts.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was read, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 3 of the joint resolution authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to William Jennings Bryan be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the words "or Potomac Park" appearing in the second line of said section, so that section 3, when amended, shall read as follows:

"SEC. 3. The memorial herein provided for shall not be erected or placed in any part of the Mall, nor on any ground within one-half mile of the Capitol."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I submit a letter from the secretary of the Commission of Fine Arts in explanation of the joint resolution just passed, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Washington, June 21, 1932.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: The Commission of Fine Arts at their meeting on May 27, 1932, inspected the model of the William Jennings Bryan Memorial authorized to be erected in the National Capital by act approved June 18, 1930, and were well pleased with it. It is a work of Mr. Gutzon Borglum, sculptor, to whom the commission made a few suggestions as to the model in matters of detail.

The William Jennings Bryan Memorial Association, through their representatives, suggested as a site for the statue a plot of ground about 150 feet north of Constitution Avenue near the Lincoln Memorial. The Commission of Fine Arts inspected this location on May 27 and were agreeable to the erection of the statue there, but it was noted in the act of June 18, 1930, that the statue was not to be erected in Potomac Park. The commission was officially advised by Lieut. Col. U. S. Grant, 3d, Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks, that the site selected by the William Jennings Bryan Memorial Association is in Potomac Park.

Therefore, if Congress will amend the act of June 18, 1930, section 3, so as to strike out the words "or Potomac Park," as is contemplated in Senate Joint Resolution 182, introduced by you, it will be possible to erect the William Jennings Bryan statue at the site in Potomac Park selected by the association. The commission of Fine Arts would concur in this, since, as above stated, the site was favored by the commission at the meeting on May 27.

For the Commission of Fine Arts,

Very respectfully yours,

H. P. CAEMMERER, Secretary.

Hon. THOMAS J. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

INVESTIGATIONS BY COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably, with an amendment, Senate Resolution 239, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received and read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 239), the amendment of the committee being in line 5, to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$25,000," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 84, Seventy-second Congress, agreed to March 4, 1932, hereby is continued in full force and effect until the expiration of the Seventy-second Congress, and the limit of expenditures to be made under authority of such resolution is hereby increased by $25,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the work which has been done and the condition in which the committee finds itself.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Was unanimous consent granted for the consideration of the resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understood, and the resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, the committee has been at work for a couple of months and the problem is big and complicated. We started to investigate Indian motor cycles and later got into matters that ran into hundreds of millions of dollars. We still feel that we have only touched the borders of it.

Mr. Whitney, president of the New York Stock Exchange, admitted that 25,000,000 people lost money in the market crash, and that shrinkage in values amounted to $50,000,000,000, against which Teapot Dome looks like a very small affair. The problem that looms is, How can we protect the American investors? Under our present system of business, individual ownership of corporations is nearly impossible. We have discovered that when there is collective ownership, many officers of corporations betray their trusts. They sell short their own stocks and take all sorts of advantage of their own stockholders. They cash in and make large profits, and then get out from under. The methods used are many and indeed I think many of them are unlawful.

What we have uncovered leads, for instance, to the matter of tax evasion. The last hearings of the committee have developed that feature.

For instance, we find that Mr. Fox, of the Fox Theater, speculated on his own account in the stock of his own firm. When the market shrank and he lost some three or four million dollars, he had that loss taken over by his company, but in making up his tax return he charged it to himself and deducted that loss from his own income; so there is no doubt that probably half a million dollars of taxes can easily be recovered on the record in that case, and no defense is possible against it, if the man is financially responsible, and he is reputed to be worth $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 yet.

We discovered in another case that it is a regular practice to evade taxes by setting up corporations in Canada so that profits can be entered on the books up there, although the business is conducted here. The worst case we have found so far was where a Cleveland firm sent their securities to Canada. The express charges were about $35,000. They were sent by a New York bank that held the securities as collateral. The bank released them for the purpose of sending them up to Canada to enter them on some books up there in order that a Canadian notary public might certify their presence there, and that the profits might appear to be in Canada instead of the United States. The tax evasion in that case amounted to about $2,000,000.

There was testimony before the committee indicating that the attorney of the bank had warned them against doing it and said they might be guilty of conspiracy to defraud the United States of taxes. I have not any doubt that recovery in this case can be made. We are opening up a wide field, and I suggest that it is up to the Senate to determine how much of an investigation we are to conduct. I have no complaint to make or criticism to make of the Committee to Audit and Control.

They have done with this resolution only what they have done with practically every other which has come before them; they have cut it in two; but it is up to the Senate whether the committee shall conduct a small investigation or a larger one. Let me say my thought was that the committee should conduct even a larger one than would have been possible perhaps under the resolution as originally introduced, but not with the hope of going into the whole matter. Our attorney stated before the committee that it would require a quarter of a million dollars to go into the whole field and develop it, and it seemed hopeless, even with the prospect of large tax recoveries, to get such authority. Our attention was called to the fact that the New York investigation has cost three-quarters of a million dollars already. However, I want the Senate to know what they are voting on when they vote on the amendment to cut the amount for the committee from $50,000 to $25,000. That is all I want to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent was granted for the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I understand that, and it ought to be disposed of before we take up something else.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Utah to propose something else.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I simply desire to ask unanimous consent to submit certain reports from the Committee on Finance to go to the calendar.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I inquire what are the reports?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I object for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to the pending resolution.

Mr. PITTMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, does that amendment cut in half the amount?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposes to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$25,000."

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I have no desire to interfere at all——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada has the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the Senator from Nevada yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I have no desire to interfere at all with the endeavor in behalf of economy on the part of the committee nor with any decision that may be rendered with respect to this matter, but there is no higher duty that can be performed by the Senate than the investigation of the men who brought on the horrible panic and the dreadful cataclysm that this country has witnessed during the past few years. If, as the chairman of the committee says, the country may recover in taxes the sums he indicates, we will be well repaid, and not only repaid generously but the country will be compensated many times over for the amount we appropriate. This, he says, comes from uncovering huge tax frauds from financial magnates who have manipulated the market.

This investigation is one which ought to be prosecuted to the full, with sufficient funds to see that it is carried out in every respect in order that there may be developed all the facts, and developing those facts, then that legislation may be presented which may be necessary to prevent in the future a recurrence of that which we have seen in the past. And the investigation should be prosecuted, even though there be no financial return from tax frauds perpetrated upon our Government.

We have a singular situation that has been shown by the gentlemen who have come before the Banking and Currency Committee thus far. There will be shown undoubtedly, as the chairman indicates, other matters which ought to be disclosed and the discovery of which ought to be made to this country. If it be a fact that those who have much have brought upon the Nation the peculiar catastrophe that now is ours, if they contributed to the human misery that is now about us, it ought to be known, and the individuals who are responsible ought to be held up to public obloquy and scorn. If the chairman of the committee says, from his experience, that double the amount of money is required in order to conduct an investigation which shall accomplish the real purpose of the original resolution that sum should be accorded; and I hope that the amendment of the committee will not be agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I inquire what amount has been expended by the committee up to date?

Mr. NORBECK. The $50,000 appropriated has nearly all been expended, but there is enough left so that we can clean up our bills.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada has the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Will the Senator yield so that I may ask a question of the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee how much, in his judgment, it will require properly to prosecute this inquiry?

Mr. NORBECK. No one knows what the amount would be; it would be just a wild estimate. I do not think that we have gone into it very far as yet, but I really feel that with an expenditure of another $50,000 we can get a fair picture of the matter, not with the thought of holding hearings this summer, although the committee is going to be busy, but rather with the thought of keeping the investigators busy and starting hearings again in the fall.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is there an effort being made now by other Members to reduce the amount from $50,000 to $25,000?

Mr. NORBECK. I had in mind introducing a resolution for $100,000, but we all realize that such an amount is a large sum in these days; so I introduced it for $50,000, and the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate cut it to $25,000. I do not say that in a critical way.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Why was that done?

Mr. NORBECK. I do not want to be critical, because that is about what they have done in the case of all other resolutions calling for expenditures that have come before them. I am saying that if this matter is of sufficient importance to the Senate, I just want their attention long enough so that they may know what they are voting on; and it is up to the Senate to decide whether we shall have $25,000 or $50,000 or a larger sum or have none at all. We will do the best we can in any event.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The Senator introduced the resolution for $50,000?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes; I certainly would not have introduced the resolution for $50,000 if I had not thought that was necessary.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nevada will yield further——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield further to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am in thorough accord with all that has been said by the Senator from California, except I go further and say that if it can be definitely developed that those who are responsible for the misery that surrounds us on all sides can be identified, then, in my judgment, they should be prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield to me?

Mr. PITTMAN. I should like to have a vote on the pending question.

Mr. FESS. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. PITTMAN. If the Senator desires to make a speech, I do not yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. A vote "yea," as I understand, means a vote in favor of reducing the amount to $25,000. Is that correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LOANS TO STATES—SYSTEM OF HIGHWAYS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12445) to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by authorizing and expediting a public-works program, and providing a method of financing such program.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. The Senator from Nevada has the floor.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I dislike very much to have the Senate vote on a very important amendment to this bill without anyone knowing what it is except probably the five who assisted in preparing the bill. The bill does not now contain any provisions similar to those in the amendment. The point involved came to our attention even after the bill was reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency. It is a suggestion designed to facilitate action on the loans to self-liquidating corporations. At the present time the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in transacting its business has certain representatives in different sections of the United States. There has been inevitable complaint against the partiality of those representatives of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in different zones and their lack of knowledge or experience to report on the applications for loans from different sections of the country.

The amendment proposes to set up an advisory board in each of the Federal reserve zones of the United States, the members of which shall serve without pay, and who shall have the experience to enable them to pass on whether or not an applicant for a loan comes within the definition of this bill as being a self-liquidating corporation. It is an exceedingly important matter, as we are going to appropriate $1,500,000,000 to be loaned to so-called self-liquidating corporations, to know what is a self-liquidating corporation.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I do not find in the amendment that the board which the Senator proposes to set up will have any binding authority.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is advisory, of course.

Mr. COUZENS. And who is responsible for the loan—the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or this board?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; the amendment does not change the bill at all, except that it attempts to set up an organization in each one of the Federal reserve districts that will respond quickly to the request for information with regard to any applications for loans from the respective districts.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, one objection I have to the amendment is that it divides authority; there is no concrete authority, because under it the buck can be passed from the board to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation at the present time are, in substance, just what this amendment provides, in that they have themselves set up district agencies to report to them; and yet, so far as Congress is concerned, it places complete responsibility upon the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. PITTMAN. I may say that this does, too, if the Senator will read it.

Mr. COUZENS. It legislatively, however, tells them how to go about it.

Mr. PITTMAN. It states this:

> And upon receipt by the corporation of an application for a loan under such subdivision it shall be referred to the direct project board for the proper district for examination and report as to whether the project covered by the application is of a class with respect to which loans may be made under such subdivision unless the corporation has in its possession sufficient information upon which to act.

Mr. COUZENS. I understand that, but it is just a duplication, because the Reconstruction Finance Corporation now has agencies set up so far as passing upon applications for loans from the districts throughout the United States is concerned. If a bank in Walla Walla makes an application to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, they have an agency in that district to pass upon it; they set up their own agency. I do not see why we should do differently in this case.

Mr. PITTMAN. Let us see if this is any different. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that the existing Reconstruction Finance Corporation act is intended chiefly for loans to banks.

Mr. COUZENS. And railroads and others.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; but that was the main purpose of it, and, as a matter of fact, their representatives in these zones, as I understand, are very largely able bankers knowing the situation in banking circles, and I suppose knowing the railroad situation, but, if we pass the pending bill, we are dealing not with banks and not with railroads, because this bill expressly provides that those institutions that may now borrow under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act shall not borrow under this proposed act. We have attempted to define a self-liquidating corporation. No corporation except one dealing with a self-liquidating project can borrow money under this bill.

Therefore, Mr. President, there are three things to be ascertained, as I take it. In the first place, is the corporation making the application within the definition of a self-liquidating project? That involves, as I take it, first a legal question, second an economic question, and third the economic question which probably will turn on an engineering report. They will have to have some one besides a banker in each one of these districts to determine those three questions.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes. Just let me show you what the board consists of.

Mr. COUZENS. But I wonder how they would get that information if we did not pass this amendment. Of course, they would go about it in the same way, and do it in their own way.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is very probable. I hope they would.

However, Mr. Eugene Meyer might consider that a banker is also an engineer and a contractor and a lawyer. That all depends upon the viewpoint of the man who is appointing.

I regret to say that I do not believe, frankly, that the organization that they now have would facilitate this action. I think it would delay it. Of course, if they did not want to delay it, I will say to the Senator from Michigan, they do not have to refer it. If they say, "We have the information from any outside source," they do not have to refer it; but what I should like to see is this:

In each one of these Federal zones a board consisting of whom? First, a member of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation—I mean, I mean with regard to this particular character of loan. Second, a member of the Stabilization Board. I think it is very essential that a member of the Stabilization Board should be on this board, because, take Mr. Sawyer, for instance. Under an act of Congress he has been studying, surveying, and segregating all of these various works that have been authorized, to determine those that are ready to go and those that are not. I think possibly his study is more valuable than that of anyone else.

So we have a board consisting of a member of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. To that there would be no objection; but we would be assured that the director of the Stabilization Board was a member of that board, and we would be assured that an engineer to be appointed directly by the President was a member of that board. It is only an assurance, so far as I am concerned, that we would not only have an impartial board but that we would have a competent board to decide the three questions that come up—the legal question, the economic question, and the engineering question.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. If the Senator wants to make any decision they reach mandatory upon the corporation, the same as the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission is mandatory upon the corporation in railroad loans, I would not object; but I dislike this division of authority.

Mr. PITTMAN. I would not make it mandatory under any consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I was just about to say the same thing that the Senator from Nevada has said. I think that would be utterly impracticable. We would have this condition then: We would have 12 boards making loans, with no power in the central board to coordinate or to limit their activities. The probability is that we would have competition between the board of one district and that of another, and I think that would be subversive.

May I say, while I have the floor, that the amendment of the Senator from Nevada has this value: It makes certain that there will be a measure of impartiality in the loans to be considered by the board. It prevents the possibility of arbitrary action. It promotes prompt decision.

It may be said, as implied by the Senator from Michigan, that the board itself is intelligent, and can set up its own agency, and work questions out according to its own best judgment; and that is the real issue involved in the amendment—whether the Congress wishes to give some direction to the manner in which these loans shall be prepared for consideration by the board.

It would be difficult for a central board here, operating through the present agencies of the board, to pass upon loans of this character. It would be necessary for them to set up other agencies, or add to their existing agencies.

The amendment of the Senator from Nevada impresses me as well worthy of consideration.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, of course I disagree wholly with the conclusion reached by the Senator from Arkansas in that any direction to the corporation is involved. Apparently it is the intention of the author of the amendment that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can do as it likes. In the meantime, we have set up a very elaborate agency all over the United States, whose expenses we are going to pay; and for what purpose? For the purpose of giving advice to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, whether it chooses to accept it or not. In other words, it seems to me an entirely useless appendix to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation if it has no authority whatever.

Remember, I do not approve of the amendment at all, and therefore I do not approve of making the recommendations of this board mandatory upon the corporation. I said that if the Senator wanted to make this effective, he should make it mandatory; otherwise it is just a conflict, a buck-passing arrangement, where there is no absolute responsibility for final conclusions.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, of course the Senator from Nevada has not any desire to have boards through the country having mandatory control over the corporation, but I believe that there will be thousands of applications for loans under this provision of the bill. I do not desire that all of them shall run back here to Washington to the corporation, because they will flood that building with them. They will come before officers who have not time to consider any of their problems. Some of them will be as hastily and probably as ill-advisedly considered as some of them already have been, not by reason of any fault of the corporation but by reason of lack of time.

It would seem to be very much better, if we take, for instance, the Federal reserve zone out on the Pacific coast, to have the thousands of applications for loans go right into that local board and be segregated, and have those that apparently are not within the scope of this provision at all just thrown out, and have the recommendation come on to the board saying, "Here is a group of applications that have no business under this act." It has the same effect as the appointment of a commissioner of a court to take evidence. The court can not take evidence in hundreds of cases pending. It appoints a commissioner to take the evidence and bring in the facts and make recommendations.

There have not been such numerous loans under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act as we have it now. There have been very large loans, but only to a comparatively few institutions, because they were limited practically to banks, to railroads, and to trust companies. But if we do enact a provision similar to this, to lend money to municipal and semimunicipal corporations and even private corporations where they are self-liquidating, by building tunnels and bridges and aqueducts and canals, it is inevitable that there will be thousands of applications for loans. It is inevitable that a great majority of those will not come within the definition of this provision of the act at all.

Now, one of two things must be done. Do we want those applications referred back to a banker in San Francisco for that zone, or do we want them referred back, in case of doubt, instantly to a board consisting of an attorney, an engineer, and an appointee of the corporation?

I feel that that board, acting without pay, consisting probably of the ablest men they could find in those professions, would relieve the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of a tremendous lot of work, and facilitate things. I draw the distinction, however, between those loans under the present act and under the provisions of this bill if we pass it; and these provisions will probably pass, because I think a majority are in favor of them. We are going to have confusion, and if we adopt this amendment we will save the Reconstruction Finance Corporation a tremendous lot of trouble. We will facilitate action. We will insure against even the suspicion of favoritism.

It is an entirely different thing from the loans under the present project. We just submit the matter there because it is worthy of consideration. The corporation appoint one member of this local board. They do that now. If they want to appoint the existing member, they can appoint him. They appoint an engineer, and they appoint an attorney. Those men constitute a reference board which can segregate all of the applications for loans from that particular district. As I say, there is no doubt that two-thirds of them would be thrown out instantly as not coming within the purview of this act at all.

For instance, there might be thousands of applicants who would come in and say, "We want this loan for a school district. We consider a school district a self-liquidating proposition," as was stated the other day, "because we can collect taxes." We know that that does not come within the purview of this act. It is not intended to do so. But are we going to have thousands of those cases piled on top of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation? In every district they ought to be segregated out and separated, the report ought to come back, and they ought to say, "Here are the only ones that come within the purview of this act, right here."

If we do not do that, we will have to take the responsibility of how it comes out.

That is all I have to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Nevada has not restricted too much the duties of this district board.

The amendment reads:

> Upon receipt by the corporation of an application for a loan under such subdivision it shall be referred to the district project board for the proper district for examination and report as to whether the project covered by the application is of a class with respect to which loans may be made under such subdivision.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is all that I had in mind, because I want to segregate those that are clearly within the act and those that are not.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That would seem to be simply the duty of a lawyer.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not think that is necessarily so.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should think the Senator would want a recommendation from the district board, as well as to the advisability of making the loan.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is done by the Federal board.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; but the general board would have information about it only as it is given to it by the district board, it would seem to me.

Mr. PITTMAN. Of course, if it is desired to enlarge the board, that is another question. As a matter of fact, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] thinks it is too large now, I take it. I have amended the amendment, although I have not offered it in amended form. I wish to offer it in that form so as to perfect it. Where it says "architect," I wish to strike out "architect" and insert "attorney at law," because I conceive that an architect is not so necessary in these self-liquidating corporations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has a right to modify his amendment prior to action upon it, and the modification is made.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I do not wish to enlarge the matter any more than that. I simply wish to segregate locally applications for loans which are within the purview of this section, separate self-liquidating corporations from those that are not, and have it done by a competent body, which will consist of an attorney in the District, an engineer, and an appointee of the corporation. If Senators do not think the amendment will facilitate the matter, of course, they will not vote for it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I merely want to call attention to the fact that services of members of the boards are so valuable, in the opinion of the Senator introducing the amendment, that he states that the members of such boards chosen from civil life shall serve without compensation.

There is an old saying, coming from many years ago, that the laborer is worthy of his hire. There being no hire provided, it seems to be implied that the laborer is not doing a job fit for compensation.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I would dislike very much to say that about the members of the present boards throughout the country, because they are not receiving any pay.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am not criticizing anybody, but I merely desire to point out that if we expect important and busy people to give a considerable part of their time to an important matter it is worth receiving compensation. If we expect them to serve without compensation, it will mean that a great many of them will be appointees who are looking for something other than proper compensation, and it seems to me that we would be setting up a great mechanical device here, with a large number of boards, some of which are so unimportant that they are printed in small type and one of which is so important that in this amendment it is printed in large type. It is an extraordinary arrangement, and it does not seem to me, with all due respect to my good friend from Nevada, that what he is proposing would do more than complicate the situation with a lot of dollar-a-year people who are not even worth a dollar a year.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am sorry to hear the Senator say that. It happened that he was not a dollar-a-year man, but we had some very good ones here during the war. It happens to-day that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in being advised with regard to loans throughout the United States, have established the same kind of districts, but they are dealing purely with the banking problem, and they have some of the ablest bankers in the country who are acting as chairmen of advisory boards without pay.

There are some men in this country who are so interested in the development of the country, so interested in relieving unemployment, that, notwithstanding their high positions, they are willing to give their time to the Government in that kind of work.

Mr. President, I will detain the Senate but a very few minutes longer. I am so totally in disagreement with the Senator from Connecticut that it will not take long to express what I mean.

We are in greater distress in this country to-day than we were during the war. At the time the ablest brains and experts of this country donated their services to their Government; they were not considered incompetent because they were working without salary. We are in a situation to-day far more serious than we were ever in then, and it is to be expected that the ablest experts and statesmen and bankers of this country will give their services to the Government wherever needed, and be happy to do so.

I would not care for advisory boards in these 12 districts if the members would not serve without salaries, and that is the reason why salaries are not provided for.

The corporation has already a representative in every district. It can keep him, under this amendment. It would not have to appoint anyone else. It would result in only two additional men being attached to each board—that is, an engineer of contracting experience and a lawyer. It would insure that the advice they gave would be more nearly impartial, and certainly of greater value.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I am not finding fault with the Senator's amendment in that respect, but if I am correctly informed, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation now have these boards set up, voluntary boards, occupying their own offices, and without expense to the R. F. C. As I understand, they are doing a very excellent and patriotic work in helping the R. F. C., the same being a governmental agency, not organized for profit.

Yet in this amendment proposed by the Senator he provides 13 agencies, 1 in Washington and 12 others, and all the expenses of those agencies are to be paid by the R. F. C. In other words, it is an invitation for the R. F. C., or these commissions or boards which the Senator would create, to rent offices, to procure office furniture, to install telephones, to employ stenographers and draftsmen and architects and engineers, all for the purpose of collecting information which the R. F. C. may or may not need. I am not opposed to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation getting adequate information, but I think it is absolutely wrong by legislative enactment to tell that organization that they must set up 13 agencies, with 13 offices, and pay thirteen times office expenses, and other expenses, for the purpose of getting information which may or may not be needed by them.

I think the whole matter ought to be left to the R. F. C. Apparently it has worked out all right so far, and this amendment extends an invitation to them to set up all these agencies, with the usual expenses which go with such organizations.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, as the Senator says, the R. F. C. already has its boards or commissions established in the 12 districts of the United States, and in more places than that, I may say; and they have their offices already. This amendment would do practically nothing except to insure that there would be added to the boards in the various places attorneys and engineers of satisfactory experience.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, the Senator proposes, however, that all the expenses are to be paid. There is no such provision in the original Reconstruction Finance Corporation act. These boards are occupying their regular offices, they are using their own telephones, they are using their own clerks and their own stenographers. But here the Senator proposes that the Government will now set up another sort of agency, of which the Government will pay all the expenses. It certainly will involve the employment of architects and engineers, and by the amendment proposed by the Senator he invites everybody to come in and come under Government appropriations.

Mr. PITTMAN. Let us see whether it does call for that or not. The Senator says it will result in the employment of engineers and architects?

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly. It says that all expenses of such boards shall be paid, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can fix the expenses.

Mr. PITTMAN. But all they are to determine is whether or not the applicants are of a class to which loans should be made.

Mr. COUZENS. That is, they would have to have architects and engineers and draftsmen to determine all those matters, if it is to be handled along the lines the Senator recommends.

Mr. PITTMAN. Do the present boards have engineers to determine those questions?

Mr. COUZENS. It will be up to them to determine whether they want them or not, or whether or not the Army engineers can give them adequate information. I think they ought to be left to their own methods.

Mr. PITTMAN. I understand. This is the situation exactly. One Senator objects because the members of the boards are not to draw big salaries, the other objects because they have the expenses of an office to maintain; but what we have to face is this, that we are going to lend a billion five hundred million dollars of Government money, and if it is not worth the expenses of office rent and stenographers to see that that money is not squandered and wasted and misapplied, then I am entirely wrong.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASTINGS in the chair). The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

Mr. COUZENS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nevada.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 103, at the end of line 5, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the corporation may make loans under this section to any building and loan association upon its unsecured evidence of indebtedness in States where there is no statutory or implied authority for such association to pledge or assign the notes or mortgages of its borrowing members as security; but in such cases no loan shall be made to any such building and loan association the amount of whose liabilities exceeds 25 per cent of its assets at the date application for such loan is made.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, very briefly, let me say that paragraph (b) on page 103 limits the operations of the act so that—

No loan shall be made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under section 1 of this act to any financial institution, corporation, railroad, or other association or organization of a class to which loans may be made under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act.

Under that act loans are authorized to building and loan associations, but it has developed that in a number of States the building and loan associations are not authorized or empowered to pledge their securities or to borrow on the strength of their securities. Therefore the amendment belongs here at the end of the paragraph which I have mentioned, because to that extent it modifies the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act and permits building and loan associations, in those States where the laws do not authorize borrowing on their assets and the pledging of their securities, to borrow provided that in such cases no loans shall be made to any such building and loan association the amount of whose liabilities exceed 25 per cent of its assets at the date application for such loan is made. In other words, it makes it possible for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to loan to building and loan associations in States where they can not make such loans now by reason of an absence of State law. I think this provision ought to go into the bill. There are a few States where that situation exists. By this amendment the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would be authorized to make loans to such association provided their liabilities do not exceed 25 per cent of their assets.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Has the Senator information as to what proportion of the building and loan associations would be eligible under the limitation carried in his amendment?

Mr. FLETCHER. This makes them all eligible. They are eligible under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act now, but there are some States that do not permit the pledging of their assets.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I understand that, but the Senator has limited the right to make loans to those associations whose liabilities do not exceed 25 per cent of their assets. My impression is there are very few building and loan associations in the States with which I am familiar that would be eligible to make a loan, because in most cases their liabilities are in excess of 25 per cent of their assets. In other words, I do not believe the amendment would be effective or beneficial to very many building and loan associations.

Then, another thing I want to call to the attention of the Senator is that the fact that the State statute forbids the use of its assets for collateral on the part of building and loan associations raises a very serious question in my mind whether the amendment ought to be incorporated.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is not so much that the States do not allow borrowing by building and loan associations or that they are opposed to it, but because they have simply failed so far to provide by legislative enactment authority and power in the building and loan associations to make the loans. The States are not opposed to it. I think there is no State anywhere but will amend its laws so as to come within the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, but that would take two or three years. I did not learn about this situation until recently, when some building and loan associations took up the matter with me because the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had held that under the laws of their States there was no express or implied authority for the building and loan associations to negotiate such loans and pledge their securities. Consequently they were denied a loan.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. With that state of the law prevailing, what security would the Reconstruction Finance Corporation have for a loan if it were made under the provisions of the Senator's amendment?

Mr. FLETCHER. They would make the loans upon the responsibility of the association, and of course the association itself must be solvent.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Florida a question at that point?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In the event of subsequent liquidation would this be a legal debt in view of the inhibition of the State statute?

Mr. FLETCHER. There is no positive inhibition. There is simply a failure to authorize expressly that sort of transaction on the part of the building and loan associations. There is no inhibition against it. If the State laws prohibited it we could not cure that defect by any legislation here, but the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has said that there is no implied authority to negotiate these loans. I am quite sure that if we authorized the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make such loans they could obtain security from the associations aside from a pledging of their notes and mortgages and assets. The association itself has a certain responsibility, is perfectly good and sound, and can arrange in a way to satisfy the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It gives them the opportunity to come in and borrow. That is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. FLETCHER. I am willing to change the percentage as suggested by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I did not suggest a change in the percentage because I am looking for the security that would be behind the loan if it were made under the amendment. There would be no control over the activities of the building and loan associations. Many of them are in trouble now, as we all know. I sincerely doubt whether very many could be found whose liabilities are not 50 per cent of their assets. I am not suggesting to the Senator to relax the rule and make a loan to an association that can not give any collateral and whose liabilities are approaching the amount of its assets. I think that would be bad legislation.

Does the Reconstruction Finance Corporation recommend the amendment?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have not submitted the amendment to the corporation itself. I have conferred with some agents of the corporation, particularly a very responsible and very excellent one in another State. He suggested the amendment in this way. The building and loan associations seem to favor it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The law now authorizes loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to building and loan associations. There is full freedom, so far as the corporation is concerned, to make loans. I take it the only question that arises is what security should be required or given. I would not feel justified in authorizing a loan to a building and loan association without some kind of adequate security. Even though it may be entirely solvent at the time of the loan, that is no assurance that it will continue solvent until the loan is paid or collected.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should say this would leave the matter entirely with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is with them now, and that is the very point I am making.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand that they hold that in certain States they can not obtain any security.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is a very good reason for not making the loan.

Mr. FLETCHER. I mean security in the way of a transfer or actual assignment or pledge of their obligations in the form of mortgages and notes. This amendment would relieve them of the necessity of looking to the specific mortgages and notes or to any assignment or transfer of those notes or mortgages to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It provides for their making loans, if the association is perfectly solvent, on the unsecured evidence of indebtedness on the part of the building and loan association, but no such association may apply for a loan if its liabilities exceed 25 per cent of its assets.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I should like to point out to the Senator that building and loan associations that can put up collateral for security have in the past always borrowed from banks, have they not?

Mr. FLETCHER. I presume so, in some States.

Mr. COUZENS. That is true. Now, I desire to point out that under existing law the same building and loan associations can borrow from the banks if the banks think they are good, and the banks, in turn, if they need money can borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. So, in fact, if a bank does not think a building and loan association is good enough, then certainly the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should not think so. If the bank thinks it is good enough, and the building and loan association needs the money, it can lend to the building and loan association and then borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation with the note of the building and loan association as security.

Mr. FLETCHER. That, I will say to the Senator, is very good reasoning, and if it would work it would be all right; but the Senators knows, as we all know, that the banks are not doing these things now; they are really not functioning throughout the country as banks; they are not making this kind of loans or practically any loans in a great many instances. The banks might do what the Senator suggests in some cases, and when we undertook to take care of the banks so far as we could under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, we supposed they would do exactly what the Senator points out, but they have not been doing it. While we released their frozen assets, as we called them, or as Rogers calls them, "petrified persimmons," they have not as a result of that accommodated their customers as was expected and as we intended they should do.

In the States where no authority exists under the law to pledge their bonds and their notes and mortgages, I do not know whether they have been going to the banks or not, I am not advised as to that; but I do know that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation refuses to make loans to building and loan associations in certain States, and they put their refusal upon the ground that the building and loan associations in those States are not authorized to assign or transfer their notes, their mortgages, and their securities. That is what I am trying to reach by the amendment, so as to take care of the building and loan associations all upon the same footing wherever they may be located, provided, of course, they are perfectly solvent and their debts do not exceed 25 per cent of their assets. Why should they not be eligible to loans? It is a matter for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to pass on finally, any way, as to what security they require and what security they will exact. This amendment opens the door for all building and loan associations upon a perfectly safe basis to become eligible for applications for loans, and it is then up to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to determine whether they can offer the proper security or not. I should like to have this amendment go in the bill, and go to conference, anyway, and see if it can not be worked out.

I did not quite agree with the position taken by building and loan associations in some of the States. I took the question up with them and undertook to combat their views about it, but their counsel held firm. Florida is one of the States concerned, and I even submitted the question to some of the best lawyers in Florida, and they stated that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was wrong in their point of view. The lawyers there have said that to me, but that does not open any door. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is advised by their counsel that they can not make these loans because of the lack of authority in the building and loan associations under the laws of the States to assign and transfer and pledge their securities.

This amendment will open the way for building and loan associations thus situated, where they are perfectly solvent, where the loan is perfectly secured, and whose liabilities do not exceed 25 per cent of their assets, to make any other arrangement that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may exact, except that they may not be required to transfer and assign their mortgages, and that sort of thing. I think the amendment will open the way to accommodate such building and loan associations.

I would not be so insistent about it merely because of the situation in my own State, although we have some very strong and very excellent and splendid building and loan associations there that need accommodation of this kind, but there are other States in the same situation. I think Pennsylvania is one such State, and I believe there are other large States in the same situation. Why not give them a chance to come to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, make their showing, and if the corporation feels that the loan is perfectly safe empower it to make such loan?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I ask that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 103, line 5, after the word "act," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That the corporation may make loans under this section to any building and loan association upon its unsecured evidence of indebtedness in States where there is no statutory or implied authority for such association to pledge or assign the notes or mortgages of its borrowing members as security; but in such cases no loan shall be made to any such building and loan association the amount of whose creditor liabilities exceeds 25 per cent of its assets at the date application for such loan is made.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Florida a question?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I have been informed that that provision for such loans as the Senator has in mind by the land banks, so called, and the cooperative banks is contained in the home loan bill, so called. Am I correct in that assumption?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not quite understand the Senator's reference to the land banks.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Perhaps I should not have said "land banks," but cooperative banks. I might say they are called cooperative banks in some States and in other States home-loan associations.

Mr. FLETCHER. There are some such provisions in that bill, but I do not know what chance there is of getting it through.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I was going to ask the Senator if there is any possibility of action being taken upon that bill at this session?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think, if that bill should be passed, that the provision which I have offered is included in it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I should like to say to the Senator I am informed that even in States where the bank laws are assumed to be very conservative associations of the character referred to are experiencing a good deal of difficulty; that their mortgage loans are frozen; that many of those who have borrowed and given mortgages on their homes are unable to meet the requirements so far as paying interest, and so forth, is concerned. Do I understand from the Senator that this amendment will relieve that condition?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it would, to some extent, so far as building and loan associations are concerned.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. What is the attitude of those fostering the bill in regard to the amendment?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have not talked to all those sponsoring this bill; I have not spoken to them all; but I have spoken to the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] about it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the gentlemen sponsoring the bill have never had an opportunity to confer about the amendment, and I knew nothing about it until it was offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I was going to say that the legislative draftsman has just pointed out to me that this amendment as drawn does not carry out the intent of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That is the information that has just come to my attention.

Mr. COUZENS. The amendment provides that "the corporation may make loans under this section to any building and loan association," and that refers to section 1 of the act. Section 1 of the act does not provide for any such loans.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; there is a provision regarding loans for building and loan associations.

Mr. COUZENS. Not in this bill. I think the Senator ought to withdraw the amendment for the time being to see if the amendment may not be perfected. I should like to see some provision that the liabilities shall never at any time exceed 25 per cent of the assets.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I hope the Senator from Florida will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan, because I think the purpose of the amendment is a laudable one.

Mr. COUZENS. I hope the Senator from Florida will withdraw the amendment and let us see if we can not put it in perhaps a little better form.

Mr. FLETCHER. The amendment says:

> That section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof:

That was the amendment. I have tried to attach it to this provision on page 103 of this particular bill, which reads:

> (b) No loan shall be made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under section 1 of this act to any financial institution, corporation, railroad, or other association or organization of a class to which loans may be made under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act.

The amendment provides that the corporation may make loans to building and loan associations under the conditions stated. I thought it was proper to be inserted there. It would seem to me to belong there, because the provision refers to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act. I have offered the amendment so that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may be authorized to make loans to building associations.

Mr. COUZENS. I am advised that the amendment would not be effective at all.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I inquire if they have any authority already under the general terms of the act?

Mr. FLETCHER. As to the authority to make loans to building and loan associations, I just pointed out a moment ago that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation hold they can not make such loans in States where building and loan associations are not authorized to pledge their assets. This amendment is intended to obviate that difficulty.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I assume that in practically all the States these associations are not authorized to pledge their assets. Am I correct?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator refers to building and loan associations?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think in a majority of the States that is so. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has made loans to building and loan associations, I am told, in various States; but there are States where they hold they can not make such loans because the law does not permit a transfer of the mortgages of such associations. I am trying to relieve that situation. However, the Senator from Michigan suggested I withdraw the amendment for the time being. I have not consulted with the legislative draftsmen about it.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the Senator has changed a bill which he has introduced and tried to make it apply as an amendment to the pending bill, but he has left out the reference to section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act in his amendment. Then, also, in his original bill he provided that the liabilities should not exceed 5 per cent of the assets, but he has increased that to 25 per cent. I think there ought to be a further limitation and that the debts of building and loan associations should not be increased at any time when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation holds any loans of such associations. Will the Senator withdraw the amendment and let us see if we can not get together on it?

Mr. FLETCHER. I withdraw the amendment with that suggestion and will offer it later.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the Senate was courteous enough last night to have laid aside temporarily an amendment offered by me. I ask now that it may be read to the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator let me first read an amendment? If there is any discussion, I will withdraw it. I think, however, the particular amendment I am about to offer will probably be agreed to without any debate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Very well. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment: At the end of the bill insert a new section to read as follows:

> In the employment of labor in connection with any project provided for in this act preference shall be given, where they are qualified, to ex-service men with dependents.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I hope that amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WAGNER. There is no objection to it, of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, should not that be amended so as to incorporate the provision that this work shall be done by hand rather than by machinery, if that is the proper part of the bill for such a provision?

Mr. TYDINGS. Will not the Senator let this amendment go in and offer that as a supplemental amendment later on? I should like to have the principle embodied in the bill that ex-service men with dependents, where qualified, shall have preference.

Mr. COUZENS. I will not object.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Now, Mr. President, I ask to have my amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 112, after line 16, the Senator from Montana proposes to insert a new section to read as follows:

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans to bona fide cooperative financial institutions, organized under the laws of any State or of the United States and having resources adequate for their undertakings, for the purpose of enabling them to finance the carrying and orderly marketing of staple commodities produced in the United States. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation may make any such loan in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as it may determine subject to the limitations of section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act as to the periods within which it may make loans and the amounts and maturities thereof, and all such loans shall be fully and adequately secured.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, there is nothing further that I care to say in addition to what was said yesterday in support of this amendment. I am content to have a vote on it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was not here yesterday when there was some discussion in regard to this amendment. I have in mind the fact that many of these so-called cooperatives are now very heavily involved, and are owing the Stabilization Corporation and the Farm Board many millions of dollars. I think the evidence heretofore obtained in some of the hearings disclosed that many of these so-called cooperatives are insolvent. They have the Farm Board with $500,000,000 to which they may resort, and to which they have resorted. Does the Senator think it would be wise to increase their borrowing capacity and make further drains or drafts upon the amounts which will be carried in this bill?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the cooperative farm-marketing organizations to which the Senator refers are already taken care of in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act. They are authorized to borrow. Section 5 of that act provides:

To aid in financing agriculture, commerce, and industry, including facilitating the exportation of agricultural and other products the corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans, upon such terms and conditions not inconsistent with this act as it may determine, to any bank, savings bank, trust company, building and loan association, insurance company, mortgage loan company, credit union, Federal land bank, joint-stock land bank, Federal intermediate-credit bank, agricultural-credit corporation, livestock-credit corporation, organized under the laws of any State or of the United States.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation act authorizes loans to be made to the cooperative associations that the Senator has in mind. The bill before us now does not increase the funds for the purpose of making loans to any of these corporations, but the amendment contemplates a still further class of organizations to which loans may be made, namely, financial corporations that are engaged in loaning money for the purpose of carrying and marketing staple commodities other than those provided for in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, my difficulty is in the interpretation of "staple commodities." I wondered if the Senator wanted to go farther than would be provided if the following words were put in after the word "produced," in line 7, so that it would read:

Marketing of staple commodities produced on the farms of the United States.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should not have the slightest objection to that, except that those are already taken care of in the act. It would not add anything to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act.

Mr. COUZENS. Will the Senator give us an example of what he contemplates taking care of under this amendment?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The act, it will be observed, authorizes these loans only to agricultural-credit corporations. I can very readily conceive that many of these commodities might get into the hands of dealers who would ordinarily make loans from the banks for the purpose of carrying these commodities until the market was improved, and they could then orderly market them; whereas, under the existing conditions it is represented that the banks are forcing liquidation, and thus these commodities are thrown upon the market, thus depressing the prices. I can very readily conceive that the people having these commodities could organize themselves in a corporation quite like the agricultural credit corporations for the purpose of making loans to those holding these stocks until they could market them orderly.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, in the case of the agricultural-credit organizations, do not the commodities have a generally quoted market value? If I understand the Senator correctly, however, under his amendment all the automobile dealers of a community could get together and form a cooperative financial institution, and have Buicks and Fords and Packards and Lincolns in their garages, and go and borrow on those products, being staple commodities.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If they were staple commodities.

Mr. COUZENS. Well, are they staple?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should not think that automobiles would be regarded as staple commodities. I think, however, there is considerable obscurity with respect to what would fall under that description.

Mr. COUZENS. I was trying to get that obscurity clarified, because I do not get the purpose of this amendment unless it is to include manufactured articles.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not think so. I indicated a condition in which it would extend to agricultural products, the loans being made to financial institutions that could scarcely be called agricultural-credit companies or associations.

Mr. COUZENS. Let us assume, then, that all the retail merchants of a community got together and created a cooperative organization for the sale of children's clothes and boots and shoes and ladies' gowns, and so forth.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator will observe that this is for carrying.

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; they could put them all in a warehouse, as I understand, and borrow if it was cooperative. Is it cooperative as to sales or marketing, or is it cooperative as to securing finances? In other words, it seems to me that if it is going to be cooperative as to sales there must be some agreement as to the price at which the goods will be sold.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, no; the financial institution that can borrow is a financial institution that will loan for the purpose of carrying.

Mr. COUZENS. But in the case of agriculture, of course, they are not styled articles. They are not trade-marked articles. They are not in any sense manufactured goods. They are goods that are quoted on the market at certain rates from day to day; but if the Senator intends to include any staple commodities, manufactured, trade-marked, and other kinds of goods, I am frank to say that I do not know how it is going to work.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the bill before us is entitled:

A bill to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by authorizing and expediting a public-works program and providing a method of financing such program.

The amendment which the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has just offered has many commendable and meritorious features; and yet I shall feel constrained to vote against it, as I have against a number of measures offered yesterday which I thought would open the way for a private corporation to invade this fund and to divert it from the purposes for which it was created.

I have understood that the condition of unemployment was knocking at our door and making an appeal, and I am in entire sympathy with it; and I want to do everything I can in a proper way to aid the unemployment situation, to furnish work to the unemployed, as this bill indicates its purpose is. Yesterday, however, efforts were made—and most of them, I am glad to say, were unsuccessful—to convert it into a loaning bill, into a banking institution to loan to corporations private in character, engaged in private enterprises and private undertakings.

One of the suggestions was to loan for the purpose of opening up a placer mine in California. If we permit bona fide corporations to be formed, if we invite them to come to this fund and invade it, and obtain a portion of it, I do not see where we are going to draw the line. If we are to permit bona fide cooperative financial institutions, organized under the laws of any State, to apply, and successfully apply, for loans from this institution, I do not see where we are going to draw the line.

Of course, we can draw the line, but it will be arbitrary. I feel that we ought to resist all of these efforts to convert this into a banking or credit institution for private corporations. It ought to be an organization for the purpose of aiding unemployment and developing those projects of the Federal Government and States and municipalities which will furnish employment to the people. It does seem to me, however, that we will invite, like a lot of vultures, from every part of the United States, organizations and corporations to come down upon this Reconstruction Finance Corporation and ask for loans; and I am afraid the primary purpose—indeed, the real purpose—for which the bill was passed will be lost sight of in the efforts which will be made and the pressure which will be brought to invade the fund, and to obtain loans in order to aid private enterprises.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I do not want to delay the Senate, but I think it would be made more definite if there were inserted on line 7 the words " on the farms of," after the word " produced," so that it would read " produced on the farms of the United States."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have not the least objection to that, except that it would make the amendment meaningless, because that is already taken care of in the measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PATTERSON in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan to the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to have a telegram from the mayor of Seattle read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., June 20, 1932.

Senator WESLEY L. JONES,
Washington, D. C.:

The following resolution was unanimously adopted at a meeting of the mayors of the municipalities of Washington held in Seattle June 18:

"At a meeting of the mayors of Washington, convening at Seattle June 18, 1932, a resolution was unanimously adopted calling upon our Senators and Representatives in Congress to work for the passage of laws providing for Federal aid to municipalities and for the purchase of productive utility bonds, and approving the principles of Federal aid for public works." They made a further resolution that a copy of this resolution be telegraphed to our delegation in Congress.

JOHN F. DORE,
Mayor of Seattle, Chairman Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, let it not be understood that I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator to accept the amendment to his amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I did not. I said I had no objection to it, but that it would destroy the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] to the amendment presented by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

On a division, the amendment as amended was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, and ask that the same be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 106, line 8, after the figures " $3,000,000," the Senator from Oklahoma proposes to add the following:

Provided, That the sum of $100,000 shall be available for the construction of roads, trails, bridges, approach roads, and entrance gates in and to the Platt National Park in Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this would not increase the amount of the appropriation, and of the $3,000,000 provided on page 106, in line 8, it would make available $100,000 for the Platt National Park in Oklahoma.

On page 5 of the report accompanying this bill we find that national parks are given credit in the total sum of $1,500,000; that is, the whole number of national parks are set aside certain sums of money which total $1,500,000. The other $1,500,000 is not definitely allocated. The report states that $450,000 shall be allocated to the Shenandoah National Park, and over a million to the Great Smoky Mountains National Park. So there is $1,500,000 which may be used for those two national parks, the Shenandoah and the Great Smoky Mountains Parks.

The Platt National Park in my State has as many visitors, next to the great Yellowstone Park, as any other park. I think it is next in importance, and to date the Platt National Park has had no consideration to speak of. I think the amount of money it takes to run that national institution is about $15,000 a year. This year we have about a $15,000 appropriation for improvements in the park. The park has roads, but they are dirt roads, with a little sand here and there, and occasionally a little patch of gravel. It has no bridges, and it has no entrance gates. When one comes to the park he thinks he is entering an abandoned farm, or something of the kind. My amendment aims to make money available for the construction of post roads, bridges, proper gates, and so on.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. Has the Senator consulted the National Park Service, and has any estimate been prepared?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes; the National Park Service, acting through the local superintendent, in connection with the superintendent here, has detailed plans for the expenditure of more than $100,000. I think it is about $135,000 they desire to spend immediately, but of course I could not ask for the money out of the general appropriation bill, out of general taxes. The plans are made, the work is ready to begin, and if the money is made available, much work of the kind that will be of benefit to the unemployed can be done at the Platt National Park, a park which serves 300,000 tourists each year, and which has had but little consideration at the hands of the Government.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator asks that a certain specific sum of money be earmarked for this particular park, whereas there is no earmarking in the bill indicating where the $3,000,000 shall go.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is true, but there is earmarking in the report, and I take it that the authorities who are to spend the money will consider the report submitted by the committee. I simply want to put the Platt National Park along with the list of other national parks for some money out of this $3,000,000. That is my idea.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the Senator allow me to look at the report just a moment?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Certainly. There are ample funds, and the funds are not allocated. If this bill is to pass, there are not many places in my State where we could get the benefit of public expenditures, and having that national park, serving 300,000 tourists annually, next to the Yellowstone National Park in importance, it occurs to me to be not out of line to ask for this consideration for this national park in Oklahoma.

Mr. HAYDEN. What is the sum the Senator asks?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. A hundred thousand dollars from this second $1,500,000. It would not interfere with the allocations in the main itemization. The two parks, the Shenandoah and the Great Smoky, have $1,500,000, with no definite allocation. I am simply asking that $100,000 be taken from the second allocation of $1,500,000, and allocated to the Platt National Park.

Mr. HAYDEN. I may say to the Senator that I can see no serious objection to the adoption of the amendment and taking it to conference, but frankly, I think the place to get the assurance for the expenditure is, as other parks have obtained their assurance, from the department itself.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if I can, I would like to make an observation along the same line.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. We have pursued the policy of making this lump appropriation, the Park Service to utilize the money wherever in its judgment the need is most imperative and urgent. I should think that the Senator ought to address his application to the Park Service, rather than to the Congress. Obviously, we are in no situation to determine which of these parks or proposed roads ought to participate in this fund, or how much ought to be allocated to each particular park. We have not the information before us that would enable us to act intelligently and justly with respect to that matter, while the Park Service has. Of course, if there had been hearings upon the matter, and the necessities of each of the parks had been elaborated before committees, we would have something upon which to act; but although I have no doubt these roads are necessary, and would be an excellent piece of work, we might be taking away the money from others where the need was more urgent and more imperative.

Mr. HAYDEN. I am aware, Mr. President, that the Platt National Park does have the distinction of being one of the parks that more people visit than almost any other in the United States. Therefore, for the accommodation of the public, the National Park Service naturally would want to see that the proper conveniences were provided in the way of roads, and so on. I can not say to the Senator, frankly, whether erecting an ornamental gate is the way to spend the money. I think the Senator is too particular in his suggestion. If a sum of money were allocated to that park for the accommodation of the public, it would be entirely all right, but to specify not only the amount but exactly how the amounts are to be spent, it seems to me is going a little too far.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am perfectly willing to strike out the provision for the entrance gates, and confine the amendment to roads and bridges in the Platt National Park, as this fund seems to be provided for such things. I ask leave to modify the amendment by striking out the words "and entrance gates."

Mr. HAYDEN. Why could not the Senator simply modify the amendment to provide a certain sum of money for the park, and then leave it, as every other park has left it, to the discretion of the National Park Service?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. And let the matter go to conference.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I modify my amendment so as to read, "Provided, That the sum of $100,000 shall be available for the Platt National Park in Oklahoma."

Mr. HAYDEN. Leave it that way, and we can take it to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. THOMAS) as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I send a proposed amendment to the desk, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 100, line 21, after the word "law," the Senator from Michigan proposes to insert the following: "and are under regulation as to service and rates by State authority."

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will not the Senator explain the amendment?

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly. This applies to section 1, in which it is provided that these loans are to be made "to States, municipalities, and political subdivisions of States, public agencies of States, of municipalities, and of political subdivisions of States, public or quasi-public corporations, and public or quasi-public municipal instrumentalities of one or more States to aid in financing projects authorized under State or municipal law."

Then I propose to add, "and are under regulation as to service and rates by State authority."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, let me remind the Senator that the language "quasi-public," as it appears twice in that paragraph, was stricken out last night, so that it leaves it simply loans to States, municipalities, political subdivisions, and so on, and would not extend to those organizations which are subject to regulation. I see no objection to the amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. One moment.

Mr. COUZENS. I see no objection to it even then, because in line 16 is the expression "public agencies," and I would not know whether that meant separate corporations, or what the interpretation of "public agencies" might be. Certainly there could be no harm in having it provided that any of these agencies which borrow money are regulated as to service and rates by some public regulatory body.

Mr. WAGNER. It may not be what the Senator would deem a public regulatory body. In a city where a bridge is built within the confines of the municipality, the city itself may fix the toll charge to cross the bridge, but it is not a State regulatory body.

Mr. COUZENS. I do not say that. I say, "Under said authority." The language is, "Under State or municipal law and under regulation as to service and rates by said authority"—that is, authority of the State or municipality. It does not say anything about a regulatory body.

Mr. WAGNER. Will not the Senator withhold his amendment until I may have a chance to consider it?

Mr. COUZENS. I would like to have it approved; and then if the Senator objects, I would be glad to have it reconsidered.

Mr. WAGNER. Is it not much easier to lay it aside temporarily? I want to read it and consider it in conjuction with the text. The Senator himself frequently requires a little time to consider a proposed amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator has not interposed an objection to it?

Mr. WAGNER. No; I have not.

Mr. COUZENS. The amendment can be adopted; and then if the Senator desires to have it reconsidered, I would be glad to consent to its reconsideration.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well; do it in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 101, line 1, after the word "viaducts," insert the words "natural-gas pipe lines," so as to read:

To private corporations to aid in carrying out the construction of bridges, tunnels, docks, viaducts, natural-gas pipe lines, and waterworks devoted to public use and which are self-liquidating in character.

Mr. HAYDEN. The purpose of the amendment is to take care of a situation where a natural-gas pipe line has been constructed to carry natural gas across State lines in the Southwest—Arizona, New Mexico, and Texas—and to certain of our copper-mining camps. The line is about 500 miles long. The decline in the copper-mining industry has made it so there is no market there for natural gas. It is desired to extend that line 200 miles to Tucson and Phoenix, the two principal cities in Arizona. The nature of the country over which the line is to be built is such that trenching machines can not be used. It is too rocky for the use of such machines. This would mean the expenditure of $2,000,000, if the loan were made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and would mean putting a thousand men to work with pick and shovel. If the language already in the bill covering bridges, tunnels, docks, viaducts, and waterworks is proper, it would seem that natural gas pipe lines might also be made eligible for loans. That is the purpose of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Costigan	Jones	Robinson, Ind.
Barbour	Couzens	Kean	Sheppard
Barkley	Dale	Kendrick	Shipstead
Bingham	Davis	King	Smoot
Blaine	Dill	La Follette	Steiwer
Bratton	Fess	Lewis	Stephens
Brookhart	Fletcher	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	George	McKellar	Townsend
Bulow	Glenn	McNary	Trammell
Byrnes	Goldsborough	Metcalf	Vandenberg
Capper	Hale	Moses	Wagner
Carey	Harrison	Neely	Walsh, Mass.
Cohen	Hatfield	Norbeck	Walsh, Mont.
Connally	Hayden	Norris	Wheeler
Coolidge	Hull	Oddie	White
Copeland	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment may be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think the Senate should consider what its policy is to be with regard to this bill before it passes upon the amendment. I had judged by the vote which was taken here on amendments offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] that it is not the intention of the Senate to provide loans to public-utility corporations for the purpose of constructing works upon which they would then be able to charge the public rates. Certainly, if the Senate is to be consistent in having adopted the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] and the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], then the Senate could not accept this amendment, because there is no more justification for loaning money to a private corporation to build a pipe line for the conveyance of natural gas to consumers than there is for making a loan for the purpose of building a power plant or transmission line or an addition to a street-railway or interurban line. The Senate seemed about ready to pass upon the amendment without any consideration, and it was for that reason I suggested the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I discussed the amendment with the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL]. He found no objection to it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What is the difference, may I ask the Senator from Arizona, between the loaning of money to this private corporation to build a 200-mile extension of its pipe line and the loaning of money to one of the Insull subsidiaries to build a new power-transmission line in some section of the country?

Mr. HAYDEN. I will answer the Senator from Wisconsin by asking him a question. What is the difference between constructing a natural-gas pipe line and constructing a tunnel or bridge or dock or viaduct or waterworks?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There is considerable difference, it seems to me, because what is provided there are utilities that are to be used for a purpose where the customers, if I may use that term, will pay a return upon the investment, and not for the purpose of enabling a public-utility corporation to enlarge its facilities and its plant and equipment.

Mr. HAYDEN. There can be no difference between serving the customers of a waterworks and serving the customers of a gas line. The water company sends its water through a pipe line, and the gas company sends its gas through a pipe line.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is the point I am trying to make about the amendment: If it is the intent of the framers of the legislation and if it is the intent of the Senate to grant public money to private corporations for the purpose of building plants and equipment upon which they may charge a return to the users thereof, then why should not the amendment be general in its terms and why did the Senate adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] eliminating the words "and similar projects"? There is no more justice in the claim of the Senator's pipe-line company than there could be in the claim of some other public-utility company that wants to borrow money for its purpose.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator's argument is directed to another provision of the bill that loans to private corporations to aid in construction of bridges, viaducts, and so on, which are self-sustaining.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Precisely. I agree with the Senator, so far as my own point of view may be concerned, that the section should be stricken out; but the Senate has been curtailing and cutting down the scope of that particular provision. The Senator from Arizona proposes to open it up for a particular pipe-line company that is located in his section of the country. What justification will the Senate have for not opening it up and permitting other public-utility corporations located in other sections of the country to get money for similar projects? Therefore it seemed to me the Senate ought to determine what its policy is to be on this question before it adopts the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I feel like supporting the objection of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to this amendment. It is a little difficult to draw the line, but the projects here, for which loans are authorized for the construction of bridges, tunnels, docks, viaducts, and waterworks, are all projects that are utilized by the general public.

A natural-gas pipe line is, of course, under the interstate commerce act, a public carrier, and the public may make use of it; but the number of people who make use of it is ordinarily extremely limited. The general public does not make use of a gas pipe line. I think these things merge into each other, and I rather think this amendment falls on the excepted rather than the admitted side.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, my concern was this: I saw my opportunity to put at least a thousand men to work with pick and shovel, because trench-digging machines could not be used in that rocky soil, so far as this particular project is concerned. The project, of course, would have to stand the test of being self-liquidating to the satisfaction of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I believe it can meet that test; I know of no other similar situation in the United States; and I felt I would not perform my duty here if I did not give people out of work in Arizona an opportunity to do a kind of work that almost any man can do. For that reason I have offered the amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I do not think that I have disagreed with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] on any phase of this measure so far, but I see quite a distinction between this case and others. I would be entirely opposed to opening the door so that public utilities could take advantage of this measure, but the natural-gas industry is a comparatively new industry, that is, in its recent rôle. It tremendously reduces the cost of fuel to the people of this country. It does not occupy the same position at all as the present public-utility companies which are to-day serving the cities and towns of this country. The pipe lines carrying gas are long pipe lines running across the country; many municipalities desire to tap them, and they tap them in most cases in competition, it may be said, with more expensive fuels. The distinction I think is this: Public utilities have franchises from cities in nearly every case. The gas pipeline system has not obtained a franchise, but is running a trunk pipe line and it desires to enter the municipalities. The municipalities are required under contract to pay for the connecting line. They are in a condition where they can not do so, but they are willing to enter into contracts that the pipe-line companies may enter the cities and municipalities at their own expense on a fixed rate for gas, which will pay for the expense of building the project.

I can not conceive that this new movement with regard to natural gas, which I say is in competition entirely with other forms of fuel, power, and light, is in the same position as are public utilities.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. This, indeed, Mr. President, is an industry that has developed remarkably in the last few years and has furnished a very large portion of the demand that has been made upon our steel mills during the last 12 months, and it is entitled to encouragement. I wish to submit, however, that, as a rule, the gas carried in the pipes is owned by the same people who install the pipe line. They are, as I said before, obliged to carry gas that is offered by anyone, but, as a rule, they carry their own gas. So the gas pipe line is really not in any very strict sense a public institution. The rates are regulated by the State authorities, but the field in which the rates operate is comparatively narrow. The great bulk of the material carried, as I have indicated, ordinarily belongs to the company that owns the pipe line or to an affiliated company.

As I have said, Mr. President, it would be very difficult to distinguish the gas pipe line from the petroleum pipe line. If the gas carried in the gas pipe line enters into competition with other varieties of fuel, as it does, as a matter, of course, so does the crude petroleum carried in pipe lines; and I do not imagine that we are quite prepared to go into the making of loans to the owners of oil pipe lines for the purpose of promoting the installation of improvements of that character.

Mr. PITTMAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. I thoroughly agree with the Senator in regard to the oil pipe lines, but to my mind there is a great distinction between the two. The oil pipe lines are used by oil companies to market their products. The general public do not utilize them. It is simply a retail business. At present, as I said before, the development and the attempt to develop the use of natural gas, which is probably the cheapest fuel in the world, is aiding communities and municipalities and individuals in the reduction of the cost of living.

The gas pipe lines, unlike the oil pipe lines, are not just simply for the purpose of transporting a fuel for retail throughout the country, but they are approaching with natural gas all municipalities, with the idea that the municipalities may obtain gas cheaper for general distribution than they can at the present time get artificial gas or electricity. I believe that there is involved competition; and I believe it is something that we should aid in introducing into this country as fast as possible.

Now, we have reached the point where these pipe lines have been built in the vicinity of cities, villages, and communities for the purpose of having those municipalities tap them, but the municipalities happen to be without funds to do it at the present time. Therefore they can not tap them. This amendment proposes that the pipe-line company shall be able to borrow money so as to tap its main line and run a connecting line into the cities and recover the cost thereby incurred by rates charged for the gas consumed at a fixed sum.

I opposed the suggestion when I first heard it, because I was thinking of electric-light plants, of the power plants which have franchises in cities and which have a fixed business; but I saw in these natural-gas pipe lines a form of competition with monopolies that now exist in the cities. I do not think that gas pipe lines are common carriers to the same extent that the oil pipe lines are. The oil pipe lines are owned by the great Standard companies, but the law requires them to take the oil from the independents; and that oil, in the long run, simply is transported as a railroad company transports commodities to market and is retailed. The gas comes from a certain field and a trunk line runs near cities and municipalities and towns, and those cities, municipalities, and towns are expected to tap it and obtain the gas in competition with other methods of producing light and power and fuel. The municipalities are not in a position where they can do it; they have contracted to do it, but they have fallen down, and now these pipe-line companies, if they can get the money to build into the cities at the request of cities or towns or municipalities, will do it. They can not to-day borrow from the banks. The cost of the pipe line into the cities and municipalities would be amortized from the fixed rate which would be charged for the gas that would flow from the distributing lines.

If the amendment had to do with the power companies or the electric-light companies that now exist and which have franchises in the cities, I would oppose it; but I say, to my mind, the amendment would not only aid a new industry, the development of which will cheapen light and fuel to the people of this country, but would give employment to many men in the development of this new industry.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Arizona whether there are gas companies now located in Tucson and Phoenix?

Mr. HAYDEN. There are such companies, and they are required to bring the materials from which the gas is made a tremendous distance. There are neither coal fields nor oil wells in Arizona. The effect of the construction of this natural-gas line is bound to be a reduction in the cost of gas to the consumers.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is the point that I wish to raise. The Senator from Nevada tries to make this amendment seem palatable because it is going to result in competition, but there is no assurance of that at all.

Mr. HAYDEN. We can assure it in the State of Arizona through the State corporation commission that fixes the rates for the sale of gas, and the rates are based upon the cost of production. If that production cost shall be greatly reduced by the introduction of natural gas, it will follow that the rate for gas will be reduced to the consumers.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It will follow after a long series of contests before the public utilities commission.

Mr. HAYDEN. That may be true in other States, but it is not true in Arizona. Our commission acts with great promptness.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, yes; I am sure of that; but the fact remains, and we can not get away from it, that it is proposed to loan money out of the Treasury of the United States, in effect if not in fact, to a corporation which built a pipe line to take care of certain large industrial consumers, such as copper companies. Now the copper companies are shut down, and those who invested their money in the pipe line are anxious to extend the line to the two cities mentioned, where they may sell for domestic consumption and for manufacturing purposes in those two cities the gas which they are now unable to sell to the copper companies. I want to know, Mr. President, whether the Senate of the United States proposes to adopt that policy with regard to this bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. The test, if the Senator will pardon me, would be to strike out the entire provision that relates to loans to private enterprises for the building of bridges, viaducts, and waterworks, but the test should not necessarily be applied upon this amendment which relates to an activity which, in principle, is the same as a waterworks.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Ah, but we have already had a test on the proposition of curtailing and not expanding this provision of the bill, and it was decided by a practically unanimous vote of the Senate. Now the Senator comes in and proposes to open it up. I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the real issue on this subject, I believe, is the issue between the loaning of money to private industry and public works; I do not think there is any question about that. The proponents of the pending bill were in favor of Government works, but not entirely Government works. They were in favor of certain characters of municipal works, and instrumentalities of municipalities, and in aid of certain private corporations.

The proponents of this bill who assisted in drafting it were, as a general thing, opposed to lending money to private industry because it is illimitable, because it would not be possible to make enough money available, and for the further reason that where there are competitive industries, if we lent to one it would be an unfair act.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. There is a matter that can be disposed of in a moment, and I appreciate the Senator's yielding in order that it may be considered.

I now yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, out of order, as in executive session, I should like to have action on a very important matter. Another judge is to be appointed up in New Jersey. The court calendar is overloaded. The bill has been approved by the committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in the closing hours of a session of Congress I am opposed to unanimous-consent agreements of this kind to take up matters out of order to pass bills that have passed the House or to confirm nominations.

I know nothing about the situation of the Senator from New Jersey. I have no objection to this particular confirmation, but I have objection to this method of procedure. I therefore am constrained to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, as I was saying, the proponents of this bill are opposed generally to lending money to private industry for the reasons I have stated; and yet the proponents of this bill are very anxious to give as much employment as possible to the unemployed in this country where the lending of the money will be for a beneficial public use, and where it may be so limited by definitions as not to scatter out over all industry.

I want to say that the group of five Senators of whom I was one made every effort, favoring as we did as large an employment as possible on public works, to ascertain what public works were ready or could easily be made ready to be commenced, and those that would not constitute an uneconomic Government investment. In order to do that we naturally called before us, as the very first one, the director of the Stabilization Board, who was appointed under an act of Congress for the purpose of ascertaining what Government works had been authorized by Congress and were ready to be started and employ labor. What happened? He could find only $100,000,000 worth of post-office buildings on which work could be started at once that would not involve large loss to the Government of the United States.

We had before us General Brown, the Chief of Engineers of the Army, in charge of river-and-harbor work and flood control. He could find only $45,000,000 in addition to that appropriated that might be used immediately, or very soon, under estimates, and so forth, that would employ labor. He could find only $15,000,000 that could be used soon for the employment of labor on Government work that was necessary at some time.

The road question had already been gone into thoroughly. The House could find only $132,000,000 of road work, including roads in forest reserves, Indian reservations, and so forth, that could be commenced immediately, that had been estimated for, and could employ labor.

That amounted to only about $300,000,000. We put in $200,000,000 more, making $500,000,000, for the purpose of anticipating things that might be developed quickly, or to lift out of the Budget things that should not be there.

I know that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] proposes a substitute carrying $500,000,000 for Government works; but I think we will be a long, long time in getting anything like that amount of work started. As I say, I wish we could find it now, but we could not find it at all through the experts that we brought before us.

When we had gone the limit in the Government works that were ready to start and could be started soon, we looked around to see how we could help some character of industry that was not a monopoly, that was not well established, that wished to do something for the public use, to do something. We found that there were a number of proposed tunnels under rivers, like the one at New York City; there were a number of bridges proposed; there were a number of canals; and a number of different propositions of that kind whose amortization and repayment were certain by reason of certain fixed charges, and not dependent upon taxation, always having in mind that it was a public use and always believing that it was instituting a new competition to some existing monopoly. That is the reason why we put in this clause about toll bridges, toll roads, aqueducts, and viaducts.

A number of years ago our States and our local governments got away from toll bridges and toll viaducts and toll roads; but the depression in this country, the bankruptcy of States and cities and municipalities, has compelled us to resort not only to the old system but to extraordinary methods; and if the depression lasts much longer, if we are to employ labor, we will find that we will have to go to toll bridges, to toll viaducts, to toll canals, to toll docks. The time will come, of course, when the Government will terminate that condition by condemning these things; but when we start in to study the method of finding economic employment for labor in this country through Government expenditures, it will not do to say, "We will appropriate $500,000,000" and not know where we are going to spend it.

There is not any difference as to purpose between the Senator from Wisconsin and myself; but I say that we are going to have difficulty in finding an economic place to expend the money that we appropriate. For that reason we took in toll bridges, toll roads, toll viaducts, and these things for which we now have to resort to private capital, although years ago we had abandoned that plan of construction.

Do not cut that out. We need that expenditure. It is a good competitive expenditure. It is economic. It is furnishing transportation in this country that is essential.

When we come down to natural gas, I was opposed to including it at the start; but, to my mind, it was different from an existing power company that was furnishing light in a city. It was different even from an existing gas company that was furnishing gas in a city, which was established, and had a franchise. Here was a new industry that was picking up the cheapest fuel in the world and carrying it thousands of miles, across State after State, past city and village and municipality, which was waiting to be tapped to reduce the expenses of the people, but which could not be tapped because of the bankruptcy of cities and municipalities. There is no question but that the rates and rentals of this gas will pay for the connecting lines, but the banks will not lend the money, and I think the money should be lent to them for this purpose.

So Mr. HAYDEN'S amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, on behalf of the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] and myself I offer the following amendment, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 102, between lines 13 and 14, the Senator from Oregon proposes to insert the following:

(d) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is further authorized and directed to create for each of the 12 Federal land-bank districts a regional agricultural credit corporation with a paid-up capital of not less than $3,000,000, to be subscribed for by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and paid for out of the unexpended balance of the amounts allocated and made available to the Secretary of Agriculture under section 2 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act. Such corporations shall be managed by officers and agents to be appointed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under such rules and regulations as its board of directors may prescribe. Such corporations are hereby authorized and empowered to make loans or advances to farmers and stockmen, the proceeds of which are to be used in the first instance for an agricultural purpose (including crop production), or for the raising, breeding, fattening, or marketing of livestock, to charge such rates of interest or discount thereon as in their judgment are fair and equitable, subject to the approval of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to rediscount with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the various Federal reserve banks and Federal intermediate credit banks any paper that they acquire which is eligible for such purpose. All expenses incurred in connection with the operation of such corporations shall be paid by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under such rules and regulations as its board of directors may prescribe.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, this proposal is a very important one, but is of such a nature that I think I can explain it very briefly to the Senate.

Senators will remember that under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act $200,000,000 was made available or will become available to the Secretary of Agriculture for certain agricultural loans defined in that act. From this fund the Secretary of Agriculture has now loaned about $65,000,000. In a conversation with me yesterday he told me that he anticipates that he might loan or use in collections as much more as $5,000,000 so that the total which he has expended or will expend out of that fund is something like $70,000,000.

The occasion for this amendment is that the Federal intermediate-credit banks of the country are now in position to make loans to farmers and to livestock operators, but the loans can not be made because there are no adequate agencies for discounting the paper with the intermediate-credit banks. In many parts of the country, due to failure of banking institutions and due generally to want of capital for this purpose, the local people are not able to organize and capitalize the credit associations necessary to enable the livestock people and the farmers to avail themselves of the facilities offered by the intermediate-credit banks. This amendment proposes merely that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, under authority really already created and out of funds which will presently be in their hands, may set up or create the requisite agencies. It requires no new money, but it does bring facilities to farmers who now can not avail themselves of the advantages already offered by our Government under existing law.

I believe I have a right to say that the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is agreeable to the amendment. It was considered in substance before a subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency some time ago, at the time we were dealing with a bill introduced by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], and it was uniformly supported, I believe, and approved by the subcommittee at that time. I hope there may not be serious objection to it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. STEIWER. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am in full sympathy with the purposes of the amendment. May I ask what is the meaning of the language in line 8, page 2, "to be used in the first instance for agricultural purposes"?

Mr. STEIWER. That follows the phraseology of the existing law and is a limitation placed upon loans to be made or discounted by the intermediate-credit banks. It was placed there by the Senate drafting board, under my statement to lawyers of the Senate that I had no purpose in enlarging the provision, but rather preferred that we proceed under authority of existing law.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. One can readily understand, may I say to the Senator from Oregon, the requirement that the proceeds of the loan shall be used for an agricultural purpose, but the words " in the first instance " are to me confusing. The Senator's statement has not cleared the matter of the doubt.

Mr. STEIWER. I do not know whether I am competent to answer the question, but I have heard it suggested that the language was so used in order that the farmer might borrow money for the purpose of breeding or raising livestock and then that the note might be rediscounted for any other purpose. In other words, he acquired it in the first instance for an agricultural purpose but subsequently the note might be used for the purposes of the discounting agency.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think the explanation which the Senator has given is even more confusing than the language itself, if the Senator will pardon me for saying so. The requirement that the loan shall be for agricultural purposes is clear and has an accepted meaning. That language is employed in a number of similar acts. But the use of the phrase " in the first instance " is certainly of doubtful significance and, I think, of doubtful value.

Mr. STEIWER. I wish I could tell the Senator more definitely why that language was included. I have no objection to its elimination.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the Senator will yield for that purpose, I shall propose an amendment to his amendment, namely, on page 2, line 8, to strike out the words " in the first instance."

Mr. STEIWER. I will accept the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon modifies his amendment, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret to find myself in disagreement with my friends who are supporting this bill. It seems to me the measure will be destroyed by amendments which are being incorporated within it. The result will inevitably be, if certain provisions are accepted, that either here or in the House or in conference or in the hands of the Executive it will meet defeat. As I indicated a few moments ago, the raison d'être for the bill is to help relieve destitution, to furnish employment to those who are without work, to expedite a public-works program, and provide for the financing of the same.

But there seems to be a disposition to pervert the object and purpose of the bill into a Federal banking organization, without the restrictions imposed upon banks, or into a huge loaning agency or instrumentality, largely to aid private corporations with impaired credit or without resources, in order that they may inaugurate profits, industrial or commercial; under the bill, and some proposed amendments, bonds and securities having no market and with uncertain value are to be unloaded upon the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; that is, the Government may, and probably will, sustain enormous losses. It is proposed that the people are to be taxed to create a fund to be loaned to all sorts of private and public organizations, to almost every conceivable corporation that may be formed. It is true that we gloss over some of these projects by saying they will help the farmers. That is a slogan sometimes adopted to secure support of measures of doubtful validity and assured impracticability. This slogan is, of course, very appealing and arouses sympathy and commands no little support.

We voted only a short time ago $10,000,000 to create a revolving fund for the farmer. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], as I recall, was the sponsor of that measure. Under its terms farmers and stock growers and farm organizations may obtain loans. A few weeks ago we appropriated $200,000,000 for loans to farmers, and from that fund $70,000,000, as I am advised, has already been advanced to them. Extensive credits have been made to agriculture. Farm-loan banks have been organized, as well as intermediate-credit banks. The Farm Board was organized and $500,000,000 placed in its hands to aid the farmers of the United States. Public and private loans have been made to those engaged in agriculture. And so generous has been the credit extended that the farmers are now owing over $12,000,000,000. They are the victims, as are millions of our citizens, of a credit system that has placed them in bankruptcy, if it has not enslaved them. Debts, public and private, have a large part in causing the deplorable conditions, economic and industrial, in which the people find themselves.

We have recently increased the taxes, a portion of which is to create the loan fund, and placed it in the hands of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. We use the taxing power of the Government to obtain money to loan back to the people. It may be justified under some circumstances, but the soundness and wisdom of this course may raise some doubts.

The amendment calls for a vast amount of new machinery. It provides that—

> The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is further authorized and directed to create for each of the 12 Federal land bank districts a regional agricultural credit corporation.

There are to be created 12 new corporations, with all the machinery and paraphernalia auxiliary to or connected with those organizations, each with a paid-up capital of not less than $3,000,000, all to be subscribed for and paid by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. So far as the bill intends there are to be no stockholders but the Government. It is to be the fountain from which all waters are to flow. The Federal Treasury is to be, in the last resort, the source of this gold supply that is to supply these numerous corporations which in turn are to extend credits to the agriculturists of the United States.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. KING. I yield for a question.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Just a very brief statement. The Senator is discussing what we are doing to the Treasury of the United States. I might say to him that if we had started 20 or 30 or 40 or 50 years ago to keep the Government out of business, then his argument might be significant; but to-day, when the Government is in business everywhere, certainly the Senator is not going to stand here on the floor of the Senate and say that agriculture is going to be the one exception in America that shall not have some help.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the question of the Senator from Idaho has been elevated into a speech.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. If the Senator will yield further——

Mr. KING. If the Senator wants to ask a question, I shall yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. I just want to make one further comment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield for that purpose?

Mr. KING. I prefer to yield only for a question, but I yield to the Senator anyway.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. The situation in the country to-day is very acute.

Mr. KING. Yes; and the Senator wants to make it more acute.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. The object of the amendment is to make it possible for the farmers to get some money. In the present situation, the plans proposed are tending in the right direction, but we have eliminated the one thing necessary to make these funds available to the farmer, and that is to set up the organization so he can borrow money. We are proceeding on the theory that he has the capital to start an organization, but the fact of the matter is he has not the capital, and now we are providing that capital, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. CAREY. I think the Senator from Utah has overlooked one very important thing in the amendment, and that is that it does not provide for any additional appropriation. There was provided $200,000,000 under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, made available to the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose of agricultural loans, but the Secretary of Agriculture has loaned only $75,000,000 of that fund. This merely transfers a portion of that unexpended balance for the assistance of these banks.

Mr KING. Replying to my friend from Idaho, as I understood him, if we sinned 30 or 40 years ago by placing the Government in business, a precedent was established and we must persist in transgression

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr KING. I yield for a question.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Just one other comment in answer to the statement of the Senator from Utah—and that is that the amendment does not take any further money out of the Treasury. The money has already been authorized to be appropriated for the use of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It is money that comes out of the $200,000,000, or the unexpended balance of the $200,000,000 which we have already authorized for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator's position is that this bill in effect commits the Government to policies and activities not authorized by the Constitution, but having transgressed constitutional limitations for many years we are warranted in continuing in our sinful way. That may be logical but it is hardly good in morals, and I do not think it sound morally, politically, or philosophically, or constitutional.

When we are convinced of past constitutional irregularities or of unsound and unwise policies that have been pursued, there should be an inclination to avoid them in the future. We read a great deal in the Scriptures about bringing "forth fruits meet for repentance," and when we have discovered errors, political, economic, or otherwise, it seems to me that the obligation rests upon us to try to avoid those errors in the future.

However, Mr. President, as I was stating a moment ago when the Senator from Idaho interrupted me, this amendment sets up 12 new corporations, it creates additional bureaucratic machinery, and also adds to the long list of more than a million of Federal officeholders. It draws upon the taxpayers of the country for its capital. It calls for taxes to raise money to loan to taxpayers. The destructive power of the Government is to be used not for governmental purposes but for private purposes. I am referring to the bill generally and not alone to the amendment under consideration. Undoubtedly if private corporations and individuals are to be the beneficiaries of this bill, and are to be permitted to indirectly employ the taxing power of the Government for their own ends, then there is greater merit in the plan contemplated by the amendment than can be found in other proposals offered for our approval.

The capital of these 12 corporations is to be supplied by the Government—not the officers of the same. The Government is the banker, the money lender, the agency that must bear all the losses incurred. The officers, managing directors, and agents of the corporations are to be appointed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and it may prescribe the rules and regulations for their conduct.

Mr. President, this measure and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act will create the most powerful and far-reaching organization ever created by the Government. It seems humanly impossible for it to successfully discharge the crushing duties and responsibilities that will rest upon it. Fortunately men of character and ability have been chosen to administer its affairs.

I am imperfectly attempting to convey the idea that the bill before us should not transcend the object for which it was designed. There is unemployment, and this should be an unemployment measure, not a bill to aid private corporations or to be a market for frozen or unsalable assets.

If we are not prudent, the bill will be broken down. It is an unwise policy to establish the Government as a banker and money lender and to create the relation of debtor and creditor between the Government and the people.

Mr. President, I concede greater merit in the proposition to loan to agricultural associations than to many of the corporations which it has been suggested would or should be beneficiaries of this bill and receive credits from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

I commend to my friend from Idaho the statement, to which I have adverted heretofore, of former Senator Magnus Johnson that the evils from which the farmers as well as the majority of the people of the United States are suffering resulted from too much credit.

Money was too easy to obtain and mortgages and debts and insolvency followed. If the interpretation placed by some Senators upon this measure is adopted, there will be demands from all parts of the United States for loans, and if not denied, the funds to be provided for the Reconstruction Corporation will be diverted from construction activities which will furnish work for the unemployed. Washington will be the Mecca to which will flock representatives of broken down corporations and private organizations that need credit denied them perhaps by banks—but which it is not the province of the Government to supply.

Mr. President, let us keep this bill within the limits for which it was originally designed; let us try to employ it as a means to furnish employment to the unemployed, to construct needed public improvements, including post offices, roads, and river and harbor projects, that may furnish work for the army of unemployed.

Mr. President, I hope this amendment, at least in its present form, will not prevail.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I agree with the views of the Senator from Utah that we ought to endeavor not to load this bill with extraneous matter so as to make it very objectionable, but if that implies that we have thus far offended in this particular, I am totally unable to agree with the Senator from Utah, for I think he will be unable to point out the particulars in which the bill has been expanded beyond its limits as it came from the Committee on Banking and Currency. The fact about the matter is that practically every effort in that direction thus far has been defeated.

However, Mr. President, this, to my mind, is a very meritorious amendment, and it ought to be adopted. While it does depart from the general purpose of the bill, the bill extends the powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and this is in line with that course. The Secretary of Agriculture now has at his command $200,000,000 under the provisions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act for the purpose of making loans to farmers for crop production. He conceived, and I dare say it was the correct idea, that that was intended to make a very great number of loans in small amounts to farmers so that they could produce crops, they being unable to secure the usual loans from banks and from other sources available to them in ordinary times. So he has made a rule restricting the loans that may be made to any one individual to $400. That is perfectly useless so far as the stock interests of the West are concerned. That business is carried on on such a large scale that a loan of $400 means almost nothing; no man will ask for it at all.

Consequently so far as that branch of agriculture is concerned it gets no benefit whatever from that provision of the law.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. An analogous limitation was made in the regulations promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture to the effect that only four tenants on any one plantation might be beneficiaries of loans, so that on large farms it is impracticable to operate under advances made in accordance with the regulations now enforced by the Secretary, and some such arrangement as this is essential in that particular.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield for a further question?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is there any relationship between the rules and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture and the amount of money at his disposal? In other words, is he undertaking by this limitation to keep the total distribution within the total amount at his command?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; he so states; but he says to the stock raisers, "Why do you not organize an agricultural-credit corporation and then negotiate your loans with the intermediate-credit banks?" The answer to that is: ".We can not do that, because we can not borrow any money from the bank with which to pay for the stock in the agricultural-credit corporation." That is the situation.

In ordinary times the situation would be fully taken care of by the agricultural-credit corporations, but just now they are perfectly useless, because there can not be borrowed from the banks the funds with which to organize agricultural-credit corporations which would make the loans for stock-raising purposes to be negotiated with the intermediate-credit banks, and accordingly the appropriation so very generously made by Congress to aid agriculture affords practically no aid to that branch of it at least.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana or some other Senator who is interested in the bill a question.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me that this amendment provides for a top-heavy organization. Is there any necessity, in order to aid the agricultural interests and the livestock interests, of having a corporation in every Federal land-bank district in the United States and having a set of officers and agents drawing, I presume, if we follow the precedent of the Farm Board, exorbitant salaries? It seems to me that the machinery could be simplified very greatly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am not the author of the amendment.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to make a brief suggestion?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator will pardon me for a moment, I want to make this remark, if I may. It is found that it is necessary, in order to carry out the purposes of the act, to have a corporation organized with a very considerable amount of capital, in order to make the loans to accommodate the industry, and it is difficult to organize corporations of that character.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, the purpose of setting up the corporation in the different land-bank districts was to create an entity which under the law would be authorized to rediscount with the Federal intermediate-credit banks. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation could hardly do that if it were merely to appoint agents in different places or appoint an agent in each of the respective land-bank districts. A separate entity will be permitted under the existing law, to take notes and rediscount them and thus have a source of money which is not Government money at all.

Of course the intermediate-credit banks are capitalized by the United States, but they sell their debentures, and this amendment will give the farmers an opportunity to secure credit which is derived from private sources.

Mr. BORAH. I understand all that; but what is the necessity of adding 12 corporations, 12 entities, in order to accomplish that purpose, with 12 sets of officers and 12 sets of agents, all drawing salaries of $75,000 or so?

Mr. STEIWER. I realize, Mr. President, that such expenses ought to be severely curtailed, but one institution located at a central point can not serve a country of the magnitude of ours. These rediscounting agencies must be closer to the people, closer to the farm.

Mr. BORAH. But there are a number of these districts where the agricultural interests to be taken care of are not extensive, there are only five or six districts, or three or four districts really, where there are any considerable agricultural interests to be taken care of. The other portions of the country could certainly be taken care of by one corporation.

Mr. STEIWER. There are dairying interests everywhere.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. KING. I was about to ask the Senator from Oregon why not create an agency in intermediate banks instead of creating all this machinery with a multitude of new officers? The only employment we are going to furnish, it seems to me, under this amendment would be to a lot of officeholders we will never get rid of. The amendment creates relationship between the Government and individuals which is unwise—that of debtor and creditor.

Mr. BORAH. There is a situation which it is desirable to have taken care of, but I have learned a lesson from the activities of the Farm Board. They have created a condition which is a scandal in this country. This amendment has no limitation in it at all with reference to the salaries or anything else.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I am receiving every day, and I am sure every Senator with farm constituents is receiving, appeals from home for relief from the depression. These letters, it is true, are very much alike. They point to farm prices the lowest in memory, some of them the lowest in recorded history. They point to the fact that taxes have not been reduced in proportion to farm prices. They point to the fact that debts which, when contracted, could be paid with 1,000 bushels of wheat now require 2,500 bushels of wheat to cancel the indebtedness. They point to unpaid taxes, unpaid interest, foreclosures; the farmers of this country are reaching the point of desperation.

Some of these letters point out that the present Congress has enacted legislation designed to save the railroads; designed to protect the insurance companies; designed to save the banking structure. They can not understand why nothing has been done directly to help farm prices. The letters I am receiving do not ask for donations for agriculture; but they do insist that Congress should make the attempt to protect farm prices.

Mr. President, I find myself much in agreement with the farmers who are asking Congress to take action. There are plenty of people in this country in need of foodstuffs; we hear that every day. There are plenty of people in the agricultural States and sections who need the products of manufacture and need them badly.

The Congress has been in session for six and one-half months and apparently has made no attempt directly to relieve agriculture, the basic industry of the Nation. The pending amendment introduced by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] and backed by the farm organizations—and I know of no better authority as to what the farmers of the country want than these organizations—offers some hope of better agricultural prices. I do not believe it will completely solve the problem of farm prices; I believe a revision of our monetary system so that money will become once more a medium of exchange rather than a commodity itself is needed. But this proposal is a step in the right direction. I say that it should be enacted. Thousands of our farmers are loaded up with debts. The plan proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be especially helpful in making it possible for the farmer to finance this year's crop production.

Mr. President, I ask permission to print in the RECORD a number of letters from farmers, showing conditions among and the ambitions of the farmers of the United States:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The letters referred to are as follows:

TOPEKA, KANS., May 24, 1932.

HON. ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Much has been done to relieve banks, building associations, railways, etc., but up to the present time nothing to help the farmer pay interest on his mortgage and his taxes and produce another crop.

Unless and until he receives some aid from our Government, no business in any line can be revived. The fault of this crisis does not rest with the farmer, but because of the fact that what he produces has so small value—brings such a small amount in dollars.

To cite a few items I am familiar with as a landowner: The best hogs here in Topeka only bring $2.70 per hundredweight; eggs, a few pennies per dozen; butterfat, 13 cents; wheat, corn, and oats, less than the cost to produce; and alfalfa, a standard crop in our valley, $7 per ton, the price magnanimously set by the State, as they are large buyers for dairy herds at State institutions.

With these conditions prevailing, farmers can not be purchasers of any industrial products. Neither can they receive for what they produce from the land sufficient returns to pay interest and taxes. Hence, the only way for relief, to my mind, is to increase the value of all farm products. The Strong bill to stabilize the dollar will help, but from what I read the Federal reserve bank is opposed to it. They should be relieved of their job.

You are making every effort to "balance the Budget," which is right, of course; but unless Government expenses are very greatly reduced, in another year there will be another Budget to balance.

Congratulate you on your fight for oil tax. Kansas needs it, but that is negligible in comparison with price of all farm products. Surely Congress will not adjourn without rendering aid to the farms. Should they fail to do so, you will see sad results, as farmers and landowners have carried on to their limit.

I furnish you no news. You know all above, but being familiar with local as well as State conditions myself, wish to add strength to your hands and impress, if possible, the present great need of action that means relief to the farmer before Congress adjourns.

With personal regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

O. P. UPDEGRAFF.

RUSSELL, KANS., May 23, 1932.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

HONORED SIR: Inclosed you will please find an editorial clipped from the Daily Drovers Telegram of May 19, which makes some very startling disclosures. During the week we sold from the farm 120 dozen fine, white-shelled eggs, all handled carefully and infertile, good enough to make up part of a meal of the finest families in the land, and received for them the pitiful sum of $9.60. We also sold nearly 20 gallons of high-grade cream, for which we received the pitiful sum of $4.82, or 11 cents per pound for the butterfat content. We have a boy 14 years old, a big strapping fellow, who has completed common school with a record of having never been absent or tardy. He wants to go to high school, and we, his parents, want him to go, but we can not see how it will be possible to send him under the conditions as they now exist. In the event we do send him, we will have to do so at an expense of not more than $10 cash per month. We live on a good producing farm and attend strictly to business, and find we have to skimp and save and deny ourselves at every turn in order to keep our heads above water, and even at that we know we are better off than millions of other good Americans.

I do not pretend to know how long the masses of America will stand for such tomfoolery, but I do shudder to think what the consequences will be when they do reach the limit of endurance.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN STEPHENS.

HOLYROOD, KANS., June 2, 1932.

Senator CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I have subscribed for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I am following up the work of Congress with keen interest. I have read some of the exposures of the New York Stock Exchange, and I hope you will likewise push an exposure of the board of trade; so far I have seen nothing of it in the RECORD.

Three months have passed in Congress and no great effort has been made to relieve agriculture, the root of our depression; more credit, of course, has been made available to the farmer, but that is just like giving a drowning man more water. The farmer has too much money borrowed now as it is. Of course, this additional loan will do some good in certain cases, but the farmer must be allowed to make a profit over the cost of production, if he shall ever survive.

The handwriting is on the wall; it is up to Congress to recognize it. So far Congress has failed to give agriculture any effective legislation. When you take the buying power away from 30,000,000 people that represent the farm population of the United States, that is bound to have a ruinous effect on our factories and the labor that is employed in those factories.

I am also a farmer. I have asked many farmers as to how much more money they would have spent in the past year had they money, and the answer ran from $1,000 to $5,000.

For instance, you will find this condition amongst the farmers in this community—floor coverings in their homes worn through to the floor; furniture old and worn out; stoves hardly fit to use; walls that need decorating; clothing they are patching and patching up to make them do; shoes likewise; instead of having several pairs they make one pair do; young men instead of buying one or two suits each year make the old suit do; the family wash machine and the sewing machines worn out but they have no money to buy new ones; and the many other necessities of life the farmer would buy if he had the money.

Most farm buildings need paint; many farmers need new farm machinery, buildings to house their stock and implements properly; and they would buy many luxuries if they had the money. Taking for granted that every farmer would spend $2,000 for his requirements would create $60,000,000,000 worth more business for the eastern manufactures and would supply employment for many of the unfortunate jobless people in the eastern cities.

Can not the eastern representatives see this—or do they refuse to see the handwriting on the wall? Whom do they expect to buy their manufactured products if the farmers do not buy them? They very well know the farmers have been crying for an even break for the past 10 years, borrowing and borrowing until now he is at the end of the rope—and no Congress so far has helped the farmer in an effective way. How long would this depression last if the farmer, the cotton and grain farmer alone, would be receiving a reasonable price for their products? If the price of wheat was $1.25 per bushel it still would be the cheapest food on earth.

Some of the eastern representatives ask us why does the farmer not organize or reduce his production like we do? A farm is not a factory; a farmer can grow farm products only when the good Lord makes them grow—for instance, this community was totally hailed out for two years in succession, while other sections were hit by dry weather. The farmer must grow his crop when it will grow.

Well, they say the Government must not get into business. What is a protective tariff? It is nothing more than protection for the industries, or helping them get a better price for their products.

This same protection is what the farmer asks for protection from foreign markets. Set the price of wheat and cotton and many of the other farm commodities would follow the rise in price. Let the farmer carry the surplus is the solution. Every business in the United States is run just that way. They carry the surplus. Other business does not sell their entire production on the bases of their surplus as the farmer is compelled to do to-day. Besides there is no commodity in the whole United States but the farmers' whose price is fixed by a bunch of well-organized gamblers—and the farmer suffers the consequences. This was just recently proven again when the market went up on wheat just a few months ago, and the visible supply was greater then than it is now.

Help the farmer as the Government has helped the industries for so many years with the protective tariff by setting the price on wheat and cotton on what is used domestically and let the farmer carry the surplus. This plan would not cost the Government one cent. Ten cents on each bushel consumed in this country would operate the plan—this plan would be much better than letting a bunch of gamblers set the price. They have no other motive than to make millions of dollars for themselves at the expense of the consuming public, with no intended help to the farmer.

With proper legislation a portion of the $500,000,000 marketing act money, now used to the storing of wheat and cotton, could be returned to the National Treasury. According to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the National Treasury could very well use this money at this time.

As I understand it the farm organizations favor this plan of fixing the price of wheat and cotton—and prorating the selling and letting the farmer carry the surplus. I trust you will put your every effort back of such a plan—to save agriculture, which will aid the industries, and help the unemployed out of their distress.

Yours very truly,

C. C. FREVERT.

ST. JAMES, MO., June 14, 1932.

Mr. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CAPPER: We, knowing that you are much interested in seeing that agriculture is helped during this serious crisis, and being you are United States Senator from one of the greatest wheat-producing States in the Nation, I know you fully appreciate just what it means to the producers of grain in your State if they are compelled to sell their grain on the present ruinous prices that will hardly give these producers existence.

So I am not going to take up any of your time by writing you at length on this matter, but we notice to-day that they have made new lows on all of the grain markets, and with the statistics as given out by the United States Department of Agriculture we are at a loss to understand just why it is that the administration has thus far been unable to get the Federal Farm Board to take advantage of the opportunity of this crop being cut practically in half, and with the visible decreasing right along, that they have been unable to stabilize this grain on a higher level. It is causing quite a lot of unrest wherever you go and converse with farmers. So, being president of the Phelps County Farmers Association, and knowing the Senate would adjourn shortly, we sent you a day letter as per confirmation inclosed, which we feel confident you will appreciate hearing from us; and we feel satisfied you will endeavor to exert your best efforts to get some of the agricultural commodities turned on an upward trend from this point, as we have had nothing but down trend in the past three years until our buying power is practically at the zero mark.

With kindest regards, we are, yours very truly,

PHELPS COUNTY FARMERS ASSOCIATION.
W. S. MILLER, President.

GARDEN CITY, KANS., June 8, 1932.

Our wheat might possibly make 5 or 6 bushels per acre, with millions of small grasshoppers showing up that will possibly harvest it for us, by the looks of it now, as of 1919.

We got to have some way of getting more cash back into our communities. (This means better prices, more money in circulation, and more jobs and more buying.) Congress spent all winter helping bankers and their mistakes; now is the time the Nation should wake up and help the producer on the other end of the string.

JESS BENNETT.

CLAYTON, KANS., June 1, 1932.

There never will be a return to prosperity until the producers get a fair return for their labor. As it is now the farmers and home builders are losing their homes and land all over this Nation, and it is time to stop. But it can not be done by giving more credit to the producers, as it is the credit they have had that is now hurting. Now, see the market the past few days, the speculator shot the price down. You Representatives and Senators can make a budget to balance your account for the Government on the people, but how can the people pay when they can not get cost of what they produce with corn at 20 cents and wheat at 30 cents a bushel. Now, Senator, I know the conditions out here in my territory, and I know a lot of renters who, after they had paid for the cutting and threshing their wheat, did not have enough to pay out that the landlord might get his share. I know some of the farmers out here 18 months ago that were advised to sell their cash wheat and buy the options as it looked like wheat would go higher. It never did go higher, and trying to save themselves they lost all they have, some as much as $5,000. If some way is not found of getting the money out through the channels of trade, through the producers, in a very short time, all I can say is, God pity this Nation.

W. T. HENDRICKSON.

WAVERLY, KANS., June 6, 1932.

One of our influential farmers has just stated to us the prices he is compelled to take for his farm products this being Mr. H. H. Terry, Waverly, Kans. Cream, 5-gallon can, nets him $1.54; eggs, 9 cents per dozen; poultry, 8 to 17 cents per pound; hogs, choice, $2.60 per hundredweight; cattle, $3.50 per hundredweight; wheat, 40 cents per bushel; oats, 18 cents per bushel; corn, 30 cents per bushel; kaffir corn, 20 cents per bushel; hay, $5 per ton; wool, 6½ cents; horses, $70.

Agricultural land is selling around $14 to $25 per acre in Coffey County. With a high rate of tax and the amount the farmer is receiving for his merchandise this should awaken National and State Representatives to come to our assistance.

W. J. DUFFY,
L. L. COOK.

OBERLIN, KANS., June 2, 1932.

Senator, we are very much concerned about conditions. Our wheat crop in this section of the State is light. If the price of wheat doesn't go up, it won't any more than pay expenses. If we could get a rise in the wheat price, corn prices would naturally follow and in time higher corn prices would reflect in higher hogs and higher cattle. This would help all the farmers.

A substantial rise in the wheat price would do more to bring the country out of the dumps than all the legislation in the world. We are within a few weeks of harvest. The situation is serious. If the farm board is sound and will work out eventually, it will be too late to help a great many farmers. It is imperative that they have this help now. Eggs are selling on the local market for 6 cents a dozen. Corn, 20 cents; butterfat, 11 cents; hens, 5 cents a pound; wheat 36 cents, and hogs $2.25. Is it any wonder that the farmers are becoming radical?

ELWOOD M. BROOKS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, we are honored to-day by having in our midst an American whom all Americans delight to honor.

It has always been the proud boast of Americans that they admired and respected and honored courage and enterprise.

Amelia Earhart has the distinction of being the only person who has crossed the Atlantic Ocean twice by airplane. She has the distinction of having been the first woman to cross in an airplane. She has devoted a large part of her life to showing that flying was perfectly safe for women and that there was no reason that a woman should not be a pilot, and a good pilot. Several times she has crossed the continent alone, in her own plane or in an autogiro, in an attempt to promote American aeronautics.

Recently, as everyone knows, she has performed the remarkable exploit of having flown across the Atlantic Ocean alone. She is here for a brief visit, and, I am informed, is at present in the Vice President's room. I am sure that the Members of the Senate would like to meet her and shake her hand and offer their personal congratulations on her splendid achievement.

I move, Mr. President, that the Senate take a recess of 10 minutes for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Connecticut.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair designates the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] and the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to escort Miss Earhart to the Chamber.

The Senate being in recess, Miss Earhart was escorted into the Chamber by Mr. BINGHAM and Mr. ROBINSON, of Arkansas, amid great applause from the floor and the galleries.

Mr. BINGHAM personally presented the Members of the Senate to Miss Earhart, after which she was escorted from the Chamber amid great applause; and, the recess having expired, the President pro tempore resumed the chair.

THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, on yesterday, when the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] made his eloquent address analyzing the Republican platform, and especially one plank of it, the names of two Cabinet members were used in stating, as the Senator understood it, their position on the question of repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

The Senator yielded to me to ask whether he was not mistaken in stating that Postmaster General Brown stood for repeal. I did not raise the question of Secretary Mills, because I had never talked with the Secretary on that particular subject, and did not know precisely what his position would be, other than as expressed in the convention. His position was far from the idea of repeal, as he expressed himself in the convention.

Mr. Mills has made a statement of his position on this question, and it was printed this morning in the Washington Post. Not desiring to occupy time at this stage, when we are all pressed for time, and not desiring to inject any extraneous matter, I would like to have unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the statement of Secretary Mills giving his position on the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I am informed that in the course of his discussion of the prohibition plank adopted by the Republican Convention, Senator BORAH stated that for the last six years I had been in favor of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. Since the Senator has referred to my position, I feel called upon to make a brief statement of my personal views. The Senator has evidently misunderstood my position. While I have not been an advocate of the eighteenth amendment, I have not believed that mere repeal is the solution. On the contrary, I have become more and more convinced that the true remedy is to be found in modifying the eighteenth amendment so as to prevent a return of the conditions which existed prior to the eighteenth amendment, and at the same time stamp out the undeniable evils that exist to-day.

As I stated to the convention, there are two extreme points of view. On the one hand, there are those who would retain the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead law unamended. This, as I understand it, is the position of Senator BORAH. At the other extreme, there are those who would repeal the eighteenth amendment without substituting anything therefor. This, as I understand it, is the position of Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler.

I do not believe that the American people should be limited to the choice of either retaining the existing system or of returning to all of the evils of the liquor traffic. I do not believe that the American people should be limited in their choice to the speakeasy or the saloon.

American statesmanship should be equal to the task of developing a new system which will preserve us from the evils which existed under unlimited State control, and at the same time free us from the grievous difficulties which have arisen under an inflexible prohibitory provision embodied in the Federal Constitution. The plank adopted by the Republican National Convention lays down the broad principles upon which such a solution can be based.

In the first place, it provides correction for the two main weaknesses of the present system; that is, its inflexibility and its departure from one of the fundamental principles of American form of government, namely, the right of local initiative and determination carrying with it a very definite sense of local responsibility. In the second place, it would provide protection for those States electing to remain dry. And, third, it would retain in the Federal Government power adequate to prevent the return of the saloon and its attendant evils in those States whose citizens determine to permit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating beverages.

It is said that the plank is indefinite. Quite the contrary. Its important provisions are set out in clear and unambiguous language. What are they?

First. Submission by the Congress to the people through State conventions duly elected by the people of a new amendment modifying the eighteenth amendment.

Second. The proposed amendment to allow States to deal with the problem as their citizens may determine, subject to the specified powers reserved in the Federal Government.

Third. Reservation in the Federal Government of the power to protect those States where prohibition may exist and safeguard our citizens everywhere from the return of the saloon and attendant abuses.

The broad principles here laid down may be summarized in one sentence—returning to the States initiative, determination, and responsibility, and retention in the Federal Government of sufficient power to attain two specifically named objectives.

Some gentlemen apparently would have had us go farther and submit a proposed constitutional amendment and even a statute carrying out its provisions. But the national convention was adopting a party platform, or declaration of principles. The convention was neither a constitutional convention nor a legislative body. It was not charged with any such duty. It is just as unreasonable to demand that this proposal be written into the platform in the form of an amendment or bill as it would be to claim that when a Republican platform declares in favor of the correction of certain abuses in our banking practices, it should present the exact language of the statutes whereby those abuses are to be corrected.

When the time comes, formulating the new amendment may give rise to differences of opinion as to how best to apply these principles. But I am sure that the Congress can write a constitutional amendment which will restore determination and a sense of responsibility to the States and retain in the Congress power to enact legislation making available Federal authority for the protection of the dry States and preventing the return of the saloon.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, before I take my seat I want to say that I knew the position of the Postmaster General quite well, because I have talked with him very often on this subject. I have also talked with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] on the subject. It has been a matter which has been of considerable concern here in the Capital.

I spoke to the Senator from Idaho after his address, and suggested that he omit the name of the Postmaster General. I thought the rules of the Senate would permit that, as I had requested it, and what is printed in the RECORD is entirely satisfactory, so far as that goes. But this statement is still in the RECORD:

I will show in a few minutes that Mr. Brown was for repeal in the convention, by showing that the platform is a repeal platform.

Which would indicate that my statement to the Senator that the Postmaster General had stood against repeal was not impressive to the Senator.

The Postmaster General has made a statement, and I am going to read it. He says:

My attention has been called to a statement by Senator BORAH in the Senate to-day in effect that I favor a repeal of the eighteenth amendment and that I so stated in a conversation with him. Senator BORAH is mistaken in both particulars.

It is my practice not to discuss publicly views expressed or statements made in private conversations in which I participate, but since Senator BORAH is evidently willing to have discussed a conversation had by himself, Mr. E. A. Van Valkenburg, of Philadelphia, and myself in Washington a few weeks ago, and since Mr. Van Valkenburg makes no objection, I feel free to state just what occurred.

The purpose of the conference was to discuss the formula of a platform plank for the Republican Party favoring the resubmission of the problem of the liquor traffic. Senator BORAH stated that he was working on a plan for such resubmission, giving to the States the right to determine for themselves whether they would be wet or dry; but that he had not yet found a satisfactory method to make certain that the saloon would not return; that he hoped to complete his plan shortly and present it to the Senate before the Republican convention.

Both Mr. Van Valkenburg and I stated that we were in favor of a revision of the eighteenth amendment and that we believed that Congress could be trusted to frame the text of the proposed amendment. Neither of us favored a repeal of the eighteenth amendment, which would place the problem again precisely where it was in 1918.

At the Chicago convention, as a delegate from Ohio, I voted against the minority report of the committee on resolutions favoring a submission of repeal presented by Senator BINGHAM. I subscribe whole-heartedly to the submission of the formula suggested by the majority report which was adopted by the convention.

I have a statement, sent to me by Mr. Van Valkenburg, who was the third person in that conference. He states:

Postmaster General Brown correctly states what occurred at his meeting with Senator BORAH, at which I was present. Mr. Brown and myself were opposed to naked repeal of the eighteenth amendment and favored modification. Senator BORAH distinctly favored the submission of a plan for restoring the control of the liquor problem to the States if a method to that end could be devised which would protect the dry States and prevent the return of the saloon. He stated he was endeavoring to prepare such a plan around the central idea contained in the proposition theretofore advocated by the distinguished lawyer, William Guthrie, for the modification of the eighteenth amendment. There was no controversy over the proposition that some remedial measure should be submitted for ratification by the States under strictly constitutional procedure to correct the abuses that had grown up under the existing amendment.

I regret that Senator BORAH has made it necessary for me to publicly discuss what occurred at a private conversation.

I read these statements only because the name of the Postmaster General was injected as one standing for repeal. He has always argued to me that repeal would mean chaos unless it were followed by some remedial legislation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, with reference to the able Secretary of the Treasury, it is possible that I was misled as to his position by reason of my ineptitude in understanding the English language. In 1926 the Secretary of the Treasury, who was then in private life, and I had some correspondence, which was public, printed in the New York Times particularly, with reference to the eighteenth amendment and with reference to a referendum which was then being considered in the State of New York. I stated at the time that my view of that referendum was that it proposed a nullification of the eighteenth amendment. I think it may be said that that view has since come to be very generally accepted, that the referendum proposed was in effect a nullification of the eighteenth amendment.

In discussing this question, Mr. Mills went on to state something in regard to the eighteenth amendment itself. I will read a portion of his statement, leave it in the RECORD, and the public may judge how one might easily be misled by this language used by the present Secretary of the Treasury.

In the New York Times of July 26, 1926, page 4, Mr. Mills said that the eighteenth amendment was "an object of scorn and contempt" to millions of patriotic Americans. Naturally I assumed that one who had that view of an amendment would not feel like keeping it in the Constitution, and, unfortunately perhaps, I drew the wrong conclusion from the language used. But he went on to say:

The fundamental question, of course, is whether the eighteenth amendment is to remain a part of the Constitution. There is no room here for a compromise, and ultimately the question will be settled one way or the other by the submission of whichever side proves to be in the minority. But while this is the main—

That is whether it shall remain in the Constitution—

But while this is the main, it is by no means the only, and certainly not the immediate, question. The decision is bound to be long postponed. Even if the eighteenth amendment is repealed, it will take years to do so. No one denies our deplorable situation. What are we going to do about it? "Repeal and begin afresh," says one group, with strict logic on their side.

I assume that that was an approval of those who were insisting upon repeal, and I so construed it at the time.

But this is a matter of years, and in the meanwhile must we live with this festering sore on the body politic?

Whatever else the Secretary of the Treasury may have had in his mind in regard to the eighteenth amendment, his opinion of it was certainly not one of affection. A "festering sore" would be supposed to be something to be removed.

The eighteenth amendment as interpreted and enforced by the Volstead Act has two great antagonistic forces, I may say principles, to contend with, both of which are peculiarly American. The first is the right of the individual to freedom from Government interference with his private life as long as he does not infringe on the rights of others; the second is the principle of home rule, that is, the right of the people of our States and communities to regulate their own affairs in so far as they do not affect our life and interests as a Nation. The first conflict is inherent and unavoidable and in itself is formidable enough to threaten the success of the whole experiment without, in addition, running counter to one of the most deep-seated American political principles.

Mr. President, from that I drew the conclusion that Mr. Mills was opposed to the eighteenth amendment and, as he said, that those who were advocating repeal had "strict logic on their side." I leave that with no further comment. I had no doubt in my own mind as to what the position of Mr. Mills was.

Mr. President, with reference to the Postmaster General, it will be recalled that I did not undertake to state yesterday any conversation that took place between the Postmaster General and myself. When I suggested the proposition that I believed the Postmaster General was in favor of repeal, I did not state any conversation; and when the Senator from Ohio asked me if I wanted to make the statement I had just uttered, I replied that I did, and that I had had a conversation with the Postmaster General. I did not go forward and state the conversation. I was only stating my conclusion. I uttered not a word of conversation between Mr. Brown and myself.

It all turns upon what one considers a repeal. I know that since the adoption of the platform at Chicago there has come to be a finespun theory about repeal. I understand repeal to mean when you have destroyed the fundamental principle in the eighteenth amendment, to wit, the prohibition against the sale of intoxicating liquors. When a man says to me that he is in favor of permitting the States to have the right to sell, which Mr. Brown argued every moment we sat there——

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The Postmaster General was arguing simply for the right to submit the matter to the people and let them determine whether they wanted this or not.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Ohio called out this conversation, and I am willing to put my interpretation of the conversation in the RECORD, and let those believe it who wish and those disbelieve it who wish. I am going to state it as I remember.

Mr. FESS. The Senator is dealing with the conversation he had with Mr. Brown?

Mr. BORAH. I am.

Mr. FESS. I thought the Senator was speaking of Mr. Brown's position.

Mr. BORAH. No; I am speaking of the conversation.

Mr. FESS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not understand that.

Mr. BORAH. I said in that conversation that I had been for months undertaking to devise a plan by which to protect the States which wanted to be dry; and secondly, by which to prevent the return of the American saloon. That is precisely what I stated to Mr. Brown.

I said that I had made progress with reference to the question of protecting the States which wanted to be dry, but that I had reached the conclusion that once we legalized the sale of intoxicating liquors in the United States there was no possible way to prevent the return of the American saloon. That is practically word for word what I said. I made it clear that I could see no way to prevent its return.

Mr. Brown replied, "I think you are right. Once we legalize the sale of intoxicating liquors, I do not see how we are going to control the method of selling them." He said, "I expect to see the return of the saloon, and I would rather have it than the present condition of affairs."

Now, I ask whether or not Mr. Brown is in favor of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment? There could not be any sale unless it was repealed. We could not have the saloon unless we did repeal the eighteenth amendment. I drew the conclusion, therefore, unmistakably that he was in favor of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and setting up what he has in a crude way set up in the platform at Chicago.

As I said a moment ago, it turns on what is considered "repeal." Let me say, too, that I do not find any fault with what Mr. Van Valkenburg said. Substantially it is what took place, but he does not state all the facts. When Mr. Van Valkenburg came to my office the next morning he said, "Senator, Mr. Brown's scheme means the return of the American saloon, and I can not go along with that proposition."

So, Mr. President, there was no question about the view of Mr. Brown as I understood it. There was no question as to the conclusion which we had all reached, that if repeal took place or sale was permitted, in all probability the saloon would come back. It is not very material about what took place. It is perhaps unfortunate even that I said that I had had a conversation with Mr. Brown. It is the only one I ever had. Perhaps I did not understand his language, but I came away from there, and Mr. Van Valkenburg came away from there, with the idea that the sale was to be permitted throughout the United States and that that would inevitably return the saloon to American life.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 165) authorizing the President of the United States to present the distinguished-flying cross to Amelia Earhart Putnam, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 29) authorizing the printing and distribution of copies of the Federal laws relating to the veterans of various wars, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. STEVENSON, Mr. LAMBETH and Mr. SHOTT were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 46 to the said bill and concurred therein with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States, submitting nominations, were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 14, 15, 30, 56, and 82 to the bill (H. R. 7912) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, and concurred therein severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; also that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 77 to the bill.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 3847) to amend the act approved March 3, 1931, relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on public buildings, and it was signed by the Vice President.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE OF APPROPRIATIONS—HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES (S. DOC. NO. 120)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, without revision, a supplemental estimate of appropriation pertaining to the legislative establishment, House of Representatives, for the fiscal year 1933, in the sum of $25,000, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States, submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

LOANS TO STATES—SYSTEM OF HIGHWAYS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R 12445) to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by authorizing and expediting a public-works program and providing a method of financing such program.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER].

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before that is voted on, and if it is not too late, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not too late. The Senator may offer his amendment.

Mr. BORAH. On page 1, line 2, I move to strike out the words "and directed" and the words "for each," and insert in lieu of the latter words "in any," and after the word "districts" in line 3 to insert the words "where it may deem the same to be desirable," so that the paragraph would read:

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is further authorized to create in any of the 12 Federal land bank districts, where it may deem the same to be desirable, a regional agricultural credit corporation,—

And so forth. That removes the directory provision of the bill and leaves it to the judgment of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to create them wherever it deems necessary.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, in the temporary absence of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] I will accept the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be modified accordingly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I would like to have the attention of the Senator from Wyoming a moment. I ask his attention to the final sentence in the amendment which charges all of the expenses of the operation of the new instrumentalities to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It is not at all clear from the language whether the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has any authority over the expenditures other than the automatic privilege of paying whatever bills are submitted. I suggest to the Senator that it would be substantially strengthening to the situation if the final sentence were amended, on page 2, line 18, after the words "shall be," by inserting the words "supervised and," so that the final sentence would read:

All expenses incurred in connection with the operation of such corporations shall be supervised and paid by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under such rules and regulations as its board of directors may prescribe.

Mr. CAREY. I do not think there is any objection to the amendment. Corporations are set up by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and naturally it would have control over their expenditures.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I offer the amendment, and I understand it is agreeable to the Senator from Wyoming.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment to the amendment be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 18, after the word "be," insert the words "supervised and," so as to make the sentence read:

All expenses incurred in connection with the operation of such corporation shall be supervised and paid by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under such rules and regulations as its board of directors may prescribe.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, that is acceptable to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon modifies his amendment accordingly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it should be pointed out that the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], which has been accepted and incorporated in the committee amendment, works an important and very material change in the provision. As originally presented, 12 agricultural credit corporations, one for each of the Federal reserve districts, would have been set up, the provision in this respect being mandatory. With the amendment of the Senator from Idaho it is entirely discretionary with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation board as to whether any agricultural credit corporation shall be established for the purposes of the amendment, and clearly may result in sectional discrimination. The point is that one Federal reserve district in the agricultural regions may be provided with the relief contemplated by the amendment while at the same time, if the board so exercises its authority, the same relief or equivalent assistance may be denied to other Federal reserve districts. It is an important amendment and from a practical standpoint I doubt its value.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon as modified.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin offers the following amendment, which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. Insert as a new section the following:

The Comptroller General of the United States, who may act personally or through such persons as he may designate or employ, without regard to the civil service laws, shall be the comptroller of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, with authority to prescribe the accounting system and procedure and administer the same. Payment for such service shall be made out of the funds of the corporation, and salaries of any persons appointed for such purpose shall be fixed in accordance with the classification act of 1923, as amended.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the amendment speaks for itself. The Senate will appreciate that the corporation, in case the pending bill is passed, will have under its control, as I understand, assets of about $3,500,000,000 or more. There is no provision made for the auditing of the accounts of the corporation. There is no business in the United States that can be conducted in a proper way without some system of auditing. The Comptroller General is the auditor for the United States respecting all other undertakings in which the Government has a financial interest, including the administration of the several departments of government. I have drawn the amendment to make the salaries of the employees to be appointed come under the classification act.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does the Senator recall whether there was any provision made for auditing the funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. BLAINE. There is no such provision. I attempted to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill when it was before the Senate, but the amendment which I then proposed was much broader than this and made the Comptroller General the judge respecting the legal availability of corporate funds. I have omitted here that portion of the provision of the amendment which I offered to that bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. This is simply a provision for auditing?

Mr. BLAINE. That is all.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not see any objection to the amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. I see no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I move to strike section 8 from this bill, and for the following reason: I believe that all thoughtful persons have reached the conclusion that it is not wise nor just to create any more Federal officials. This section proposes to create a commission to be composed of 5 Members of the Senate, 5 Members of the House, and 9 other members. The nine members, neither from the Senate nor from the House, are to receive salaries of $3,600 each per year. Each is also to receive his traveling expenses, and in subdivision (c) of this section the commission is authorized to hold hearings, employ stenographers and clerks, appoint subcommissions, and the sum of $50,000 is proposed for printing, for stationery and messengers, and so forth.

While I do not wish to be labeled as penurious, as cheeseparing, or as penny-pinching, I do not believe that any Senator can give a valid reason why we should create a commission of 5 Senators and 5 Representatives and 9 additional members, with each of the 9 drawing $3,600 a year with traveling expenses to go about as they see fit, spending public money ab libitum, willy-nilly. I therefore move that the entire provision be stricken out. The provision is as follows:

SEC. 8. (a) A commission is hereby created to be known as the Industrial Commission, and to be composed as follows: 5 Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate; 5 Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker; and 9 other persons who shall fairly represent the various industries and employments of the United States, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

(b) It shall be the duty of the commission to investigate questions pertaining to agriculture, labor, manufacturing, and business, including domestic and foreign commerce, to report to Congress from time to time, and to recommend such legislation by the various States of the Union and the Congress as will harmonize conflicting interests and be equitable to the laborer, the employer, the producer, and the consumer, and which is calculated to revive trade and promote the general welfare. Upon the completion of its investigation the commission shall submit a final report to the Congress.

(c) The commission may hold hearings and, if necessary, it may appoint a subcommission or subcommissions of its own members to make investigations in any part of the United States; and it shall have authority to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths and affirmations, and to incur necessary expenses, including expenses for clerks, stenographers, messengers, rent for place of meeting, and printing and stationery, in an amount not to exceed $50,000 per annum for the purposes of this subdivision.

(d) The commission shall cease to exist upon the expiration of two years after the date of the enactment of this act. The salary of each member of the commission appointed by the President shall be at the rate of $3,600 per annum. Each member of the commission shall be allowed his actual traveling expenses.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I am in agreement with the Senator who makes the motion, but I was going to ask if the Senator will postpone his motion until the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], who is particularly interested in this provision, shall be present in the Chamber, because it was upon his suggestion that this particular provision was included in the bill?

Mr. ASHURST. Any request the able Senator in charge of the bill should make I would yield to gracefully.

Mr. WAGNER. I am going to vote with the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. That is an evidence of the Senator's statesmanship.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona withdraw his amendment?

Mr. ASHURST. I shall let the amendment be pending, to be brought up when the junior Senator from Oklahoma returns to the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, before I surrender the floor, while I do not wish to offer a motion now, I do wish, respectfully, of course, to ask some questions. I shall first ask a question of the Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. WAGNER], for whose learning as a lawyer the Senate has profound respect. It is a public calamity that he is not on the Senate Judiciary Committee, and I hope it may be so arranged that he may be placed upon the Judiciary Committee at an early date.

I inquire of the authors of the bill—and I am addressing myself particularly to the junior Senator from New York—if they are of opinion that under this bill the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is clearly granted the power and authority, in its discretion, to make loans to irrigation districts and to irrigation projects, duly authorized under the laws of any State or of the United States, or to purchase the bonds or other securities of such irrigation districts or irrigation projects organized under the laws of particular States or of the United States?

Mr. WAGNER. My view is that they are included within the provisions of the bill, because, as I understand, they are self-liquidating in character.

Mr. ASHURST. Now, Mr. President, if I may continue my rather unseemly procedure, I ask the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] for his opinion on this question, because it is now obvious that later in the life of this bill, if it shall become a law, it is wise to have no misunderstanding on this question. I hope the Senator from Montana will not be offended because I put this bald question to him. I come from a State where we ask questions whenever we desire information. I inquire of the senior Senator from Montana, for whose learning we all have great respect, Is he of the opinion that under this bill the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is clearly granted the power and authority, in its discretion, to make loans to irrigation districts and to irrigation projects, duly authorized and created under the laws of particular States or the law of the United States or to purchase the bonds or other securities of such irrigation districts and irrigation projects so organized?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I concur in that view expressed by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], to the effect that irrigation districts, being political subdivisions of the States, could secure loans under the provisions of the bill should it become a law and that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may bid for the securities of such districts.

The question propounded to me, however, includes irrigation companies as well as irrigation districts. Irrigation companies, of course, are private in character; they would fall under subdivision 2 of section 1, providing for loans to private corporations to aid in the construction of bridges, tunnels, viaducts, waterworks, and similar projects. That provision has been modified, however, by specifying canals and eliminating the words "similar projects." A private corporation accordingly engaged in the construction of a work of irrigation could borrow for the purpose of constructing canals. My opinion is that that would be the limit of its borrowing capacity.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the junior Senator from New York and the senior Senator from Montana, and desire to say that their view agrees with mine.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I wish shortly to offer a substitute for the pending bill. I do this with a great deal of reluctance, because I know that the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and his associates have tried to reconcile the conflicting viewpoints and to agree upon a bill which would probably pass the Congress of the United States and be signed by the President.

I, myself, would rather vote for a bill which provided for no loans to private corporations. I do not believe that the Government of the United States should go into the business of financing private concerns, even though their work may be the construction of quasi-public works. We have already gone pretty far in that direction; and if we do not watch out we shall have changed our whole form of government without realizing it, because certainly at this session of Congress, if I am any judge of events, we are going into Russia farther than Russia ever went into herself. The whole policy here is one of state communism, state socialism. We are financing every kind of a venture which can be conceived. Any three Members of the Senate can organize a bridge company and build a toll bridge across the Potomac and get money out of the Federal Treasury with which to do the work. I am for the public-works feature of this bill; I believe it is a fair thing; it is a proper function of government; but when we enter extraneous fields we are treading upon very dangerous soil.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Inasmuch as the Senator is going to offer a substitute for the entire measure, I want to offer an amendment perfecting the House text.

Mr. TYDINGS. If my substitute shall be voted down, the Senator can do that, but I will ask him to allow me to conclude my remarks, as I have to leave the city, and I am forced to offer my amendment now.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I was afraid I might not be permitted under the rules to offer it later. It will take but a moment to act upon it.

Mr. TYDINGS. I would prefer not to yield at the moment, much as I would like to accommodate the Senator from Texas.

Mr. President, another feature of this bill is that the money which we are going to spend is not going to be distributed evenly over the United States. There is unemployment and need for relief in every county in every State and in every city in the Union. I should like to see a system of roads built, grade crossings eliminated, bridges constructed, tunnels built where they may be needed, but, more than that, I should like to see this Federal relief program spread like the dew over every locality in America, and, if it shall not do that, it will leave large areas of our country with little or no relief at all.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Is the Senator under the impression that if some large project is constructed in the State of Maryland, then only the immediate community at the site of the construction is benefited by that particular project?

Mr. TYDINGS. Oh, no; but to answer the Senator's question more explicitly let me say, suppose for the sake of the illustration that a billion dollars were appropriated and suppose for the sake of the illustration that 75 per cent of it were spent in Maryland, I ask the Senator from New York what chance men in California or Montana or in North Dakota would have for getting any of that work?

Mr. WAGNER. That is purely an academic question, because that is not the situation here.

Mr. TYDINGS. What is the situation?

Mr. WAGNER. The projects are distributed all over the country. Where a large project in the city of Baltimore, for instance, is undertaken, first there would be men employed at the site of construction; then there would be given employment to men who work in the factories and in the mines, located in various sections of the country, producing the materials; then all those who are working buy clothes and food, which again puts some one else to work in perhaps other sections of the country. In other words, there is an interdependence, and it is a confined and extremely provincial and narrow view to say that merely those at the site of a particular project are to be benefited by any of these enterprises.

Mr. TYDINGS. There is a great deal of force in what the Senator from New York says, but to carry his logic to its ultimate conclusion he does not care whether any of this money shall be spent in New York or not; it makes no difference whether any of it is spent in the State of New York, because New York will reap the indirect benefits from it. My position is a little more selfish than that. I want to reap my share of the indirect benefits for the State of Maryland; I want to reap my share of the direct benefits for the State of Maryland; I want every other Senator to have the same opportunity, and I do not propose to vote for a measure which affords the unemployed of the State of Maryland less of an opportunity than have the employed in any other State in the Union.

I think if we build roads, for example, and we apportion the money to the States in accordance with the Federal highway act, roads will be built in every county in every State in the Union, and every section will get a portion of it. There is unemployment everywhere; no State has been left outside the effect of the depression; no county has failed to feel the effect of the depression. In 11 States of the Union the school-teachers have not been paid for three months or six months or a year, and in Chicago the police force is not being paid. Therefore I think that in our construction program we should keep in mind the direct absorption of as much of the unemployment as possible as the first measure of relief, and then the spreading of the wages in the stores of the State or the locality where the relief work occurs is the second phase of the relief program. Obviously, to spend all the relief money in one section would help the unemployed to some extent over the whole country, but more important is the fact that it would help primarily the unemployed in the section where the work is being done, and the indirect benefits would be apt to flow to the factories in the vicinity where the work was being executed.

What business has the Federal Government to lend money to a private concern—the A B C Bridge Co. or the D E F Road Co. or the K Y Z Tunnel Co.—whose money is it? It is the money of the taxpayers of this country, who themselves want credit, who themselves want an opportunity to find some one who will finance their business, their enterprises, and help solve their own immediate problems. I am opposed to reaching into the Federal Treasury to lend money to concerns which have no relation whatsoever to governmental functions or activities.

In the early days of the present session we did make some departure. It is a regret of mine that I voted for anything more than relief to the banks which are an arm of the Federal Government, and under the supervision of the Federal Government, more or less directly; but when we go out into the field of financing railroads, insurance companies, and what not, do not let us say we have a democracy any more; it is state socialism. I have no objection to state socialism if the country wants it, but let us go into it frankly and not by halting steps, and do not let us get on the floor of the Senate and condemn the Russian system and stay here day after day and perpetuate the Russian system in the Government of the United States, for that is exactly what we are doing.

Take a billion dollars' worth of roads: We will spend that much upon highways anyway in the next 10 or 12 years. We will spend this money on roads anyway. That is a normal governmental function for the Federal Government to execute. It will employ as many men as can be employed in any other way on public works. Every county in the State will get its just share. At $25,000 a mile—and remarkably good roads can be built for that amount of money—40,000 miles of improved highways can be built in the United States with a billion dollars. My own State would get something like six or seven hundred miles of road. The State of Georgia would get 900 miles of road. Those roads would reach over the entire State. They would cover the entire field of America. They would reach every section of the country, and their construction would relieve to some extent the depression everywhere.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WAGNER. Has any such road system been planned, so that all of this money can be put to work immediately in the construction of roads?

Mr. TYDINGS. Why, of course it has been planned. In every State in the Union the State road commissions have roads already planned, have programs which they have recommended for roads which have not yet been built, but which can be built provided the money is available at any time.

Mr. WAGNER. Has the Senator such information at hand to give the Senate?

Mr. TYDINGS. In what respect?

Mr. WAGNER. As to the planning of these particular roads.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I have consulted with the road authorities in my own State. One of them has been recently the president of the American Highway Engineers' Association. They have worked out plans in each of the States for building additional roads if, as, and when the money is available.

Where are the plans for the bridges, where are the plans for the tunnels that are going to be built under the Senator's own bill? May I ask him if his plans have been completed? May I ask him if his bridge plans have been executed? May I ask him if his companies in all cases have been formed.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland further yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course the question of private companies is only a very minor portion of this whole legislation, and yet the Senator seems to emphasize that particular phase of this bill. The primary object is to help States and municipalities and public corporations; and I may say to the Senator that in many instances throughout the country the plans are all ready. As a matter of fact, in some the work has begun, and these municipalities and States and other public corporations were compelled to abandon the work because they were unable to sell the securities. Under this bill the Federal Government is to extend its credit to these public corporations and municipalities and States so that they may complete these projects, and they can not secure this credit unless they establish the fact that the projects are self-liquidating.

Mr. TYDINGS. I want to say now to the Senator from New York, without any flattery at all on my part, that I should be inclined to follow him on almost any bill for relief that he would write, because I know that more than any other man in this or the other body of Congress he has devoted his time and his talents to setting up a bill for that purpose, and I believe that if he had his way many of the provisions against which I now complain would not be in this bill.

It is my purpose to try to show the relative merit of the Government sticking to governmental functions as against the Government going into private or quasi-public functions, as proposed in the bill now pending before the Senate.

First of all, there are many roads which are too narrow. There are through highways that should be widened. There are dangerous grade crossings which should be eliminated, the railroads to pay their respective proportion of such cost. There are bridges to be built across streams. There are tunnels which would be economically sound. But over and above all, in the State of Maryland or Montana or Minnesota or what not, the relief would spread like a carpet of dew over the entire country; every section would have equal, exact, and fair treatment, have the same proportion of the public money, and there would be no discrimination whatsoever. It would be in the nature of a permanent improvement.

I can not bring myself to vote willingly for something to which I am violently opposed as a matter of principle, although I may be forced to do so in this national emergency. It is to prevent being forced to vote for a relief measure which many of us believe is unsound that I humbly offer this substitute, in the hope that many others may feel as I myself feel.

We do not know where this depression is going. We can not say that it will be over this year or next year, regardless of which party may control the Government. If it is not over, the sooner we stop lending the public money to private concerns in America, the better it will be for us and for the taxpayers who ultimately must shoulder the bill.

We certainly have had a lesson in our loans to Europe; have we not? There is fourteen or more billions of dollars which doubtless will be lost—a great deal of it, at least—for all time. Shall we pour more good, hard tax money down the rat hole, or shall we stop now, and about face, and deal with national subjects only, and not run the business of every Tom, Dick, and Harry in this country?

I want to point out that the recent tax bill which passed this body, besides all the other national taxes which the people are called upon to pay, levied an additional burden of $1,200,000,000 annually upon the backs of people who are already in the slough of despond. How much is that? That is the equivalent of $10 on every man, woman, and child in this country. It is $40 of new taxation upon every family, rich or poor, employed or unemployed, in America. In the face of that fact, have we gone so mad as to take this money from such sources and lend it to private concerns, and then, in the same breath, turn from these corridors the ex-service man, and say, "We could not find the money to pay you, although we recognized the obligation by previous legislation; you must wait until 1945; but we have the money to give to private enterprise to engage in more or less doubtful projects, and perhaps never get a dollar of it, or only a part of it, back again"?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland further yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator favor that portion of the bill which permits the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans—

> To States, municipalities, and political subdivisions of States, public agencies of States, of municipalities, and of political subdivisions of States, public or quasi-public corporations, and public or quasi-public municipal instrumentalities of one or more States to aid in financing projects authorized under State or municipal law and which are self-liquidating in character?

Mr. TYDINGS. As a matter of principle, I emphatically do not. The business of the Federal Government is not to finance either State, county, municipal, or any other kind of governments except our National Government.

I voted for the appropriation of $300,000,000 to feed the hungry and the starving as I would vote to take care of the victims of any catastrophe. That is our business—where a locality is impoverished, to show the generous hand of charity to help keep people from perishing. But to go farther than that, and to put the Federal finances back of the tax finances of Harford County, Md., or Dutchess County, N. Y., or the city of Salt Lake, Utah, is not our business; and the sooner we stop that sort of the thing, the sounder will be our finances in the years to come.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland further yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that this is not a question of taxation within the municipalities, because we are limiting this, as I tried to emphasize two or three times, to projects which are self-liquidating in character; and therefore the construction of these projects does not cost the taxpayer a cent.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me ask my good friend from New York, Who is to know whether or not these things are self-liquidating?

Suppose the Senator from Kansas and I form the A B C Bridge Co. to build a bridge across the Potomac River at Mount Vernon, Va., upon the theory that instead of coming to Washington people will drive directly down the southern Maryland boulevard and cross the river there. We borrow the money from the Federal Treasury. It is loaned to the corporation. The bridge is put up. The public do not use it as we anticipated they would. The tolls will not pay the interest on the bonds. May I ask the Senator from New York who repays the Federal Government under that contingency?

Mr. WAGNER. If the projects are not self-liquidating?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. The particular agency which borrows the money.

Mr. TYDINGS. That would be the State of Maryland, would it not?

Mr. WAGNER. That might be said about any project that is undertaken. It is necessary in some way to predict; but experience is sufficient upon which to make a very accurate calculation as to the self-liquidating character of a project.

Now, let me ask the Senator one other question, and then I will not interrupt him again.

Mr. TYDINGS. All right; I am glad to yield.

Mr. WAGNER. The municipalities and in many instances the States have had to abandon these projects and throw these large numbers of men out of employment, because during this terrific depression they were unable to sell their bonds and secure the necessary credit. Therefore all of these municipalities and States have appealed to the Federal Government to extend credit, because the Federal Government's credit is still sound, so that they may continue these projects, promising to repay the amounts of the credits by the projects themselves, so that they may put these men back to work and take them out of the bread lines, and to some extent, at least, save the tragedy of misery and hunger. Shall the Federal Government under those circumstances turn its back, as the Senator asserts, upon the appeals that have come from these municipalities to keep people employed and have them work instead of giving them charity?

Mr. TYDINGS. Has the Senator finished?

Mr. WAGNER. That is all there is to the question.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator can not put words in my mouth. He knows that I never contended for a moment that these appeals should go unheeded. Am I not myself standing here asking that the Federal Government expend a billion dollars in building bridges and roads and tunnels? Am I not myself advocating a means to take up this slack? But I am not advocating a means by which private concerns can get the taxpayers' money for their own good, not for the good of the entire people.

Ever since there has been a Congress we have appropriated money from time to time to build Federal highways or to improve them. In fact, the Constitution gives us the power, among other powers, to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, and again to establish a system of highways and post roads. This is a normal, real, actual, traditional governmental function. When did the Federal Government ever lend money to the Senator from Georgia, for example, to build a bridge across the Suwanee River? And if Senators formed a company for that purpose, and the bridge did not pay, the Government would have no redress to get its money back.

I am not going to stand here and vote that portion of the Federal money which comes into the Treasury from the people of Maryland—who find it hard to pay these taxes—and turn it over to a lot of private contractors to build their own projects. I predict that if this bill goes through there will be some of the biggest scandals in connection with it that have rocked this Nation, because we are in a presidential year, and we all know enough about human nature to know that the desire to help those who are right with the party, both Democrats and Republicans, is a strong impulse in the politician's breast. We will find money not being loaned always upon merit, but we will find it being loaned upon political expediency, and a great deal of it will be gone for all time.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland further yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. The impression the Senator apparently is trying to create is that this aid to private corporations is the major part of this bill, and I do not consider it so at all. Is that the only thing the Senator objects to in the bill?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; that is the main thing I object to in the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Because, so far as I am concerned, that can be stricken out in an instant. I do not care anything about it.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will do that——

Mr. WAGNER. Then the Senator will have another objection, I know.

Mr. TYDINGS. No. I will say this to the Senator, that if the Senator will strike out all provision for loans to private concerns, I will vote for his bill, even though I do not like it, for the simple reason that it would not then violate any real principle of national government, in its last analysis. I do not like its philosophy, but I want to vote to alleviate the unemployment in this country. If the Senator keeps that provision in the bill, I am going to find it extremely difficult to vote for relief, when that relief is coupled with loans to private bridge companies, private tunnel companies, and other individual concerns. Whose money is to be loaned? The money of the taxpayers of this country, who can not shoulder any more burden.

I am not criticizing the Senator from New York. I know he put some of these provisions in the bill not because he thought they were wise but because he was attempting to frame a bill which could be passed at this session of Congress.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Did the Senator vote for the original Reconstruction Finance Corporation act?

Mr. TYDINGS. I did.

Mr. WAGNER. Did that not permit extension of credit to railroads?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. And to banks and insurance companies?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. Then the Senator should not talk about changing principles.

Mr. TYDINGS. I hope the Senator will give me the right every criminal has, the right of reform. I know this, that simply because I have done a bad thing once, in a moment of mistaken judgment, is no reason why I should do it forever. I admit my fault. I voted for it, but not with any pleasure, and with great reluctance, and had I that vote to cast over again, outside of loans to the national banks, not a dollar of that money would have been appropriated.

Nor, Mr. President, could I have anticipated the way the money was to be loaned. Had I been able to do so, it would not have had my support. All I can see that we have done is that we have not helped the railroads, we have simply become the creditor in place of Morgan & Co., or some other banking group, and it was never my thought in the world that that policy was to be pursued, at the time that act was passed.

I am sorry I voted for it. Open confession is good for the soul. I would not do it again, and I do not intend to do it again, no matter how it is dressed up or disguised. We have followed the "great engineer" enough in these unique experiments, and I have followed him the last step I intend to go in that direction.

Does that answer the question of the Senator from New York?

Mr. WAGNER. I was going to say to the Senator that, so far as I have been able to learn, he will follow the gentleman whom he designates the "great engineer," if he votes against this bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not think the "great engineer" is going to veto the bill for the reasons I am uttering. As I read his interviews, the very things against which I am complaining are the very things he wants inserted in the bill. He wants more of this "pork-barrel" finance. You take a $10,000 bunch of Treasury notes under the President's "pork barrel" finance plan.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator approve subdivision 9, on page 108, reading as follows?—

> The remainder of such sum of $500,000,000 shall be available for expenditure upon permanent improvement projects, to be selected by the President, for which appropriations have heretofore been made or shall be hereafter made for expenditures during the fiscal year 1932 or 1933.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, I do not. What business has the President in selecting the projects? I know enough about the President—and this is no reflection upon him—to know that at least he has some human qualities; and being a candidate for reelection, it would be remarkable if, even without his knowledge, perhaps, political expediency did not work its way into the selection of those particular projects.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Apparently both the Senator who is addressing the Senate and the Senator who has just asked a question have an absolute misapprehension as to what the section referred to means.

Mr. McKELLAR. Evidently I have.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sure the Senator has, and I am sure the Senator does not object to being corrected.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not at all.

Mr. WAGNER. This simply gives the President the power to determine the methods by which the public projects already voted for by the Senator himself in the appropriation bills shall be financed, whether they shall be paid for out of current revenue, or whether they shall be paid for out of money secured by the issuance of bonds; but it does not give the President any power to determine what particular projects he shall undertake. He simply has the power to determine, after a project has been undertaken, according to the mandate of the appropriation bill, how the money shall be raised to pay for the project.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I would like to yield to the Senator——

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator from Maryland now understand?

Mr. TYDINGS. I think that that is not a major point. The Senator asked me if I agreed with it, and I said no.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator had a misapprehension as to the section.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I did not, because I have a part of it in my own bill.

Mr. President, let us take the State of New York, for example. I do not know what its proportion would be of the billion dollars. How much would it be, may I ask the junior Senator from New York, to be spread equally among the States in accordance with the Federal highway act?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not know. But will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I hope the Senator will believe me in this, that I have not looked upon this problem as a problem of New York. I have looked upon it as a national problem, as we are experiencing a national calamity, and I hope no Senator in this body will look upon it merely as to how it may aid his particular community. We are dealing with the whole Nation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I had no intention at all of reflecting upon the Senator. I was simply picking out his State as an illustration of how the money would go under my amendment.

I would like to say to the Senator from New York again; and I say it without flattery, and with absolute sincerity, that I think he has worked harder on this problem than perhaps all the rest of us put together, and it is with genuine reluctance that I am forced to stand here and oppose any of a program upon which he has spent so many hours. But I believe that the road appropriation is the fairer means of dealing with this subject.

Let us take the State of New York. We will assume we have a billion dollars. I imagine that the State of New York would certainly be entitled to about 4 per cent of that amount. It is a large State in population, and a large State in area.

Mr. WAGNER. And pays 28 per cent of the taxes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; and pays 28 per cent of the taxes, so that of any money that we appropriate New York is going to pay 28 cents out of every dollar; but, of course, we will pay it to New York before New York will pay it to the Federal Treasury.

Mr. WAGNER. Another evidence of the interdependence of the States.

Mr. TYDINGS. That would be a considerable sum of money, which would be turned over to the Highway Department in New York State.

New York City could get a certain amount of that money for roads and bridges and tunnels. It could build highways throughout New York, bridges over the Hudson, many improvements which have waited for sums of money. And may I say to the Senator from New York that in the next 10 years we will appropriate money anyway for this very purpose? I am only proposing to move up what we are going to do in the next 10 or 15 years while the army of unemployed needs this assistance.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Is the Senator now explaining the distribution of his emergency construction fund?

Mr. TYDINGS. Roughly; yes.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I wish the Senator would state the amount of money that would accumulate in this fund, and how he proposes to distribute it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the first proposition in my amendment provides for a billion dollars for roads, bridges, and tunnels, to be distributed to the States of the Union in accordance with the Federal highway act.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. In other words, the Federal Government is to distribute to the various States a billion dollars, each State receiving the proportion which it would receive under the terms of the Federal highway act?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct. That takes up the whole billion dollars.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Then the State can spend that money as it sees fit?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is right.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Is the State limited to highways?

Mr. TYDINGS. To highways, bridges, and roads, approved by the Federal Highway Commission, the same situation we now have for the expenditure of money upon highways.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Then all the Senator proposes is to enlarge greatly the annual appropriation for 50-50 highway construction in various States?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is stating it accurately.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I do not understand that the States are expected to match the money they receive from the Federal Government, under the amendment?

Mr. TYDINGS. The States are not expected to match it. It takes what the Senator from New York and his conferees already have put into the bill for highway purposes—I think it is $120,000,000—and enlarges that fund to a billion dollars.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Are the States expected ever to pay back the money?

Mr. TYDINGS. The States are not expected to pay it back, but I would have no objection to a reasonable amendment, if Senators want to make it a loan, although I am personally opposed to that. I believe we want to donate that money, give it to the States for highway purposes, because there are some States where it is impossible to collect enough taxes to pay the school-teachers. Take the State of Illinois, the city of Chicago, for instance; take the State of Mississippi, the State of Oklahoma, the State of Tennessee, or the State of South Carolina.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, from my observation of communities which are having difficulty in raising money, it is due to a financial collapse of the credit of the communities, caused either by the taxpayers failing to pay their taxes, or by the administration of the city or local government being of such an extravagant character that the banking institutions will not give them credit. Is that the Senator's observation?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is right.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That is a difficulty with the pending bill that troubles me, but it is only a slight difficulty. I can not understand how there is going to be any benefit to States or municipalities from getting money from the Federal Treasury to undertake public works, when it is impossible for them to foresee a time when they can pay for the public works because of the necessary curtailment of expenditures they must all undergo at the present time. So I think that, laudable as the purposes of this bill are, we will be disappointed in the results that will come.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I say to those who may care to listen, let us translate this sum of money among the unemployed, and see what it means. Roughly, there are 10,000,000 unemployed, and there is to be a billion dollars. If my calculation is not faulty, that would be $100 for every unemployed person. If every unemployed person in the United States could be put to work, there would be a hundred dollars for each one of them. Obviously, many of them will not be absorbed, but I do say this without fear of successful contradiction, that this program would reach more of the unemployed in every section of the country, and be more evenly distributed, than any other program which has been offered in this body.

What profiteth the State of New York if Massachusetts or Maryland is taken care of, and it gets only 25 per cent of what would be its proration of the appropriations under the bill? There can be no question but that the money will be spread over the entire country. If half the number estimated are unemployed, every unemployed person would have a $200 pay roll out of this sum. I do not say the plan would be a cure, but I do say that in many sections of the country the community funds will approach what would be spent upon roads in those same communities under this bill. In other words, public charity, for which the community will not get back a thing, will be used to take care of the unemployed, where, under this bill, there would be a road to show for it after the money had been exhausted.

Mr. President, I am going to outline briefly the amendment, but before I do that may I say that in addition to the $1,000,000,000 there are additional appropriations to the Treasury Department of $33,000,000; to the Veterans' Bureau, $20,000,000; to the Inland Waterways Corporation, $815,000; to the office of Public Buildings and Parks, $1,250,000; to the State Department, $1,453,000; to the Navy Department, $25,000,000; to the municipal government of the District of Columbia, $3,535,400, making a total of roughly $1,400,000,000.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, how did the Senator determine upon the particular amounts for the particular purposes?

Mr. TYDINGS. I took the report of the Stabilization Board dealing with projects which had already passed Congress, and from those projects tried to select those which in my judgment were really needed and which would furnish employment equally and which would be a rightful and fair expenditure of Government money at this time.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Are those included in the bill under consideration?

Mr. TYDINGS. Some of them are. In addition to that I provide $10,000,000 for reforestation. That will mean the creation of new wealth by the expenditure of the $10,000,000. We can plant different kinds of trees upon the watersheds of the country and in time reap a great deal of national wealth from that investment.

In addition to that I had the rather poetic inclusion of $5,000,000 to plant trees along the improved highways throughout the Nation. That offers fine work. It can be spread over a vast area, because we can not or should not plant trees closer than 50 or 60 feet apart. In my judgment this would not only be a sound way to spend the money, but would add greatly to the beauty of the country while serving the needy and destitute with employment. In addition to those I have read there is $300,000,000 for river and harbor improvements and flood-control projects. All that I have read total $1,400,000,000 plus.

How are we going to take care of it? First of all, we create a bond issue of $1,500,000,000. We create that issue upon the serial annuity plan. That means that it is to be paid back in 10 equal installments of $150,000,000 a year every year for 10 years plus the interest on the outstanding bonds. The maximum amount in any year necessary as an average to retire the principal and interest would be $200,000,000. We could take care of that during the next 10 years without a great deal of difficulty. So much for that. It is paid off one-tenth each year for 10 years.

Would any Senator like any further information on that part of the subject before I leave it? The bond issue is created and paid off in 10 equal annual installments.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Is the bond issue self-liquidating?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; it is not self-liquidating. I do not want to inject a foreign matter into the debate. I would like very much to insert a provision to pay for it with revenue derived from a tax on beer; but I know there are many Senators who would not subscribe to that plan. I have made that fight three times; but I say here and now that if one Senator who voted against the revenue tax on beer before will rise in his place and tell me he will vote for it as a means of liquidating these bonds and for the relief of unemployment, I will make the fight all over again; but unless some Senator has changed his mind I can see no good in wasting the time of the Senate in making that contest all over again.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Let me remind the Senator of the change of sentiment in the House.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes. I know it is silly, but let me say in passing that there is not the slightest doubt in my mind that at the next session of Congress we will tax beer. The Republican platform, just adopted by a great political party, comes out practically for more than beer, and I ought to have the support of every Senator who sits on the other side of the aisle to tax beer now and put these people to work rather than to have millions upon millions of dollars wasted in community funds, doles, charity, for which the American Government, the States, and the cities will not have a single thing to show. By getting that tax now we could build any number of useful things in the United States and make the waste of these community funds unnecessary.

But politics being what it is, I despair, notwithstanding the Republican Party, as will the Democratic Party, has gone on record in opposition to present-day prohibition, of getting a single, solitary vote. The bootlegging element will have six or eight months more to have the only untaxed business in America. While three-quarters of a million farms have been sold under mortgage foreclosure and for delinquent taxes, while 5,000 banks have failed, while 10,000,000 people are unemployed, and State and city governments are breaking down, school-teachers and policemen and firemen are not paid, every other business in America is taxed, and now we have a new tax bill of $40 per family in addition to the other Federal taxes, and yet here we sit unwilling to meet this great issue now and run the chance of lighting the fires of revolution when the cold days of next winter fall upon us.

But I do not want to go into that question again. I would be glad to offer that amendment. In fact, it was incorporated in the amendment which I have had printed, but I have stricken it out. If I knew there was just one Senator more than the 26 who voted for it before who at this time would lend it his aid or support, I would offer it again. Not knowing any such Senator, not seeing any Senator rise in response to my inquiry, I presume that fight would be futile. If I could get the amendment adopted, the money to liquidate the bond issue would all be provided and there would be no unprovided-for additional obligation upon the Federal Treasury.

Mr. President, it is also provided, as in the amendment which was adopted to-day offered by myself earlier in the session, that in the employment of labor in connection with any projects provided for under my proposed substitute, preference shall be given to the ex-service men or their dependents.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COUZENS in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. In the amendment as it stands, has the Senator left out his beer tax?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. BROOKHART. I think probably he has gained one vote by so doing.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am glad to hear that. If the Senator had changed on another matter before the last primary, I think he would have gained a lot more votes, too. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROOKHART. Upon that proposition I had one man running against me, who talked just like the Senator from Maryland. He got 11,000 votes out of a total of 400,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. When the Senator runs again, he will find that all of his opponents will be talking like the Senator from Maryland.

Unless there is some question to be asked I shall not take the time of the Senate further in discussion of the amendment. The substitute provides for roads instead of loans to small private or semiprivate corporations. I think we have gone pretty far in the way of State communism or State socialism, if we want to call it that. I hope no Senator who advocates loans to private concerns hereafter will rise in this body and denounce Russia, because it looks to me like Russia is coming out of that situation; that we are going into it double time, while she walks slowly out. Our whole system of government is changing right before our eyes. We are making new history, taking Government money and throwing it away to private concerns everywhere. The Government has gone into the business of doing everything. The Government is no more a governing concern. It is a gigantic bank where everybody who can tie up some sort of quasi-public undertaking can come and tap the till and get money for his enterprise under the benediction of the Federal Government.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator has stricken out part of his amendment as printed?

Mr. TYDINGS. I struck out section 2 and section 3.

Mr. BLACK. May I ask the Senator if the bill as it is written contemplates the expenditure of any sum for the building of highways, bridges, and tunnels?

Mr. TYDINGS. No.

Mr. BLACK. I notice an appropriation here to the Treasury Department, for instance.

Mr. TYDINGS. There is $1,000,000,000 for roads, $300,000,000 for flood control and rivers and harbors, and about $100,000,000 to a condensed selected number of buildings.

Mr. BLACK. May I ask the Senator what method of selection of building sites is to be adopted under the measure?

Mr. TYDINGS. Under what appropriation?

Mr. BLACK. For instance, under the Treasury Department.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Treasury Department plan was taken in full. There are customhouses and things like that which have already been provided for.

Mr. BLACK. Then, as I understand it, the sites for all the public buildings for which provision will be made under the Senator's amendment have already been selected, and it would not be left to the administration to determine the location?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is right.

Mr. BLACK. So that the entire $1,500,000,000 would be used, $1,000,000,000 for highways and the remainder for public buildings?

Mr. TYDINGS. There would be $300,000,000 of the remainder for flood control and river and harbor projects, and a little short of $200,000,000 for a selected group of buildings already authorized and which are to be built shortly.

Mr. BLACK. I shall vote for the Senator's substitute.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I offer this now as a substitute for the Wagner bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has not been read to the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yesterday I had it printed in the RECORD, and I shall be glad to have it read now. It is not long.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, before the substitute is offered, the bill pending is subject to perfection, and an amendment to the bill is in order before the question of a substitute can be placed before the Senate. I have an amendment to offer to the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand it, after committee amendments are adopted, an amendment in the nature of a substitute is in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think the substitute is in order yet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment is a substitute for the House text.

Mr. TYDINGS. I offer my amendment as a substitute for the committee amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. But the committee amendment can be perfected before the substitute is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Florida is in order.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then my amendment is not in order at the present time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order, but other amendments may be made perfecting the text of the committee amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then my amendment will be pending when general amendments, so called, are disposed of?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, this morning I offered an amendment, which I discussed, and I shall not discuss it further at this time. I withdrew it for the purpose of changing the verbiage to some extent, but especially to make it applicable to another part of the bill. I offer the amendment now. I do not care to discuss it.

Mr. KING. Let the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 103, after line 19, insert the following:

(b) The first sentence of the second paragraph of section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following:

"Provided, That the corporation may make loans under this section to any building and loan association upon its unsecured evidence of indebtedness in States where there is no statutory or implied authority for such association to pledge or assign the notes or mortgages of its borrowing members as security, but in such cases no loan shall be made to any such building and loan association the amount of whose liabilities (not including liabilities on account of loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation) exceed 25 per cent of its assets at the date application for such loan is made."

On page 103, line 14, after the section number insert "(a)."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. This amendment authorizes loans to be made to building and loan associations without any restriction whatever as to the purpose for which the money borrowed shall be applied. A building and loan association could utilize the money which it borrows from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of taking up outstanding obligations of one kind or another, but it would give rise to no new construction at all. That is not at all in keeping with the purpose of this bill, and I therefore think the amendment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I think the position taken by the Senator from Montana is correct, that if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act is to be amended so as to provide for this kind of loans, it should be done in a separate measure such as the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] first introduced. It should be done by a bill to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act so as to permit such loans.

However, in addition to that, I want to point out that in this amendment there is no safeguard against a building and loan association contracting any kind of debt after it has secured a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. In other words, the Senator from Florida by the amendment attempts to provide that no loans shall be made to such an association if its debts exceed 25 per cent of its assets, and yet after the loan shall be made its debts may exceed 75 per cent of its assets, and therefore the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would have no security at all.

So, Mr. President, in view of what the Senator from Montana has stated, and in view of the form of the amendment, I think it is the most hazardous and unjustifiable amendment which has been proposed to the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the Chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I only want to say a few words.

This amendment contains the same restrictions as to the purposes to which the money may be applied as are contained in the original act which provides for loans to building and loan associations. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, however, found that in certain States building and loan associations are not entitled to borrow money because they can not pledge their assets. The amendment would allow such building and loan associations to borrow to the extent therein provided, under the same restrictions as to the use of the money and the application of the loans as are contained in the original act. I am not going to take the time of the Senate to discuss the question any further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the House text. It proposes to insert a project in the rivers and harbors section which would have been inserted in the other House but for the fact that the report of the Government engineers did not reach that body before the bill was passed there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 66, after line 16, it is proposed to insert:

Port Aransas, Tex.: Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 35, Seventy-second Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COUZENS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. It is intended as an effort to define what a "self-liquidating corporation" is, and I request the attention of the Senator from California to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 101, line 3, after the word "character," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That liquidation shall take place within a period of 30 years. It shall be the duty of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to see that fees, tolls, or other charges are adequate to pay all operating charges, interest, and principal, within said period.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, the definition contained in the amendment which I have just offered is the best definition of a "self-liquidating corporation" that I have been able hurriedly to prepare. There is not a word in the bill anywhere defining what the "self-liquidating corporation" is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I understand the purport of the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan to be that whatever bonds or other securities are taken for such loans must mature within 30 years?

Mr. COUZENS. That is correct; that is the purport of the proposed amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Michigan is mistaken in saying that there is no description, no definition of a "self-liquidating corporation" in the bill. As I read it, there is a perfect description of a self-liquidating activity. I turn to page 101, line 8, and read as follows:

For the purposes of this subdivision a project shall be deemed to be self-liquidating if such project will be made self-supporting and financially solvent, and if the construction cost thereof will be returned within a reasonable period by means of tolls, fees, rents, or other charges.

In what fashion does the definition proposed by the Senator from Michigan improve the definition in the bill?

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, it specifies the number of years in which the project is to be liquidated, and it places responsibility upon some one to see that it is liquidated within that period of time and that the tolls or other charges are fixed on that basis.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is a very different proposition from what was suggested. The suggestion of the Senator from Michigan was that he was presenting a definition of a self-liquidating project and that there was no such definition in the bill.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON. If the Senator will pardon me for a moment, there is a definition in the bill which is in itself perfect. Whether one agrees with it or not is a different proposition.

Now, what the Senator from Michigan seeks to do is to put in the bill, in addition to the definition, not a definition at all but a qualification that some one in authority shall determine that the tolls, rental charges, and the like, shall do the job as described in the bill. Personally, I have no particular objection to that; but I do think that it is erroneous to fix a specific time limit. That will be determined within the discretion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and I would not like to have a hard and fast rule in regard to that specific point. I have only heard the amendment read, and I may do the Senator an injustice by trusting to my fallible memory; but when the Senator provides in the amendment that some one shall determine the question of whether the charges, tolls, and the like, will perform within a reasonable time the function of paying the entire amortization cost, that seems to me to be also provided by the bill in question, in the paragraph which I read a moment ago, namely:

For the purposes of this subdivision a project shall be deemed to be self-liquidating if such project will be made self-supporting and financially solvent, and if the construction cost thereof will be returned within a reasonable period by means of tolls, fees, rents, or other charges.

I ask the Senator from Michigan if he will do me the kindness to read his amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. I wish to say to the Senator from California that I stand corrected in the statement I made that this was a definition of a self-liquidating corporation.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is of no significance.

Mr. COUZENS. I should have said that it was a qualifying or clarifying provision. The amendment provides substantially what the bill provides, only the amendment sets up an agency to see to it that the definition is carried out and that the period in which it is carried out shall be limited to 30 years.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, let us see. On page 101, line 3——

Mr. COUZENS. After the word "character."

Mr. JOHNSON. After the word "character," which is prior to the definition that is contained in the bill, the amendment proposes to insert the words:

Provided, That liquidation shall take place within a period of 30 years. It shall be the duty of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to see that fees, tolls, or other charges are adequate to pay all operating charges, interest, and principal within said period.

It will be realized that the bill already contains a provision reading:

And if the construction cost thereof will be returned within a reasonable period by means of tolls, fees, rents, or other charges.

Strip the amendment of the Senator from Michigan of what is already definitely provided, and there is just one thing in it, and that is that the liquidation shall take place within a period of 30 years.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from California. The only modification which the Senator from Michigan proposes is to substitute for the words "within a reasonable period" the words "30 years." In other words, instead of leaving to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the determination of what is a reasonable time within which the liquidation shall take place the Senator from Michigan proposes to fix such reasonable time at 30 years. It will be in a way a suggestion to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that they may very well spread this period over 30 years, where otherwise they might demand that liquidation take place in a less time.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, amplifying what has been said by the Senator from New York, it might well be that a certain kind of self-liquidating corporation or activity could be paid out in 10, 15, or 20 years, as the case might be. It might well be that some other kind of self-liquidating corporation could not be paid out in 20, 25, 30, or 35 years, as the case might be. So, I think that the authors of this bill very wisely left the discretion with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of determining within a reasonable period whether or not by means of tolls, fees, rents, or other charges the construction loan thereon will be returned.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. KING. If the Senator from New York is correct, the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan relates only to the duration of time within which the debt must be paid. That could be met by adding after the word "period," the words "not exceeding 10 years"; but as I remember the amendment as it was read by the Senator the obligation rests upon the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to see to it that the tolls or other sources of income of a project which has received financial aid from the Government shall be paid at stated periods; that is, they shall exercise a supervisory care during the period of the life of the loan.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I say to my friend from Utah that the bill does all in that regard, omitting the term of years, that the amendment of the Senator from Michigan seeks to do because the bill provides, I repeat——

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I should like to correct the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment in the form in which I submitted it, and to offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has that right.

Mr. COUZENS. On page 101, line 12, I propose an amendment so as to make the provision read:

Returned within a period of not more than 30 years by means of tolls, fees, rents, and other charges.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now let me state first to the Senator from Montana what that does. All that it does is to substitute for "within a reasonable period" the term of 30 years.

Mr. COUZENS. Not more.

Mr. JOHNSON. Not more than 30 years. That is all it does. So the question reverts now to whether or not the language in the bill, proposed by its authors, of "within a reasonable period" should be stricken out and in lieu thereof should be inserted "not more than 30 years." I submit that with a measure of this sort, "within a reasonable period," leaving the discretion to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, is preferable to fixing a definite number of years.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, without intending to signify my approval of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan, I suggest to him that the end he seeks to accomplish would be subserved perfectly by just inserting after the word "period" the words "not exceeding 30 years."

Mr. COUZENS. That is my new amendment. I withdrew my old amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes. Under this you would strike out nothing whatever. You would just insert, after the word "period," the words "not exceeding 30 years," so that it will read:

Returned within a reasonable period, not exceeding 30 years.

Mr. COUZENS. I accept that. That is as I intended.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may I suggest that if that is done we may do an injustice somewhere, we do not know where. We have not sufficient information. It may very well be that a project which will be self-liquidating in time may require more than 30 years to liquidate the entire indebtedness. I mean, I think it unwise to state an arbitrary period if we are going to entrust a body with discretionary power in this whole matter.

May I ask the Senator upon what particular experience he bases the fixation of 30 years as the maximum period for the liquidation of any of these projects?

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, when I was a member of the Committee on Commerce we had a great deal of difficulty with bridge bills. Private bridges were being built to connect up Federal highways; and it was decided that these bridges should not be permitted to continue in perpetuity collecting fees from the public, without a terminating period. So the franchises to build these bridges were granted with the idea that they would be liquidated within a certain period and then returned to the public. Numerous amendments were put in bridge bills to that effect; and it was that experience that led me to the conclusion that we ought to have some period of termination for these bridges and other public activities which the Government is going to finance.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, if the Senator is desirous of fixing a limit, I have no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I decidedly object to fixing an arbitrary limit of 30 years. I do that without a complete knowledge of the limitation that may be put upon bond issues that already have been voted. My recollection is that they are for a longer period, with regular amortization and the like; and I can see no reason for limiting the discretion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

I can see the possibilities only of injustice, and perhaps peril, from a limitation in terms of this sort. I do not see that anything will be accomplished when the responsibility is designed by this measure to be put with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and then that responsibility we temper or we limit or we circumscribe with a limitation of 30 years. For that reason I think that it ought not to be adopted, but that the language is better as employed in the bill.

Here is an example of what we are doing in this bill, too, with due deference to my friend here, who is very much interested in the bill, as I am, and who is anxious to see a relief bill passed, I assume, just exactly as I am. Here is what we do:

Out of the blue comes an amendment. Until now we have not had the opportunity to investigate it, study it, or determine whether or not it will do an injustice anywhere. Suddenly it comes upon this floor. No reason is given except the general reason, which I concede to be good, that the limitation on bridges under certain circumstances might be made, and the like; and we are required now to vote upon that limitation, when with some degree of care—it would seem to me a degree of meticulous care—the authors of this bill have written into it that there shall be a reasonable discretion exercised by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and that the corporation shall decide whether or not within a reasonable time various tolls, charges, and the like shall pay out the particular enterprise.

It is unfortunate that we should be put up against a 30-year limitation without serious investigation—unfortunate from every standpoint because there has been, I assume, no real investigation by the Senator from Michigan, who wishes to safeguard the bill. There has been, so far as I am aware, none from those who are interested in various bond issues; and without a knowledge of the situation as it exists we might do something that we do not intend to do, and an injustice, really, to some particular bond issue.

I do hope that the language of the authors of the bill will prevail.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, there were several reasons for my suggesting this amendment. In fact, I think I have suggested it for too long a period.

From my experience with municipal governments I know how much politics is played in these local governments. I know that if these municipalities get public money to build a utility without any strict and rigid inhibition against playing politics with the project, in all probability that will be done. I know that temporary mayors and councils of municipalities for a period of a few years may wreck the whole institution for the purpose of gaining votes. They may even have exceedingly low fares. They may disregard the upkeep. They may disregard the maintenance. They may lower the fares for the purpose of a political campaign, without any responsibility to the Federal Government for the retirement of the loan.

I recall that when the city of Detroit took over the street-railway lines I made as hard and fast a contract as it was possible to make to prevent the politicians from lowering fares and playing politics with the system; and it was only because of the hard and fast and rigorous contract that was made that the system has been kept out of politics and been able to make a success.

I do not want to be party to a bill that permits a municipality or a State to come to the Federal Government and get millions and millions of dollars for a utility, and leave the provision of fares and returns and upkeep and the tolls to be charged and the sinking funds and the interest charges all to politicians who may have no responsibility or obligation to return the money advanced to the Federal Government.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, in reply let me say that we will all agree with everything the Senator from Michigan may say in regard to the playing of politics by various municipalities and the like. Let us concede it, concede that they play politics in all sorts of directions; and he says that because politics has been played in various municipal undertakings he does not want to leave to the politicians of a particular municipality the right to lower tolls, and so forth, and do as they see fit.

That is just exactly what this bill prevents, and just exactly what the authors of this bill with care wrote into it, because it provides—I read it again; it is the fifth time; I seem unable to impress it upon my fellows—it provides:

> The construction cost thereof will be returned within a reasonable period by means of tolls, fees, rents, or other charges.

All right. The construction cost, then, must be returned by means of fees, tolls, charges, and the like. That is in the bill. Now we entrust the administration of this bill to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation must of necessity, in dealing with these subjects, have a discretion; and we entrust to the discretion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in this fashion—by saying that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation within a reasonable period shall see that the tolls and the charges and the like pay out the particular kind of construction.

If there is room for politics in thus putting the tolls and the charges in sufficient amount to pay out the cost of construction, I fail to see it; and while agreeing with everything that may be said by the distinguished Senator from Michigan in respect to politics in municipalities—and politics not only in municipalities, but otherwise, and in national conventions, too—and uniting with him in any excoriation of the politics that may be played under any circumstances and in any place, I insist that when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is given the discretion within a reasonable time to see that the tolls and charges and the like will pay out the cost of construction, we have simply erected, by saying "politics in a municipality," a particular specter which can not under any circumstances exist.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, the Senator from California apparently proceeds on the theory that there is no politics in Washington or that he assumes that there is no politics in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

I do not propose to leave to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which is manned altogether by politicians, officeholders, or ex-officeholders, the determination of the length of time that they will loan this money and under what circumstances they may loan this money if by legislation I can prevent their abusing that power.

I do not propose to approve of a bill which permits the Reconstruction Finance Corporation directors—all of them more or less actively engaged in politics—to say to the State of California or to the State of Michigan or to any other State that a reasonable length of time is 99 years, for example, or 50 years, and for the period of 30, 40, 50, or 99 years permits the municipal authorities to play politics with fares and tolls, so that the Federal Government will in perpetuity be "holding the bag."

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the Senator pardon me for saying in response to that that there is not any question of politics in language such as has been written into this bill; and no specter of that sort can be conjured up so far as this particular language is concerned. Our friend from Michigan is unduly alarmed about what may be done politically by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not think the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would play any politics; but what are we going to do in a situation like this, Mr. President?

Suppose we have a municipality with an administration in charge affiliated with one of the parties, and it follows the practice of employing no one on any character of work except a member of the political party in power. If we loan the municipality money, and it employs only members of the party of the administration, then will not the question of unemployment be thrust into politics?

Suppose a highway commission should say that it would not employ anyone but one of its own party. How would the Senator take care of a situation of that kind?

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I come from the far West. I come from a State that has had some regeneration politically in the past. I can not conceive of contractors upon the roads hiring only laborers and others there who belong to a specific or a particular party. I do not pretend to say what may exist in other places; and, therefore, with my lack of knowledge of any such situation, or the possibility of any such situation, I am unable to answer the query of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I do not understand why the Senator should offer this amendment he has offered. The bill provides that—

> Such loans shall be made under such terms and conditions, with such security, and in such amounts and for such periods (not exceeding 10 years), as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may prescribe.

The loan must be paid within a period of 10 years.

Mr. COUZENS. But may I point out to the Senator that amendments have been made to permit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to go into the security business? It may bid in the open market for these securities. It may even underwrite a contract, under the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But, Mr. President, let me remark to the Senator that by the very terms of the measure that is simply one way by which the corporation may make a loan.

Mr. COUZENS. But if, as the Senator from California wants and as he says is required under the charters of the cities, they must sell their securities only by offering them for public sale, therefore the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are authorized, under the amendments made, to bid for securities which may run 20 years, 30 years, 40 years, or 50 years.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Nevertheless, the loan must be paid back within the 10 years.

Mr. COUZENS. But if they buy the securities, it is not a loan.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But it is a loan. The very security is a loan. "The city of San Francisco hereby agrees to pay to the bearer," at a certain specified time a certain amount of money. That evidences a loan. Loans are made by the sale of bonds.

Mr. COUZENS. For how long?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. For whatever period the bonds run, but under this bill the loan must be repaid within 10 years, and accordingly the securities purchased must mature within that period.

Mr. COUZENS. I am glad that has been developed, then, because the Senator from California proposes that these bonds be bid for by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the length of time that they may be issued, regardless of the 10-year limitation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me read the language of the bill. After authorizing loans to be made to States, municipalities, and public subdivisions, it continues, "such loans to be made through the purchase of their securities."

Then on the succeeding page the bill provides that such loans shall be made upon such terms and conditions and upon such security and in such amount and for such period, not exceeding 10 years, as the board may prescribe.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator has not the amendments there.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may I call to the attention of the Senator from Montana, so that he will not be in error in respect to the matter, that, at the instance of the Senator from New York, an amendment was adopted yesterday which in certain instances eliminates that particular provision in reference to the 10 years.

Mr. WAGNER. So far as the purchase of bonds is concerned, that is true, where that type of loan is made.

Mr. JOHNSON. That was done yesterday.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am interested in the suggestion just made, because I was absent from the Chamber attending a committee meeting, and I did not know of any modification of the provision with reference to the time not exceeding 10 years. If that has been eliminated, and the time has been extended to municipalities or to these corporations to 30 years or more, for more than 10 years, I think it is a very unwise provision. I should be more inclined now than ever to support the amendment of my friend from Michigan.

Mr. JOHNSON. That was done by amendment yesterday, duly adopted, presented by the Senator from New York. I did not want the Senator to be under any misapprehension in respect to the matter. That is quite so.

Mr. COUZENS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I did not know until a moment ago, when the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] mentioned it, that it was contemplated that the Metropolitan Water District of California intended to seek a loan of two hundred or more million dollars, to build an aqueduct or viaduct. I had some predilections against the bill, but hoped to find sufficient merit in it to command my support; but if the Government is to supply stupendous sums for aqueducts and viaducts to one corporation, or to a few, I think the predilections may be crystallized into disapproval of the bill.

We voted a short time ago an authorization of $165,000,000 for the construction of Boulder Dam for the benefit of California. It was stated when that important project was under consideration that California had sufficient resources and wealth that she could handle the project alone; that if the Federal Government would abdicate its authority and turn over to California or some of its municipalities the construction of the dam she would not only finance it but also construct the necessary viaduct, and the Federal Government would not be called upon for a single penny.

It was, however, believed by Congress that the Federal Government should not relinquish its authority over the Colorado River and grant to California a franchise for the construction of the dam and the unlimited control over the power which might be developed.

Now, having obtained the authorization of $165,000,000, we are given to understand that an application will be made under this bill for an appropriation which may be, as one engineer has told me, more than $200,000,000 for the construction of the aqueduct and needed auxiliaries. If $200,000,000 were taken from this fund for this one project it would be too great a drain upon it. In my opinion, the Government should not tax the people to build viaducts and aqueducts and many of the projects falling under the terms of this bill.

This fund, large or small, should be spread over the United States as far as it is practicable, just, and fair. By that I mean there ought not to be a concentration of loans and credits in a few localities or a few States. It is for unemployment everywhere in the United States, not in California alone or in Michigan or in any one State. I protest against a policy being incorporated into the bill that would permit $200,000,000 or more to be taken from the fund for the purpose of constructing a viaduct or aqueduct or any one project in any locality.

I regret exceedingly that the bill is broad enough to be interpreted as permitting this course. I indicated a few days ago, when I called attention to subdivision (2) of section (a) on page 101, that I objected to the provision that loans might be made "to private corporations to aid in carrying out the construction of bridges, tunnels, docks, viaducts, waterworks, and similar projects devoted to public use and which are self-liquidating in character." I shall move to strike that provision from the bill before final action is taken upon it.

In view of the understanding which I have as to one of the purposes back of the bill, the purpose I have just indicated, and with the understanding that the bill is susceptible of that construction and is to be so interpreted, I shall be reenforced and fortified in my desire to have that provision of the bill eliminated.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. REED. I understand the bill appropriates about $1,500,000,000 in effect for various sorts of public projects. If California is to get one-fifth of that total amount and New Orleans is to get another $100,000,000 for a bridge and New York City is to get another $100,000,000 for a bridge or for a tunnel under the East River, it is perfectly obvious to me that the demands to be made upon the fund will be many times $1,500,000,000. As the bill now stands who is to resist these demands and decide between them?

Mr. KING. Of course, there would be political and other pressure brought upon the board. The members of the board are human and they will be called upon to exercise great courage in meeting the demands made and the pressure to which they will be subjected. We learned a few weeks ago that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Board had been called to the White House to confer with the President, and the next day the newspapers carried a statement purporting to emanate from the President or a representative of the President that a given sum was to be loaned to the railroads.

The board should be left to decide the question before them without interference by any person or official of the Government. If the board may not exercise, untrammeled and unafraid, the heavy responsibilities resting upon it, then we can not expect that measure of success which otherwise would attend their labors.

Mr. REED. The amount of money made available by the bill is about $1,500,000,000, the total yield this year of our income tax on individuals and corporations. If I understand correctly the appropriation and application of the fund is to be decided entirely by the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Is that correct?

Mr. KING. That is my interpretation.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, first let me ask what is this bill? What is its design? Its design first is the relief of our people. Its design first, as I regard it, is an endeavor in some way to mitigate the human misery that is now abroad in this land. It is not designed originally for the purpose solely of making loans, but it touches certain particular activities, activities that are self-liquidating in character and which will give employment to our people, and wherever there is a self-liquidating activity which will give employment to our people, there then is one of the purposes to be subserved by the measure in question, if it be, of course, financially sound and if it comply in all regards with the various methods that are prescribed by the bill.

Mr. President, let me digress for just a moment. We have been mighty kind to great institutions in this land by legislation we have enacted. We have endeavored in every fashion that we could to minister to those institutions that said they were in want financially and that they required aid from the United States Government. We have sought, sir, by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, not only to aid the banks but to aid railroads. There is another duty and a higher one that we owe to the people of the United States besides rendering financial aid to railroads and to banks.

We have before us out here within a step of the Capitol, and we saw before us last Friday when we were voting upon the so-called bonus bill, the evidence of an economic disease which to-day afflicts the United States of America. Blind, however, we have been, except in one small particular, to the evidences of that disease and deaf to its anguished call. Deaf we have been to the cry that has come from all over the land in behalf of those who require, who demand, who ask, who beg, who plead with us for employment. There is talk around the Chamber now about an adjournment on Saturday night, and rushing this bill every hour, early and late, in order that we may get out of here Saturday night next. I want to enter my solemn protest, sirs. While misery stalks in this land, while we are here to do a duty unto our people, I want to register my protest against an adjournment until that duty shall have been done, and done to the best of our ability.

I will not admit, sirs, that I am so bankrupt in ability to afford relief to a stricken people in this land that I have got to get out of here, sneak out of the city of Washington at anyone's command, without having done something at least for the relief of humanity in the United States. So, sirs, we should sit here just as long as it is necessary until that relief is afforded; and whether it takes until Saturday night, until a week from Saturday night, or a month from Saturday night, the obligation rests upon the men who believe that they owe an obligation unto humanity, as well as unto banks and railroads, to sit here and do their job and do their duty by human beings.

Now, Mr. President, recurring to the matter immediately before the Senate, it is asserted by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] in his peculiarly lugubrious manner that a single particular enterprise in the State from which I come might receive a disproportionate amount; but our first concern is relief for unemployment, and that relief which would be afforded in the matter of a loan for a great constructive enterprise that is secured by billions of taxable and assessable property in southern California, a security which would be ample under any and under all circumstances. But he insists that if that relief shall be accorded, somebody else might be left out or somebody injured. Of course, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would prevent that. But if that be so, let us increase the amount under this bill that by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may be put to the uses that we seek to put the amount that is appropriated under this measure. If it be necessary in order to put to work people in this land, if it be essential in order that there may be some jobs given to just some human beings to increase the amount, let us increase it, and fear not that we may affect the finances of the United States of America, because in every instance in this bill we provide for security that shall be accorded the United States Government and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation when any loans may be advanced under the provisions of the measure.

We need not worry our heads with $1,250,000,000 or $1,500,000,000, as the case may be. If the security be accorded and if more money is necessary, let us go the limit and, for the love of God, let us not get out of here until we have gone the limit in behalf of suffering human beings. We have not discharged our duty, our obligation is not at an end when we have merely given millions and billions to banks and to railroads. Something else, something else that is more precious in this country, needs to be ministered to by the Congress—people, just common, ordinary, everyday men, women, and children. They must be ministered to by the Congress before it adjourns, and if they are not we are derelict in our duty and worse than derelict in our duty.

Now it is asserted that the amendment presented by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] first was a definition of a self-liquidating corporation. That we disposed of. The amendment, hastily written unquestionably, not considered at length at all, was found to do no more than the bill itself did in the matter of a definition. Now the amendment has been boiled down to just one proposition, the proposition of limiting to a 30-year period any bonds that may be taken in reality by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. In the bill, with meticulous care, the provision is written that within a reasonable time it shall be determined that the tolls and the rates and the charges and the rents will pay off the entire construction price. More than that ought not to be asked. More than that ought not to be required. There is no reason for writing a hard and fast rule of 30 years or 20 years or 10 years or 50 years or 35 years. There within a reasonable time the bill provides the tolls must pay the entire construction cost, and therefore we insist that the bill as it is written by its authors with such care and the provisions of the bill should prevail and the amendment should be defeated.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there is nothing in the bill that I can find with regard to California. There is nothing in the bill that I can find with regard to the metropolitan water district. I do not know whether it is a self-liquidating project or not. Even if it is determined to be a self-liquidating project, there is nothing in the bill that requires the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to give them $200,000,000 or $300,000,000. They can give them $1,000,000 or $2,000,000.

I wish to invite the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] to the fact that there is no danger of one-fifth of the money or one-sixth of the money going to California under the policies of the present Reconstruction Finance Corporation. There is nothing in the bill that mentions California or the metropolitan water district. There is not a provision in the bill which compels the corporation to construe this aqueduct project as being a self-liquidating project. There is nothing in the bill to require them, in the case of a self-liquidating corporation, to give them all they ask any more than there is in the existing Reconstruction Finance Corporation act any provision that requires that corporation to give any bank all it wants or to give any railroad all it wants. As a matter of fact, so far as I know, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation have not given any applicants all they want. This project is in exactly the same position as all projects under the existing Reconstruction Finance Corporation act. To that extent the corporation has jurisdiction under the present law. They determine first whether or not there is an actual need for a loan; having decided there is an actual need for it, they determine whether or not it will be to the public benefit; then how much the project itself can contribute and how much the corporation will put up. There is no distinction whatever between the provisions of the existing law and this provision. This is merely the provision which the President of the United States approved and is exactly in the same amount, but he differed with the committee as to Government works.

The President was in entire accord with the speech made by the Senator from Arkansas; he thoroughly approved of $1,500,000,000 being made available to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to aid self-liquidating projects, and that is all this proposes.

If there were a provision that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had to loan to each and every self-liquidating project all they ask, the chances are there would not be enough money in the world to do it; but they have not done so, and there is nothing like that contemplated here.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. REED. I am not concerned about what the President has or has not recommended, and I am not very much concerned about what we have voted and what we have not voted; but I am very much concerned about where we are now heading. We are putting about $3,500,000,000 all together, including the amount made available under the original Reconstruction Finance Corporation act and the amount proposed in the pending measure, in the hands of a board of directors to apportion very much as they see fit. They are patriotic men and they will no doubt try to act wisely; but when we consider the power we are giving them and then consider the way we quibble and haggle here over little items of appropriation for the departments, the contrast is rather shocking. So I am wondering if Congress is not abdicating its appropriating power here and turning it over to a board with possibilities of endless quarreling about the manner in which they will administer their task. I should like to hear what the Senator from Nevada thinks about that.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, in the first place, it depends entirely on whether the Senator from Pennsylvania agrees with the Senator from Nevada that, the banks being either unable or unwilling to lend money, we have got to seek credit from the only other available source, which is the Government. I think we agree on that, because I believe the Senator from Pennsylvania voted for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act and for the Glass-Steagall bill. So we are in accord on the fundamental principle that the only source of credit that seems to be available nowadays is the Government. We felt that the banks needed to be relieved, and so we passed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, but it cost money.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will excuse me, I was not in the least bit concerned about the banks as banks, but I was concerned very much with the human beings who were their creditors, their depositors, and with stopping the panic which was spreading over this country like a black cloud, and which we did stop. We did things and I voted for measures that I shall probably always regret.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, it is utterly immaterial to me what were the inner motives that moved the Senator from Pennsylvania. The fact is that he was willing to have the credit of the Government extended to banks and to railroads in the sum of billions of dollars.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. PITTMAN. Let me first answer the question. I assume that the Senator from Pennsylvania voted for the legislation on the same ground that I voted for it. We voted for extraordinary legislation under extraordinary conditions. We were about to have bankruptcy which would have affected everybody. So we passed the legislation. We found that after we passed those two acts conditions did not improve as we had hoped they would; in fact, they grew worse. There was more unemployment, commodity prices fell, the output of factories declined. We met the danger by authorizing the creation of the organization which the Senator now hesitates to trust. If he knows of any organization that can better be trusted, I will join him in placing the power in its hands. We put it in the power of the corporation which he now hesitates to trust to spend billions of dollars to meet an emergency. The emergency is greater now than it then was, and should we now hesitate?

Personally I am more interested in relieving unemployment than I am in helping private institutions. Our committee has tried to find a way by which first we could spend money on Government work. We found that we could not spend over $500,000,000 on Government work in the near future—that is the testimony of the experts—and that is not enough, as we all admit, though it will help considerably.

Then we go farther. We say there are certain municipalities and quasi municipalities or instrumentalities of municipalities which have been organized in various ways, which really are working for municipalities, which are prepared to carry on projects for the public use, and which will employ many men; and we say it is safe to lend them money under the condition that the rates which they collect—not taxes, mind you, but the rates they collect—will pay back the loan with interest.

The primary purpose, of course, is to secure employment for people, but at the same time the loan is safe and does not depend on taxation. Therefore we all agreed, I thought, that, in addition to the Government work, so far as we could provide Government work, we would aid municipalities or quasi municipalities and instrumentalities of municipalities in carrying out projects for the public use by making to them loans which, in the opinion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, would be safe not by reason of the taxing power but by reason of the tolls, rentals, or rates. Having determined upon that policy we have not hesitated to aid such work in going forward.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. REED. With most of what the Senator says, I am in full agreement. I do not agree that the emergency is the same as that which we faced in December. Then we were facing a panic which we tried to stop and to a large extent did stop. Now we are facing the most abysmal human misery. It is not panic, but it is probably much longer enduring than panic and much more deep-seated and harder to stop. If there are 10,000,000 people out of work in this country, the wages which they ought to get would be somewhere from twenty-five million to fifty million dollars a day, and the amount that we are appropriating by this measure is not a patch on the amount that will be needed to relieve those people. We are in perfect agreement about that; but it seems to me that demands on this fund will be so many—and they will be backed up, all of them, by political pressure—that I do not see how any board of human beings can be expected to make a success of the apportionment of the money. That is what is bothering me.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; that bothered some of us and still brothers some of us; and whenever the Senator can suggest anything better I know everybody here will accept it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Any criticism that I heretofore have made of this bill in the debate is not that the amount is too great, and I am not worried about the exhaustion of the funds provided by the bill. If we can use the money where it will employ labor, and if the fund is not large enough, make it larger; I think it ought to be larger. What I am particularly interested in now in connection with the Senator's very interesting discussion of the subject under consideration is, What will be the effect upon the employment of labor in connection with the particular kind of construction work about which the Senator is speaking? Will it afford a practical means of giving employment to men?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will try to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to hear the Senator's ideas on that question. If we can employ labor and do a legitimate job, it will be a benefit. The amount involved, to my mind, is a secondary consideration. Of course, I do not want to spend anything for nothing. I realize, however, that if we accomplish the real object, namely, to get rid of unemployment in this country, we must expend or provide for the expenditure of an enormous amount of money. To my mind, that is the best way to afford purchasing power to the millions of people who instead of requiring some charity to support them will themselves, after they have jobs, have a purchasing power that will do more to restore prosperity than anything else we can do.

Mr. PITTMAN. If this measure does not accomplish that purpose, then, of course, it is a failure.

Mr. NORRIS. That is right.

Mr. PITTMAN. And, of course, that is not the intention of the committee which drafted it.

The Senator from Pennsylvania says that conditions now are not worse than they were when we passed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act.

Mr. REED. No; I did not say they were not worse; I said they were different.

Mr. PITTMAN. Very well; I probably have not interpreted the Senator's language correctly. He said we were threatened with a panic then, and now we are threatened with human misery. If being threatened with misery is not worse than being threatened with panic, then there is a difference of opinion about it. We were threatened with bank failures, which ultimately bring misery; we were threatened with railroad receiverships, which, of course, are bad. We will admit that the two acts which we passed checked the condition in that respect; I hope they did. However, the Glass-Steagall bill has not been availed of by the banks. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] the other day stated that out of the two or three billion dollars available for circulation only $40,000 had been availed of. However, that is not the question. If the conditions are not worse, it is because we do not look at them in the same way.

When the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act was passed the Steel Corporation was working 20 per cent of capacity. To-day it is working but 17 per cent of capacity, and every time there is a decline in operations men are discharged and cease to be purchasers. The operations of industry have dropped ever since we passed that act, and it is admitted that unemployment has increased, and that is perfectly natural. Commodity prices have dropped off, so that the purchasing power is less. So far as I can see we are in a far more desperate condition than we then were.

What we have provided has done its work to the extent it has done it, and no more; but something else must be done. We propose to do it. Some say let private industry do it. Well, private industry can do it if it wants to or knows how to do it or is able to do it; nobody is holding it back. We have made available $1,000,000,000 for the banks, and have made available currency through the Glass-Steagall bill, but it is not being used. We have reached the limit probably under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act of saving railroads and banks; but still something must be done. Now, what are we going to do? The committee proposes an expenditure of $500,000,000 on Government works immediately; others propose $5,500,000,000.

It may be asked why we agreed on $500,000,000. I will tell you why—because we wanted works that had been surveyed, estimated for, authorized, and were ready to start, or that could start almost immediately. We called in Colonel Sawyer, of the Stabilization Board, who had been appointed under act of Congress to find works of that kind, and he brought them to us. We called in General Brown to tell us what there was in rivers and harbors, and he brought them to us. We called in the head of the Road Department, who brought them to us. We asked, "What can we start on?" and they showed us; and, strange to say, the total did not come to $500,000,000. It came to only $300,000,000; and we left $200,000,000 surplus to lift out of current appropriations things like the Boulder Dam project, which is a going concern, or an investment, if the President saw fit. Therefore we want more employment. All right. We are opposed to lending money to private corporations, private industry. Why? Because there is no limit to it. There is no end to it.

So we sought certain kinds of industries that we felt sure of. We did not propose to lend every municipality in the United States, because that was without limit. We did not propose to lend to any of them for miscellaneous purposes. We first came down to it and said, "Where is there a municipality or an instrumentality of a municipality that is ready to go into new construction that will hire labor? That is the thing"; and we commenced to look over the country to see what they were.

They are scattered all over the country. There is not money enough to carry them all on, and no one ever thought for one moment that they would all be carried on. There is money enough, however, to divide up among them, to carry them over two years' time, probably, or one year's time, in the hope that this condition will lift, and our normal finances will take care of them.

This is only emergency aid. This is not to build these projects. The idea of conceiving the proposition, because this project in California will cost $250,000,000 or $300,000,000, that it is anticipated that it is to be built through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. There was no such thought. They would probably buy $10,000,000 worth of bonds. That $10,000,000 worth of bonds would keep that work going on probably for a year, which is preliminary shovel work. Now the Senator asks whether or not it will pay.

What difference would it make, as far as the employment of labor is concerned, whether that aqueduct, 300 miles long, consisting of concrete and steel and tunnels and other features of an aqueduct, was built by the United States Government or built by this semimunicipality of southern California? The same number of men would be employed. The same materials would be bought. The same thing would go on.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator puts his remarks in the shape of a question. If he is addressing it to me, I will say that it would make no difference to me.

Mr. PITTMAN. I knew it would not. That is the reason why I did not hesitate to address the question to the Senator.

That is what we are looking for. We have exhausted, in our investigations, those Government works that we can start in the near future; and it is not next winter that we want to do these things. We want to give men work now, and it comes to only $500,000,000. Therefore we are looking around for somebody else to do the same kind of work when we know it is perfectly safe, not depending on taxation or credit. What do we do? That is what we call a self-liquidating project—something that does not depend upon taxes, that does not depend upon the credit of a State or a county or a municipality, but depends upon the dimes, quarters, and halves that come in from the operation of the project.

Take California again, as an illustration. I am sorry that matter got into the debate, because the bill does not say anything about it. Personally I know very little about it; but I know that it will employ a lot of men. It will buy an enormous amount of material that will come from nearly every State in this Union, and the making of that material will hire men in every State in the Union. It will do just as much as if the Government did it. Whether they can bring themselves within the definition or not, I do not know. If they have to depend on taxes, then they do not come within the definition. If they have legal authority to set aside a part of the returns from water that they sell in that great country down there, they will have ample to amortize that whole investment, with interest, in 30 years. I want to say, however, that I think even the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], who has a higher opinion of the wealth and glory of California than almost anyone except other Californians, would not expect, out of a fund of $1,500,000,000, to get nearly $300,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, may I say that he is entirely correct. Of course not. Not only that, but what would be accorded to the metropolitan water district if it made an application for a loan would be a small moiety in the beginning of that loan; and then, God willing, if things get better in this country, the bonds that have been voted can be sold, and we will go on on our way to prosperity again.

Mr. PITTMAN. I may have another thing to say in regard to this:

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is certainly in charge of men who are not extravagant, who are not overcautious. They may have different ideas from me as to what is sound business or what is a sound locality of this country. While they have been charged with having overloaned to some of the railroad companies, the fact remains that they did not lend them all they asked for. They did not lend the banks all they asked for; and they still have on hand about half of the $1,500,000,000 that was made available to them. They are cautious gentlemen. If other Senators can conceive for one moment of the chairman of that board lending one-fifth of the entire fund to Southern California, I can not. It will not be done, nor to any of them.

As I said before, this $1,500,000,000, if it were used in full, would reach nowhere; but we have projects all over the United States similar to that, and what is the result? I tell you that the banks of southern California are full of money, and yet they will not buy those bonds. Let the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, for instance, come in and buy $10,000,000 worth of those bonds, and we will find the banks in that community coming in to get the bargains themselves. That is what we are helping to bring about.

We are in this peculiar position, however, with regard to this bill, and it is a discouraging position: All of us are attempting now to start industry and employment, and yet where do we find ourselves?

Here is a bill that provides for the expenditure of money in three ways:

First, by Government works.

Second, by self-liquidating municipal or semimunicipal corporations.

Third, the $300,000,000 that we already have passed for the purpose of relieving destitution. We thought everybody was in favor of the $300,000,000, and yet it has not passed another House.

We come in here, and we find Senators like the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], who is opposed to any appropriation to carry on Government works—I charge that, and I think I am right—who indicates that he is opposed to lending any money to any municipal corporation or any instrumentality on a self-liquidating project that will be economical and is going to employ labor. He objects to any move. He admits that unemployment is increasing and destitution is getting worse, and he has nothing to offer. On the other hand, we have here those who are deeply sympathetic with the condition of unemployment and destitution in this country, who take the other extreme view—that they are not satisfied with this bill that we have offered because they want $5,500,000,000 for Government works, and possibly nothing to be expended through self-liquidating municipalities or corporations.

Where are we going to wind up with this kind of a fight? Is there no spirit of compromise or get together here at all? Is this condition to go on forever?

Some Senators agree with us, probably, that Government works are right, but not enough. Others do not want any money spent on Government works at all. Others do not want any money advanced at all except under the present law, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, to banks and railroads. Are we going to stand here and fight for weeks and weeks over our own individual ideas, and get nowhere at all? We have done that before this session.

Why this misconstruction of an act that is so plain? Why should an intelligent Senator rise on the floor and say, "If I had known it was proposed to lend three hundred millions to the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California I would have been shocked, and I tell you now that I would vote against it," when there is nothing of the kind in the bill? Why, even the distinguished lawyer and Senator from Pennsylvania was shocked when he understood that the bill was to give one-fifth of the whole fund to southern California. He even distrusted the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, his own creature.

If I have any distrust of it, I have not mentioned it. I have not said so. As a matter of fact, under this bill we are willing to trust them, with the limitations we have in the bill. We have attempted to define as carefully as we can define those things that are self-liquidating projects.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. GLENN. In view of the fear that has been expressed by the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Pennsylvania, I wonder what the Senator from Nevada would think of an amendment limiting the amount that any one corporation may borrow, so that this talk about $300,000,000 being loaned to this particular project would be out of the picture?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think that is like a flat cut of 10 per cent on an appropriation bill. I think that when we try to substitute overcaution for intelligence, we are making a mistake. That is my theory about the matter. The idea of saying that we can parcel out on the floor of the United States Senate how much shall be expended on this project and that project and the other project! We must have some one in whom we can trust, some one of intelligence, to determine the amount that can be granted to a defined concern to go on with its work, in the hope that there will be a return of prosperity or a return of action by the banks of this country. Any attempt to say that there shall be only this or that loan to this or that company, when we do not understand what it means, to me is begging the question.

Mr. GLENN. But here are very serious fears voiced that $300,000,000 of this fund, or one-fifth of it, will be loaned to one project. I do not share in that fear myself; but I do not know but that it would be helpful to have an amendment that they could not loan 20 per cent to any one project. I can not see what harm it would do to fix some reasonable limit. It might obviate some of these objections.

The Senator from Nevada emphasizes the great importance of Senators giving way in some degree to each other's feelings and judgment. I should think that if we could assure the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] that this fear which they entertain is not to be realized, it might possibly be helpful.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am not a bit afraid that the chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is going to lend any too much money out through the country.

Mr. GLENN. Ah, but they are! The Senator from Utah is, and the Senator from Pennsylvania apparently is.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is all I have to say with regard to drifting away from the provisions of this bill. In the first place, it is assumed that this California corporation is mentioned in the bill. In the second place, it is assumed that it comes within the terms of the bill as a self-liquidating institution. I do not know whether it does or not. If they can bring it within the terms of the bill, that is another thing. In the third place, it is within the judgment and discretion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as to whether or not they need any aid; and if so, how much they need; and that is a matter of judgment.

No bill can be drawn, so far as I know, without limiting it purely to public works and leaving it in the department that runs Government work, and there again we have to trust somebody in the matter.

We have adopted the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in this measure as the instrumentality to handle the financing because we have started with them, and because they have an organization, and because they have a foundation of credit. They have about exhausted their activities as far as the railroads or the banks are concerned. Now we would like to get them busy, not on railroads and banks, but get them busy on these self-liquidating propositions, such as what we are now discussing, to start them, when they are already smothered and frozen by reason of inability to get bank credits.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wonder if we are really making any progress by holding these night sessions. We have been in session now since 11 o'clock without intermission. I understand it is proposed to run on into the night.

I assume that these long hours, these long sessions, are held with the design and the hope that we will get away from here next Saturday. There is no possible way for us to get away from here next Saturday except to quit work. We can not finish. It is impossible to pass measures which are here on the calendar, for which there is a public demand that there be consideration, by next Saturday. That being true, I do not see why we should continue these night sessions.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have been so anxious to finish the work of the Senate and to conclude by next Saturday that my anxiety even led me into a speech last Saturday, which I think gave temporary offense to some Senators.

I should like very much to leave here next Saturday or Sunday. One of the keenest disappointments I shall probably have in public life will be my failure to leave here next Saturday. But it is now obvious to me that I am going to be disappointed, and possibly a great convention will be disappointed at my absence. [Laughter.] It is now obvious to me that we can not in workmanlike manner, with justice to ourselves and to the Senate and the country, finish our labors by Saturday.

I am trying, with the best sportsmanship and fortitude of which I am capable, to bear this disappointment. I have come to the conclusion that it is fantastic for us to attempt to drive all these great bills through the Senate in the next three or four days. It can not be done. We can not digest them, we can not even read them all. So, as far as I am concerned, I have during this afternoon come to the conclusion that I should relax any further attempt to speed up the Senate, and put the whip and spur to it, if I have been trying to do it, because it would not be fair to the country or fair to the Senate. So realizing we can not finish by Saturday, I therefore drain the bitter draught, and hope that the convention at Chicago will bear its disappointment arising from my absence as becomingly as it may. [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I hope the Senate will bear with me if I pose for a moment as a doctor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New York for a statement?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. The most dangerous man in the world is a tired surgeon or a worn-out doctor. We are dealing with a disease of the body politic, and it is very important that the legislative doctors be in vigor and health.

I have no doubt that the Senator from Arizona will have a greater chance of going to the convention on Saturday or Sunday if the Members of the Senate come to their work refreshed and ready for active service during the seven or eight hours of the daytime.

I agree fully with what the Senator from Idaho has said. It is not right for men to attempt to do the sort of work expected to be done by us if we come here worn out, with frayed nerves, and unfit for the great responsibilities which rest upon us.

No one can be more eager than I am to go home. I am not going to the convention, so I am not distressed about that, but I am just eager to go home. But, Senators, we can not do effective mental work if we have tired bodies, and I believe from the bottom of my heart that we will make greater progress by a reasonable limitation of hours of work than by attempting to stay here in continuous session long past the time when tired bodies are capable of functioning as they should.

I agree fully with the suggestion made by the Senator from Idaho, and, further, no matter how eager we are to get away, for one reason or another, we will make greater progress and get away more quickly if we function as normal human beings, instead of treating ourselves as we are doing by these unwonted hours of labor.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield the floor.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I just wanted to say that it seems to me ridiculous to sit here tired, as every one of us is, and try to write a bill of this immense magnitude on the floor of the Senate. Amendments have been offered and accepted here and I have not had the capacity to digest the meaning of all of them, and certainly I do not know how to vote on the pending bill. Possibly others are not so embarrassed, but it seems to me that if we are going to continue with these night sessions and this terrific drive when we are half dazed with weariness, it would be far safer, if we are going to appropriate a lot of money to save the world, to pass a resolution appropriating five hundred thousand million dollars and turn it over to a committee and go home. That seems to be the spirit of the Congress. If that is what we are going to do, let us do it and be done with it. If it is to be done, let it be done quickly.

If we are going to try to write some sane legislation and find out where all this money is going, let us take time to sleep, so that we shall be refreshed and can give proper thought to the matter. Let us take time to inquire as to where the money is to be spent. If it is to give relief for unemployment, let us find out how many men can be employed. This idea of just writing a blanket bill for the appropriation of a great deal of money in the hope that it will do some good does not seem to me worthy of the Senate of the United States.

If we have not the time to write legislation which can be thought through carefully and discussed thoroughly, if we have not the time to stay here, let us quit without passing any legislation. If we are going to pass legislation, let us get our sleep, our rest, so that we will be fit to appear here and at least give somewhat intelligent thought to what we are doing.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I am not in charge of this bill, but as one of those who has supported it, I feel that Congress should act on this legislation in whatever form it is finally framed before we adjourn, and as well on some other legislation. Therefore, I have always hesitated to oppose long sessions, which may appear inconsistent. But I have almost come to the conclusion as stated by others, that it is evident that it is hardly probable that we can possibly finish here by Saturday the matters which some of us want to be here to vote on; and if our desire to leave on Saturday is to be disappointed, and we are to be here on Tuesday and Wednesday while the great convention is adjourning, I would rather be here from 12 until 5 o'clock for a month than to be here for one week the hours we have been meeting.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, as one possibly who may be regarded as in charge of this bill, I want to join in the suggestion made by the Senator from Idaho. I am not very much concerned whether I leave here on next Saturday or next Saturday week. I am concerned, however, that the Senate take some action upon this important bill, together with other bills which are pending. I feel confident that in the end we will do better and more intelligent work if we have our daily sessions, and in the evening an opportunity to refresh ourselves and to consider the proposals made during the day.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I want to call to the attention of the Senate the fact that thus far no particular legislation has been passed at this session of Congress for the farmers of the country. The farmers are in worse condition, if possible, than the unemployed themselves. It is true that most of the farmers have enough to eat, but their homes have been foreclosed upon and sold under the hammer over their heads, and in millions of instances their lands have been taken away from them.

Something must be done for the American farmers if they are to continue to be home owners and land owners, and something should be done by all means at this session of the Congress.

The other day the farm relief bill was recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. During the last Congress I introduced a bill for the relief of agriculture, and I introduced the same bill early in this session. We had hearings upon the bill in February, and after some lengthy discussion in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the bill was reported to the Senate and placed upon the calendar on May 14. It is Senate bill 1197, Order of Business 737 on the calendar. It is known as the refinancing bill to liquidate and refinance agricultural indebtedness.

The leaders on this side of the aisle have promised me consistently that they would do everything in their power to help me bring the measure to a vote. I can not see any way possible of getting a vote on the pending bill by Saturday night, and I think it should be passed, and there are a number of other bills that ought to be passed. I want some assurance that I am going to get consideration of the farm bill I introduced, Senate bill 1197, or I want to serve notice here and now that I will offer the bill as an amendment to the pending bill and take the opportunity of discussing it through that procedure.

It would be a great deal better to have the bill come up by itself, but if that can not be arranged, I intend to offer it as an amendment to the pending bill. It is for relief to the farmers, just as much as this pending bill is intended to be a measure for relief to the unemployed and to others in distress.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to send to the desk an amendment which I wish to have printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think there is not a Senator here who wants to get away any worse than I do or is any more interested in getting away than I am. But I have always felt that as long as there is business which the Senate ought to look after, and ought to look after well and carefully, we should stay here and attend to it. I think that is the reason why we are sent here. When we are not ready to do that, we are ready to be sent somewhere else.

There are several important measures yet to come before the Senate. The matter that we have now before us is a measure which in ordinary times the Senate would take two or three weeks to consider and properly put into the shape in which it ought to be for its final passage. We ought not to neglect such important legislation as this by hastily putting it through. It ought to be carefully considered. It ought to be carefully worked out. We hope to do good to the people and to the country through this legislation, and in order to do that the measure ought to be very carefully considered.

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] suggested that we ought to stay here until some legislation in the interest of the ordinary people is enacted. I agree with him in that statement. I have disagreed with him as to the purposes for which other legislation has been enacted. I have not voted for legislation in behalf of the banks of the country and for the benefit of the banks. I am not especially interested in those who are connected with the banks except those who are interested as depositors, whose savings may be in the banks and who are really the ones who need protection. I think it is beneficial to them that we should enact the legislation we have already enacted. But if we can enact legislation that is of direct benefit to the people of the country, we ought to stay here and do it, and we ought to take time enough to put it in proper shape.

There is other legislation beside that which is now pending that needs careful study and consideration, and that needs to be enacted in the interest of the people of the country, and we ought to stay here until we have done that. Otherwise, I am not interested in getting away Saturday. It has been said that it will be impossible to get away Saturday. I think so. I can not see how it is possible for us to do in a proper way what the Senate ought to do between now and next Saturday. I think I can stand just about as much as any Senator here, so far as that is concerned. I can work day and night, but I believe we do a great deal better work if we do not try to do so much in so short a time. I think it would be in the interest of the people and the country, as well as in the interest of Senators themselves, if we would follow pretty closely the advice of Doctor COPELAND.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, as I understand these observations from the Senators they addressed themselves to the conclusion as to whether we shall make an effort to adjourn this body before Saturday or by Saturday. Or, shall they remain at such tasks as we have undertaken though they exceed in point of time the end of the week. In this reference to adjourning by Saturday there is covertly carried the thought of the necessity of being present at the Democratic Convention to be held at Chicago. In the first place, I am unable to see where there is any necessity for my eminent and distinguished Republican friends to concern themselves about the Democratic Convention at Chicago. [Laughter.] I am equally indifferent to the Democrats and to any great concern on their part for the mere convention at Chicago when it is merely to attend the convocation of those who will exhibit themselves before the country——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. LEWIS. I am delighted to yield to my eminent friend, but I desire to inform him that by asking me at that particular moment to yield he destroyed a very potent thought which I fear has evaporated. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the ability and fertility of my learned friend from Illinois will have no trouble in generating the thought at any time he sees fit. I am very much comforted in the last few moments. I have just been handed a note by which I am advised that a man is eligible for nomination for the Presidency or Vice Presidency without being personally present at the convention. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS. Of course, the consolation afforded me in that speech, that my absence will not at all retard the possibility of the success which, of course, the party desires to confer upon me hastily, may have its gratifying aspect, but I say to the Senator from Arizona that while I may be credited with agility of action and ability of speech, I confess I hope for utility of thought and fertility of results. But all this can not disturb the conclusion to which I was reaching. That is, that it is better for the Democratic Party that it certify to America its willingness to remain to duty, and execute such measures as serve the welfare of the public, and thus perform that duty of the Democracy of coming to the rescue of the Nation despite the unhappy illustration disclosed by those who forsook the needs of the Nation under the guise of Republicanism and its convention.

Sirs, I say it is better for the Democrats that we show the Nation that we are willing to remain here and carry on the tasks in behalf of those who need their service, and that we are now preparing to do a service in connection with our Republican brethren that is needed for the common country and its welfare, than merely to hasten, leaping over these tasks, and assembling at some gathering where they shall certify in a platform the wonderful work they are doing in behalf of American mankind—in the face of the fact that they deserted the task at the only place and forum where it could be performed.

I digress in parenthesis to pay my tribute to a late rule of one of the parliamentary bodies of Europe, which I observe is that no newspaper is ever read in the face of a member addressing the body. Luckily for us in this Senate we never have to decree such a regulation as that. Our Senators are made of such high caliber of mind and decency of demeanor that none would ever do such a thing. This ends my parenthesis.

I was about to add that I remember, as we all do, that in Faust we have an expression from Goethe, in which he speaks of the Brocken, and there he says:

Behold those that fly over the Brocken,
How they alight on limbs each separate from the other,
And soon so confused that when at evening time,
The axe of the hunter is laid to the roots,
And all are found in confusion intermixed and commingled upon the ground.

We may light upon different limbs in this transaction, and the judgment of gentlemen may be wholly different from each other, the methods by which they move about may be affected with each other, but by disclosing to the country the desire and intent to serve, it is that which is the important feature. Milton never gave us a more apt maxim, more completely applicable to the present situation, than in his delightful assertion that "They also serve who only stand and wait." Or as Longfellow puts it, "labors and waits."

I can not profess to be a master financier in these matters of the financing of different proposals. My eminent friend from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], whose great capacity is certified by those who have observed his splendid course; the gentlemen who have built this bill together in its different phases, have disclosed their capacity or, to use the words of my friend from Arizona alluding to his friend from Illinois, their "agility and capacity and ability." Each has, sir, his own judgment of each provision.

May I be pardoned to relieve the seriousness of the situation here and the gloom that has settled upon the definite conclusion that we are toiling forever without results, by relating that a short while ago there was an application in my city for citizenship by an Italian who was a fruit vender in my city. He proposed to the judge that he wanted citizenship, when the judge said, "Ricardo, do you know you are asking to be made a citizen of the United States?" "Yes, Judge." Then says the judge, "Can you tell me how many States are in the Union?" "Sir?" "You have to be examined," says the Judge. "Yes?" "Can you tell me how many States are in the Union?" "Mr. Judge," says our Italian applicant, "I talk to you. You know your business. I know my business. You ask me how many States in the Union. I ask you how many bananas in a bunch?" [Laughter.]

And now, Mr. President, each of us has a forum of information that relates distinctively to the branch of his own production; but I am anxious now at this second to divert for a moment in reply to my eminent friend from Arizona, whose liquid poetry and rhetorical exaltation in behalf of the drama has captivated us all and warned us with something of an admonition not to advance too far upon the field which he has perfected by his adorning epic.

I desire to say that I count very little, speaking seriously to my friends the Senators, the mere matter of the gathering of conventions and the designation of candidates. I think nothing could be better than the ancient form of selection that did apply to the government in Greece, which they copied from the Judeans, when the applicants for honors from their government were prohibited from being present at the gathering where such were to be chosen. Indeed, in one instance in Greece, when one ambitious hopeful did attend the assemblage, thinking he had victory in his hands, as punishment he was denied the luxury of success because of the audacity that he disclosed by attempting by his presence to influence those who were the judges. I feel that if certain gentlemen we have read of in the public press who are candidates could bring themselves to modest retirement, not being seen in the undertaking, it would go farther and better for them and would leave upon the minds of the Nation the feeling that the choice was not aided and fomented by galleries and by a repetition of that unforgetable and unpardonable incident which transpired in 1924 at the city of New York and another incident which unhappily affected two distinguished gentlemen, now gone to be sentinels of God, two ex-Presidents of the United States, in the convention at Chicago in a controversy between President Taft and ex-President Roosevelt.

Mr. President, I am not concerned for myself as to whether there be any convention at all. So far as the convention is concerned, I am not at all interested if there be any gallery. I think it would be very wise, sir, and I do not hesitate here to proclaim that the best thing that could happen to the convention would be two orders—one, that the galleries should not have any inhabitants whatever; two, that there should be none of that wild applause and marching like a lot of hyenas beating at their own bodies, with a lot of screeches and expressions, senseless in themselves, regretful in appearance, and valueless in purpose.

I feel, and I take the liberty to assert, that we are just now at the time of the test of the politician by the people. Let us not assume that the great American public are always so befuddled. They have their eyes upon this body, and from here it is the test will come. Are we worthy of their confidence, and will we prove it by remaining to the task for the length of time necessary to execute it, to assure that confidence and trust? We who are lawyers, and most of us in this honorable body are lawyers, remember too well the maxim amidst ourselves "that it is better for a man to feel that he has had justice than even if he has not had it when he does not know it."

If we let the public feel we are attending to their business they are appeased, but if they see that we are assembled here unwilling to do so, that we are staying here grudgingly, opposing the necessity of doing so, and that we are really working here because we are afraid of the multitude and we fear their punishment if we should leave, we get no credit for such a performance that is conducted under such form of coercion. We must let the country realize that we are staying here to perform the task in order to relieve them of the severe exigencies which rests upon them and to give them the benefit of the relief which they now so sorely need.

I recall that the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], sitting opposite us, in his advocacy of a measure here the other day in our hearing, bringing to bear his usual philosophies, remarked, "It were better to take some bread, a slice off the loaf, than none of the loaf at all."

This is the position of this measure as I behold it: If this measure as it stands here, as prepared by these eminent leaders, with the aid of those, may I add, on both sides of the House, can disclose to the great masses who are watching us that they shall have relief. Equally true those of agriculture spoken of by the eminent Senators from the Dakotas. If all shall see that we are willing to remain to give them the best slice that we can draw from the loaf, we reinvite their confidence and make them feel that they will not go forth hungry, but that we are here to serve them to our fullest capacity. Let us hear again the great cry and the great challenge that they give to us, as they plead unto us for relief. Let us repeat and fulfill the injunction of the Scripture, "That which thy hand finds to do, do it with thy might." Thus it is we remain to perform the task that we may be just to man and faithful to God.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I know of no Senator who desires to conclude the work of this session until emergent and essential legislation shall have been given careful consideration; at least, I can say for myself, Mr. President, it is far from my notion that we should adjourn until that shall have been done. For several days I have entertained an ambition that we might conclude the work of this session by Saturday night. I still cling to that hope, and believe that by night sessions we might consider what the majority of the Senate would consider as a program of essential and emergent legislation. If we can not conclude by Saturday night, then the hours will be shorter when we can conclude if we shall hold night sessions, for if we are not through by Saturday night, if we hold night sessions, we can be through some time next week.

It is not my desire—and I represent merely myself—to apply the whip and spur. I think, however, the country itself would prosper better by closing this session rather than by keeping it open. I think business will revive to a large extent when Congress ceases to discuss public matters and finds an opportunity to express itself by a vote for adjournment.

So far as I personally am concerned, I do not want to cause any Member of the Senate to make a sacrifice of his health or to cause him any unnecessary inconvenience, but I think we all should make some sacrifice; and I think it is a small one, in view of the situation of the country, for us to stay here at night and work. I think we are quite as well off working here and discussing public problems as we would be if we were away. That is my view, and that is the reason I expressed myself as I did last evening in asking that the Senate continue its session.

Of course the majority of the Senate must control the proceedings, and if a majority of the Senate to-night should decide to recess, I shall have no complaint so far as I am concerned; but, speaking for some on this side of the Chamber, and some, I think, on the other side, I believe we should stay here and work, and I shall do so uncomplainingly. I shall be just as uncomplaining if it should be decided to recess; but upon that question, if a motion is made, I desire a record vote.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I accept in the best of faith the suggestion made by the Senator from Oregon, and I move that the Senate takes a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock, and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska, on which the yeas and nays are demanded. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

PURCHASE OF SILVER

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the report of the Committee on Banking and Currency on Senate bill 3606, known as the silver purchase bill, which was introduced by me and which I discussed in the Senate on last Saturday, June 18, at which time I placed in the RECORD the correspondence with the Secretary of the Treasury with regard thereto.

There being no objection, the report (No. 843) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 843, Seventy-second Congress, first session]

PURCHASE OF SILVER PRODUCED IN THE UNITED STATES WITH SILVER CERTIFICATES

Mr. NORBECK, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following report (to accompany S. 3606):

The Banking and Currency Committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3606) to authorize the purchase by the Government of American-produced silver, to provide for the issuance of silver certificates in payment therefor, to provide for the coinage of such silver, and for other purposes, having considered same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass with the following amendments:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "States," insert the following: "at any time prior to July 1, 1938."

Page 1, line 9, before the period insert a comma and the following:

"if such market price of silver at such date is not in excess of 10 cents an ounce above the average market price of silver for the three preceding calendar months. The Director of the Mint shall continue to obtain and keep the necessary statistics to determine the price of silver for the purposes of this act, and shall publish the same at least every 30 days, and shall deliver such statement of prices to any person, firm, or corporation tendering silver for purchase by the United States Government under this act."

After section 1 insert the following new section:

"SEC. 2. The silver bullion purchased under the provisions of this act shall be subject to the requirements of existing law and the regulations of the mint service governing the methods of determining the amount of pure silver contained, and the amount of the charges or deductions, if any, to be made; but such silver bullion shall not be counted as part of the silver bullion authorized or required to be purchased and coined under the provisions of existing law."

Change the numbers of sections 2, 3, 4, and 5 of the original bill to 3, 4, 5, and 6, respectively.

Amend the title of the bill so as to read:

"A bill to authorize the purchase by the Government of silver, produced in the United States, to provide for the issuance of silver certificates in payment therefor, to provide for the coinage of such silver, and for other purposes."

STATEMENT

The primary purpose of the act is to aid in overcoming the oversupply of silver in the markets of the world due to the debasement and melting up of silver coins by governments and disposing of the metal in the open market.

The secondary purpose of the act is to place in circulation a limited amount of additional currency based upon silver.

This is an emergency act, and its life is limited to a period of six years.

The committee finds as facts:

1. That the extreme and abnormal depression in the price of silver has so lowered the exchange value of the silver money of silver-using countries in relation to our gold-standard money that the purchasing power of the people of such countries in our markets has been greatly decreased, with a serious effect upon our export trade.

2. That such depressed price of silver is not due to an overproduction of the mines in the United States or the rest of the world.

3. That the production of silver for the year 1931 was substantially what it was for the pre-war year of 1913.

4. That the mine production of silver is more or less automatically controlled by the production of copper, lead, and zinc, because 66 per cent of the silver produced in the world is as a by-product of such metals.

5. Such depressed price of silver is chiefly due to an oversupply of silver in the world, such excess supply being derived from the debasement of silver coins through the reduction of fineness of silver content, and through the melting up of silver coins and the sale of the silver residue as metal in the markets of the world.

6. No governments at the present time, except the Government of India, are debasing and melting up silver coins. The Indian Government in 1926 authorized the secretary of the treasury for India to melt up the circulating silver rupee coins in the treasury and as they came into the treasury and to dispose of the metal so derived in the market of the world for the purpose of establishing a gold standard for India. The total amount of such silver sold from the debasement and melting up of silver coins for the past three years was as follows:

	Fine ounces
1929	67,000,000
1930	71,500,000
1931	59,500,000

The total world production from mines during those years was as follows:

	Fine ounces
1929	261,511,985
1930	247,413,900
1931	195,766,700

The British Government for India, notwithstanding that India has gone off the gold-exchange basis, is, nevertheless, continuing the policy and practice of melting up silver rupee coins and selling the metal on the market of the world. Such oversupply must be stopped or counteracted. The treasurer of India demands that mine production shall be reduced. Such a thing is impracticable if not impossible by reason of the fact that two-thirds of all silver produced is produced as a by-product of base-metal mining. The same result can be partially accomplished, however, by temporarily withdrawing from the markets of the world the United States production of silver. In the United States in 1931 there were produced 31,580,000 ounces of pure silver. The withdrawal of such silver from the market would partially offset the oversupply derived from the debasement and melting up of silver coins by governments.

7. The United States Government could lose nothing by the purchase of such silver. It would purchase the silver at the market price and pay for it in silver certificates of $10, $5, and $1 denominations. With silver at the present market price of around 30 cents an ounce the Government would receive 3.3 ounces of pure silver for a $1 certificate. As there is approximately 0.78 of an ounce of pure silver in a standard silver dollar the Government, in addition to the coined standard silver dollar to redeem the silver certificate if and when presented for redemption, would have and hold a reserve of 2.52 ounces of pure silver as additional security for the silver certificate issued or for seigniorage profits if Congress should authorize the disposal of such surplus silver.

8. The silver certificates would go into direct circulation through the payment for mine wages and mine materials. It would not constitute an inflation and would not be a burden upon our gold reserves. It would constitute, however, a small expansion of our currency based on ample silver security. At the present time the issue of such silver certificates would not exceed $1,000,000 per month. The evidence shows that there is little hope or expectation of a very substantial increase in the production of silver in the United States for several years. Such production can only increase through the increase in the production of copper, lead, and zinc. The circulation of silver certificates in the United States has existed for over 40 years. During such period such circulation has varied around $500,000,000, and there has been in the Treasury during most of that time an approximately equal number of standard silver dollars, held for the redemption of such silver certificates. Never in this century has the value of these certificates depreciated or been questioned. This small denomination currency constitutes a large part of the active currency of the country and is quite popular. At the time the $500,000,000 of silver certificates were issued the gold reserves of the United States ranged around $1,000,000,000. At the present time the gold reserves range around $4,000,000,000. It is evident therefore that the small amount of additional currency issued under the act could never even approach the relative amount of silver certificates to gold reserves that existed at the time the present circulating silver certificates were issued.

We submit with this report a statement made by Senator PITTMAN before the subcommittee, which contains a copy of the bill as amended, the report of the Secretary of the Treasury thereon, and correspondence between Senator PITTMAN and the Secretary of the Treasury relative thereto.

The amendments recommended by the subcommittee are as follows:

In the title of the bill strike out the words "American produced" and insert after the word "silver" the words "produced in the United States."

On page 1, line 6, after the word "States" insert "at any time prior to July 1, 1938."

On page 1, line 9, strike out the period at the end of the sentence, insert a comma and the following:

"if such market price of silver at such date is not in excess of 10 cents an ounce above the average market price of silver for the three preceding calendar months. The Director of the Mint shall continue to obtain and keep the necessary statistics to determine the price of silver for the purposes of this act, and shall publish the same at least every 30 days, and shall deliver such statement of prices to any person, firm, or corporation tendering silver for purchases by the United States Government under this act."

After section 1 add a new section to be designated as section 2, as follows:

"SEC. 2. The silver bullion purchased under the provisions of this act shall be subject to the requirements of existing law and the regulations of the mint service governing the methods of determining the amount of pure silver contained, and the amount of the charges or deductions, if any, to be made; but such silver bullion shall not be counted as part of the silver bullion authorized or required to be purchased and coined under the provisions of existing law."

Renumber the remaining sections of the bill, so that the bill will read as follows:

"A bill to authorize the purchase by the Government of silver produced in the United States, to provide for the issuance of silver certificates in payment therefor, to provide for the coinage of such silver, and for other purposes

"Be it enacted, etc., That silver bullion, the product of mines situated in the United States and of reduction works so located, may be deposited at any United States mint for sale to the United States at any time prior to July 1, 1938; and the Director of the Mint is directed to purchase silver so tendered, not in excess of 5,000,000 ounces per month, at the market price of silver in the United States as of the date of tender, if such market price of silver at such date is not in excess of 10 cents an ounce above the average market price of silver for the three preceding calendar months. The Director of the Mint shall continue to obtain and keep the necessary statistics to determine the price of silver for the purposes of this act, and shall publish the same at least every 30 days, and shall deliver such statement of prices to any person, firm, or corporation tendering silver for purchase by the United States Government under this act.

"SEC. 2. The silver bullion purchased under the provisions of this act shall be subject to the requirements of existing law and the regulations of the mint service governing the methods of determining the amount of pure silver contained, and the amount of the charges or deductions, if any, to be made; but such silver bullion shall not be counted as part of the silver bullion authorized or required to be purchased and coined under the provisions of existing law.

"SEC. 3. Payment for silver bullion purchased under the provisions of this act shall be made in silver certificates, which shall be issued for that purpose in denominations of $10, $5, and $1, and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, so much as may be necessary for carrying out the foregoing provisions of this act. Silver certificates so issued, and silver certificates heretofore issued, or any silver certificates reissued, shall be legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, except where otherwise expressly stipulated in the contract, and shall be receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues. Such certificates, when held by any national banking association or Federal reserve bank, may be counted as a part of its lawful reserve.

"SEC. 4. The silver bullion purchased under the provisions of this act shall be coined into standard silver dollars and subsidiary silver coins sufficient, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, to meet any demands for redemption of silver certificates issued under the provisions of this act, and such coin shall be retained in the Treasury for the payment of such certificates on demand. The bullion so purchased and obtained under this act, except so much thereof as is coined under the provisions of this act, shall be held in the Treasury for the sole purpose of the redemption of the certificates issued hereunder and in the manner herein provided. Any such certificates or reissued certificates, when presented at the Treasury, shall be redeemed in standard silver dollars, or in subsidiary silver coin, at the option of the holder of the certificates: Provided, That, in the redemption of such silver certificates issued under this act, not to exceed one-third of the coin required for such redemption shall be made in subsidiary coins, the balance to be made in standard silver dollars.

"SEC 5. When any silver certificates issued under the provisions of this act are redeemed or received into the Treasury from any source whatsoever, and belong to the United States, they shall not be retired, canceled, or destroyed, but shall be reissued and paid out again and kept in circulation; but nothing herein shall prohibit the cancellation and destruction of mutilated certificates and the issue of other certificates of like denomination in their stead, as provided by law.

"SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act."

ADDITIONAL EXPENDITURES FOR COMMITTEE ON CONSERVATION OF WILD ANIMAL LIFE

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there is a Senate resolution on the calendar which is an emergency resolution providing an appropriation of $7,500 from the contingent fund to pay the expenses of a committee that desires to close up its business. I refer to the Senate Committee on the Conservation of Wild Animal Life Resources. The resolution has been approved unanimously by the committee, and I should like to have it adopted. The resolution was not submitted by me, but I do not think there is any objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Of course, the motion to recess is not debatable and all this business is being done by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. PITTMAN. I asked unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Nebraska withhold his motion until other business may be transacted?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not want to withhold it for an indefinite time, but I have no objection to yielding to any request for unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the motion to be temporarily withheld, and the Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate resolution 203, being order of business 723.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution which had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment in line 5, after the word "purposes," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$7,500," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the special committee directed by Senate Resolution No. 246, agreed to April 17, 1930, to investigate appropriate methods for the replacement and conservation of wild animal life hereby is authorized to expend in furtherance of such purposes $7,500 in addition to the amount heretofore authorized.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska has consented to withhold his motion until I may make a brief statement and request.

It had been my hope that the labors of the Senate might be concluded by Saturday. Frankly, I desired to have the opportunity of attending the Democratic National Convention, which is expected to nominate the next President of the United States. Nevertheless, it seems to me that my first duty is to remain in attendance upon this body until its labors shall have been concluded, and I feel that other Senators who do not find it imperative to go away should remain here.

It seems to me that the debate on the pending bill is being prolonged so that a conclusion concerning it may be deferred for an indefinite time; and I am wondering whether it would be practicable to enter into an agreement that after 5 o'clock to-morrow afternoon the debate shall be limited so that no Senator may speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes on the bill or on any amendment that may be offered thereto. Assuming that the Senate shall meet to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock, that will afford six hours without any limitation; and it will put into effect a reasonable limitation that will probably bring to a decision the issues involved in this bill some time late to-morrow.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] if he intends to bring up to-morrow the conference report on the economy bill, which I understand is likely to lead to a good deal of debate?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I hope that the pending bill may be disposed of before other controversial matters are brought into the Senate, for the reason that it will be necessary to get the bill into conference at an early date in order that the conferees may have a reasonable opportunity for agreeing within a few days.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Arkansas will yield further, let me say that I agree with him about the importance of pushing along the pending bill, but at the same time I know, from the number of those who have been to see me, that there is bound to be considerable debate on the conference report on the economy bill. Furthermore, because the conference report is a privileged matter, I did not want the Senator to make an estimate that we would have all the time he has indicated to give to the pending bill and then have more than half of it taken by the conference report.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. My thought is that in all probability consideration of controverted conference reports may be deferred until the vote on the pending bill shall have been reached, if it can be reached under such an arrangement as I am suggesting. I know that there are other appropriation bills to come along, and that some time will be required for their consideration; but in all frankness, I feel that some time is being wasted; that we are not making the best use of our time.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator that I am in entire sympathy with what he is trying to accomplish. I agree with him that we ought to dispose of the pending bill before we take up any other controversial matters that will take time. However, since the Senator has suggested it, I want to ask him that he not prefer his request now. Senators will be thinking about it to-night, mulling it over in their minds, and talking with each other about it, and by to-morrow morning I have an idea we will be in a much better condition to have that suggestion made to us. I suggest that the Senator submit it to the Senate to-morrow instead of now. I know I should like to consult with one or two Senators before I agree to such a request.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If that is the judgment of the Senator, I take it that no agreement could be made this evening, and I will not make the request at this time.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope the Senator will withhold it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I will withhold it.

Mr. JONES and Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield first to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I was going to suggest that if some arrangement could be made along the line suggested by the Senator from Arkansas, I would be perfectly willing to withhold the privileged matter which has been referred to until the arrangement suggested could be carried out and the pending bill disposed of. I think that would be wise action on the part of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to thank the Senator from Washington.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Arkansas will permit me I wish to say that I think the Senate has confined itself very well to the subject matter of this bill. True, there was some discussion here on the prohibition question yesterday and a little to-day; but otherwise I think the Senator from New York, in charge of the bill, will agree that there has been a disposition on the part of Senators to confine themselves to the subject matter.

The Senator from Arkansas must take into account that a great many amendments, some of them very important, have been offered to this bill on the floor. So I did not want the statement to rest unchallenged in the RECORD that we have wasted any time on the bill. I think we have worked diligently on it.

I want to cooperate with the Senator, may I say, in getting an early disposition of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I am not complaining, except I do reaffirm that considerable time has been exhausted, if not wasted. Always in the closing hours of a session there is necessity for quick action. At the same time I realize that the importance of this bill, and its character, require that due consideration shall be given it. What I am wishing to avoid, however, is a situation that easily may arise—conference reports disposed of, appropriation bills passed, the friends of this bill delaying a final conclusion concerning it, and then intense pressure for adjournment on the part of the Congress.

I do not feel that this session of Congress ought to adjourn until every effort has been exhausted to dispose of this measure. That was the reason that prompted me to make the suggestion which I have made. I, of course, will withhold the request, since the indications are that it would be objected to at this time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in view of the numerous and complicated amendments which have been adopted to this bill since it has been on the floor, I ask unanimous consent that there may be a reprint of it, showing the amendments as adopted thus far by the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think that is a good suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11638) to amend section 7 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1902, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 867) thereon.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF POST OFFICE COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. ODDIE, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably sundry nominations of postmasters, which were placed on the Executive Calendar.

ADDITIONAL BILL INTRODUCED

Mr. HASTINGS introduced a bill (S. 4921) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

INVESTIGATION OF RENTAL CONDITIONS IN THE DISTRICT

Mr. CAPPER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 248), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Whereas despite a precipitate decline in the prices of practically all commodities throughout the United States and within the District of Columbia, there has been no appreciable decrease in rents in the said District; and

Whereas although the incomes of thousands of District residents have been seriously impaired through the present economic condition, the public of the District is paying high rents based upon inflated and fictitious values of rental properties; and

Whereas the Committee on the District of Columbia, in considering the rental situation in the District, has received charges to the effect that rents are being artificially maintained at a high level and that, in numerous cases, rents have recently been increased, while wages of employees of apartment houses have been reduced; and

Whereas the Committee on the District of Columbia believes the health and general welfare of the people of the said District to be imperiled by the exorbitant demands of landlords, and believes also that an investigation of rental and related conditions in the said District is necessary to furnish the Senate with information to serve as a basis for such legislation as may be deemed requisite to protect the health and welfare of the public of the District: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia, or a duly authorized subcommittee thereof, be directed to investigate any and all conditions affecting rentals and rental properties in the District.

The committee or subcommittee shall make every effort to ascertain the facts as to the rental conditions in the District of Columbia as to vacancies, rents, construction, and any and all other matters pertinent to the inquiry, including financing of apartment houses and dwelling houses for sale or rent in the said District. The committee or subcommittee, upon discovering in the course of its inquiry evidence of any criminal action, shall promptly communicate such evidence to the proper authorities for prosecution.

The committee or subcommittee shall make a final report of its investigation, with recommendations, to the Senate not later than December 15, 1932. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee or subcommittee is authorized to avail itself of the services of all agencies of the Federal and District Governments in the District of Columbia; to hold hearings and to sit and act at such times and places as it deems advisable; to employ such assistance as it deems necessary; to require, by subpœna or otherwise, the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents; to administer oaths and to take testimony, and to make expenditures to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee or subcommittee. The total of such expenditures shall not exceed $5,000.

PHILLIP FORMAN

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, as in executive session, that we confirm a nomination which has been sent here and approved by the committee—the nomination of Phillip Forman.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the nomination—for what office?

Mr. KEAN. United States district judge, district of New Jersey.

Mr. NORRIS. No, Mr. President; I do not think we ought to do that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska objects.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Regular order!

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JUNE 21, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, our Everlasting Father, we wait before Thee with a sense of our manifold needs. Accept our praise for all Thy mercies. Surely Thou hast not restrained them. We trust that we are sincerely grateful for good health; for the privileges and for the joys which bless our daily lives. Above all these, Blessed Lord, we thank Thee for Him, whom Thou hast sent, that our souls may be the sanctuaries of His beautiful spirit. O may it flow in as ours flows out. Vouchsafe the wisdom that we need, and may we submit ourselves to Thy guidance. Bless us with that unity which comes from mutual regard and respect. Minister unto us a sense of the abiding realities, namely, faith, hope, and love. Thus labor shall be made easy, charity zealous, and our aspirations shall be as a climbing flame. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 8173. An act to provide for the renewal of 5-year level premium term Government insurance policies for an additional 5-year period without medical examination; and

H. R. 10825. An act to authorize the transfer of certain lands in Fayette County, Ky., to the Commonwealth of Kentucky.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 182. Joint resolution amending the joint resolution authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to William Jennings Bryan.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order to-day to recess until 8 o'clock to-night, and that it shall be in order from 8 o'clock until half past 10 o'clock to-night to consider under the old rule bills unobjected to on the Private Calendar commencing where the call last left off.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] on Saturday stated that the work of the House was virtually completed. The majority leader is aware of the fact that night sessions are quite exacting on certain Members who follow closely the Private Calendar.

I wish to inquire whether it would not be compatible with the program of the majority to have some day this week, or to have some portion of a day this week, set aside for the consideration of the Private Calendar rather than to have night sessions?

Mr. RAINEY. Conference reports will be coming in.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can not bills on the Private Calendar be considered after the conference reports are acted upon?

Mr. RAINEY. That might be possible.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is rather exacting on Members to be here five or six hours, and I am sure the majority leader will realize that an added two hours at an evening session is quite a strain.

Mr. RAINEY. I appreciate that fact.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is planned for to-morrow?

Mr. RAINEY. There is no plan, except some conference reports may be taken up.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why not consider bills on the Private Calendar to-morrow?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. For the time being I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Unless bills on the Private Calendar are taken up to-night, it will not serve any purpose to take them up later.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Congress will probably adjourn this week.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, no.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I think it will.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; not until we pass a relief bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think we can find time during day sessions to consider the Private Calendar.

Mr. RAINEY. To-morrow is Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. STAFFORD. For the time being, I object, Mr. Speaker.

THE REPUBLICAN PROMISES AND FACTS

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I herewith print in parallel columns, without comment, some expressions from recent Republican platforms, and also some extracts from speeches of President Hoover and Senator DICKINSON.

THE DEADLY PARALLEL

"A Democratic tariff has always been followed by business adversity; a Republican tariff by business prosperity." (Republican national platform of 1904.)	"We meet in a period of widespread distress and of an economic depression that has swept the world. The emergency is second only to that of a great war. The human suffering occasioned may well exceed that of a period of actual conflict.
"* * * Through the wisdom of Republican policies and the capacity of Republican administrations the foundations have been laid and the greatness and prosperity of the country firmly established." (Republican national platform of 1928.)	"The supremely important problem * * * is to break the back of the depression * * * and to bring encouragement and relief to the thousands of American families that are sorely afflicted." (Republican national platform of 1932.)
"We produced a fundamental program which made this restored employment secure on foundations of prosperity." (Speech of Candidate Hoover, Newark, N. J., September 17, 1928.)	On June 4, 1932, President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, said that a survey showed the number of unemployed in the United States in March was 10,500,000.
"Were it not for sound governmental policies and wise leadership, employment conditions in America would be similar to those existing in many parts of the world." (Speech of Candidate Hoover, Newark, N. J., September 17, 1928.)	"I need not recount to you that the world is passing through a great depression. * * * Our economic strength is such that we could have recovered long since but for these forces from abroad." (Speech of President Hoover, Detroit, September 21, 1931.)
	"The tide of employment has changed in the right direction." (President Hoover, January 21, 1930.)
"Herbert Hoover was at grips with the forces of depression before the country as a whole had time to realize the menace it faced." (Keynote speech of Senator DICKINSON, Chicago convention, June 14, 1932.)	"The low point of business and unemployment was the latter part of December and early January. * * * All the evidences indicate that the worst * * * will have been passed during the next 60 days." (President Hoover, March 7, 1930.)
	"The depression is but a temporary halt in the prosperity of a great people. The income of a large part of our people has not been reduced." (President Hoover, October 2, 1930.)
	"We find fundamental national gains. There has been a distinct gain in public health." (President Hoover, December 8, 1931.)
"His (President Hoover's) first act prevented a financial panic." (Keynote speech of Senator DICKINSON.)	For 1931 Federal Reserve Board reported 2,290 bank suspensions, with deposits of $1,759,000,000, as compared with 642 suspensions and deposits of $234,532,000 in 1929. Question: What constitutes a "financial panic"?
"To this end he (the President) summoned to the White House industrial leaders of the Nation and obtained from them a promise to maintain existing wage scales as long as it was possible to do so." (From keynote speech of Senator DICKINSON.)	On December 30, 1931, the American Federation of Labor informed the Senate Committee on Manufactures that wage losses in the United States in 1931 as compared with 1929 were $11,000,000,000 for wage-earning class and $7,000,000,000 to $9,000,000,000 additional for the salaried workers.
"More than 2,000,000 families in the United States earn their living to-day producing goods for export, and another million families earn their living in the manufacture of raw materials which we import in exchange for our exports." (Speech of Candidate Hoover, Newark, N. J., September 17, 1932.)	Total foreign commerce for first five months of 1932 was $1,363,969,000 as compared with $4,162,725,000 for first five months of 1929. Decrease, $2,798,756,000, or more than two-thirds. (From official reports, United States Department of Commerce.)

In order to show the extravagant promises made by the Republican Party four years ago I herewith also include the following article from the Baltimore Evening Sun, reproducing word for word the full-page advertisements printed in behalf of Mr. Hoover when he was campaigning four years ago.

[The Evening Sun, Friday, June 17, 1932]

Do you remember when—

"A CHICKEN FOR EVERY POT

"The Republican Party isn't a 'poor man's party.' Republican prosperity has erased that degrading phrase from our political vocabulary.

"The Republican Party is equality's party—opportunity's party—democracy's party, the party of national development, not sectional interests—the impartial servant of every State and condition in the Union.

"Under higher tariff and lower taxation America has stabilized output, employment, and dividend rates.

"Republican efficiency has filled the workingman's dinner pail—and his gasoline tank besides—made telephone, radio, and sanitary plumbing standard household equipment. And placed the whole Nation in the silk-stocking class.

"During eight years of Republican management we have built more and better homes, erected more skyscrapers, passed more benefactory laws, and more laws to regulate and purify immigration, inaugurated more conservation measures, more measures to standardize and increase production, expand export markets, and reduce industrial and human junk piles than in any previous quarter century.

"Republican prosperity is written on fuller wage envelopes, written in factory chimney smoke, written on the walls of new construction, written in savings-bank books, written in mercantile balances, and written in the peak value of stocks and bonds.

"Republican prosperity has reduced hours and increased earning capacity, silenced discontent, put the proverbial 'chicken in every pot.' And a car in every back yard, to boot.

"It has raised living standards and lowered living costs.

"It has restored financial confidence and enthusiasm, changed credit from a rich man's privilege to a common utility, generalized the use of time-saving devices, and released women from the thrall of domestic drudgery.

"It has provided every county in the country with its concrete road and knitted the highways of the Nation into a unified traffic system.

"Thanks to Republican administration, farmer, dairyman, and merchant can make deliveries in less time and at less expense, can borrow cheap money to refund exorbitant mortgages, and stock their pastures, ranges, and shelves.

"Democratic management impoverished and demoralized the railroads, led packing plants and tire factories into receivership, squandered billions on impractical programs.

"Democratic maladministration issued further billions on mere 'scraps of paper,' then encouraged foreign debtors to believe that their loans would never be called, and bequeathed to the Republican Party the job of mopping up the mess.

"Republican administration has restored to the railroads solvency, efficiency, and par securities.

"It has brought the rubber trades through panic and chaos, brought down the prices of crude rubber by smashing monopolistic rings, put the tanner's books in the black and secured from the European powers formal acknowledgment of their obligations.

"The Republican Party rests its case on a record of stewardship and performance.

"Its presidential and congressional candidates stand for election on a platform of sound practice, Federal vigilance, high tariff, constitutional integrity, the conservation of natural resources, honest, and constructive measures for agricultural relief, sincere enforcement of the laws, and the right of all citizens, regardless of faith or origin, to share the benefits of opportunity and justice.

"Wages, dividends, progress, and prosperity say, 'Vote for Hoover.'"

The stirring description of Elysium printed above is a word-for-word reprint of one of the full-page advertisements printed in behalf of Mr. Hoover when he was campaigning four years ago. In view of the fact that he was yesterday renominated by the Republican convention, the material has a certain piquant interest.

SPEAKER GARNER

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-quarter of a minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. I simply want to take this opportunity of extending the felicitations of the minority Members of the House on the return of our Speaker to his accustomed duties. [Applause.]

We hope he has entirely recovered his health and will be with us the balance of the session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair congratulates the House on this exhibition of Christian spirit. [Laughter and applause.]

For the past five or six days the Chair has had an opportunity to think calmly and uninterruptedly for the first time in six months, and he has come to a final conclusion on one subject, and that is that the greatest blessing God can give man is health. [Applause.]

The Chair wishes every Member of this House the greatest of blessings, good health.

INVESTIGATION OF CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts (H. Res. 202).

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, not to exceed $25,000 for the expenses of the select committee appointed under authority of House Resolution 201 to investigate the campaign expenditures of the various candidates for the House of Representatives in both parties.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 2, strike out "$25,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$10,000."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I think it is appropriate for me to call the attention of the House and to again remind Members that when we pass resolutions calling for investigations they cost money.

Each year in the legislative appropriation bill there is set aside the sum of $50,000 for the appointment of special and select committees. I wish to inform the House that if we pass the resolutions to-day, which have come out of the Committee on Accounts, this special fund for the fiscal year of 1933 will be overdrawn by approximately $25,000, and that we must hastily secure an estimate from the Budget and go to the Senate and increase our fund by that much. Of course, it is nothing new for the House to exceed that amount.

During the fiscal year 1931 there was expended for investigations $105,000. During the fiscal year 1932 there was expended $70,000, and inclusive of the two resolutions I am now presenting there will be expended during the fiscal year 1933 the sum of $75,000. This particular resolution called for the expenditure of $25,000. So far as I now recall the first committee set up by the House to investigate campaign expenses was in 1929, and I believe the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] was the chairman of that committee. The Committee on Accounts authorized $20,000 for that investigation, but there was actually spent $4,775.69. In 1931 a similar committee was set up by the House, again under the chairmanship of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], and $10,000 was authorized. However, that committee did not spend five cents. The Committee on Accounts has amended this resolution to authorize the expenditure of $10,000.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I compliment the chairman of the Accounts Committee for cutting down the amount. Probably the committee will not spend much this year, but I think it is proper that such a committee should be set up so that if there is any reason for an investigation there is some source to which we may go. I would like to ask the gentleman how many investigations we have going at the present time.

Mr. WARREN. We have the investigation which was authorized by an almost unanimous vote, coming from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, in reference to holding companies. We have the investigation of the silver question being conducted by the Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures. That investigation was approved by the almost unanimous vote of the House. Then we have this one for campaign expenditures and then we have the Shannon committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Outside of the regular hearings by our regular committees I want to ask the gentleman if he considers that any good has come from all of the investigations that have been authorized, such as the coal investigation, which cost $600,000, the Graham of Illinois investigation, and the Walsh investigation, which cost hundreds of thousands of dollars, and all the others we have had in the last 12 years? Does the gentleman know of one single thing that has been accomplished by such investigations or any good that has come from them?

Mr. WARREN. Frankness compels me to say I do not.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope we will stop this continual expenditure of money for investigations that accomplish nothing.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. I agree with what the gentleman has just said, especially with respect to his response to the gentleman from Texas. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the next order of business before the House this afternoon will be House Resolution 226, which provides for another one of these investigations. The committee provided for in the resolution is given unlimited authority to go anywhere and investigate anything which the committee might think advisable. I hope the gentleman will join with us on this side in trying to conserve the resources of the country and not create another investigating committee at this time.

Mr. WARREN. I know nothing about that resolution, but I am certainly open to reason on it.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I intended to wait until the Sabath resolution was offered before presenting to the House a few facts with reference to what we have been doing in the House in the last four years. Up to four years ago the House authorized occasional investigating committees, but in the last few years the House has been as crazy as the Senate was four years ago in appointing special committees, and the expense has been tremendous. None of these committees has accomplished much of anything. These investigations lead nowhere. I have continually opposed them in the Committee on Accounts, but we can not stop them in the Committee on Accounts. The House authorizes these committees, and that is a mandate to the Committee on Accounts to provide a sufficient sum to carry on the work of those committees. All of the committees established have cost in the neighborhood of a half-million dollars, yet there has not been one single constructive piece of legislation brought about, so far as I have been able to learn.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman condemned all investigating committees of Congress that have been formed. I want to ask the gentleman this question: Does the gentleman mean to say that the Senate oil investigation was not of benefit to the country?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I am not responsible for what the Senate did or does. I would hate to have that on my conscience, but I am partially responsible for what the House does. These committees are asked for in the best of good faith, but when they get into the subject they find they can not accomplish what they expect to accomplish.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to draw the gentleman's attention to the action of the special committee of the Public Lands Committee in connection with the investigation of oil-shale matters during the Seventy-first Congress. We were denied any funds whatsoever, but that investigation was continued for months. Not only did actual good come out of it but hundreds of people who had been denied their rights had their claims adjusted, and there was a change in the personnel of the department concerned. Yet the Committee on Accounts refused to recognize that special committee and refused to give it any money.

Mr. UNDERHILL. That proves that the regular committees of this House can function and carry on public business without special committees and additional expense. If the standing committee to which the gentleman has referred could accomplish such good results, then all the rest of the committees can function equally well.

Mr. WARREN. In response to the inquiry made by the gentleman from New York, I omitted to state that the House has already authorized an investigation with reference to Judge Louderbach in California.

I wish to say in this connection that the Judiciary Committee came in here and had passed a resolution, without consulting the Committee on Accounts or its chairman, and it was passed by the House without our knowledge. Of course, the money would, no doubt, have been authorized; but as a courtesy to the Committee on Accounts, the Judiciary Committee should certainly have come to the Accounts Committee.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am sure that on reflection the gentleman will realize that on a matter as delicate and as specialized as that of the judicial conduct of a judge, the Committee on the Judiciary must act and can not refrain from acting by consulting another committee.

Mr. UNDERHILL. That has been the general practice.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We have not yet asked for an appropriation. Of course, I am speaking for myself, because I can not speak for the committee, but we can not submit any review of the necessity of investigating the judicial conduct of a judge to any other committee.

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman entirely misunderstands.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And the Committee on the Judiciary is the only place where the conduct of a judge may be subjected to scrutiny. There is no other source, and it is not a pleasant duty.

Mr. WARREN. The Committee on Accounts does not review such things. We merely determine, after the House has acted, how much money shall be authorized.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Exactly. I do not believe we have come to the gentleman's committee for any appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. You do not have to now. That is just the point.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the last word, in line 5, a colon and the following: "Provided, The official committee reporters shall serve said committee at its meetings in the District of Columbia."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the reason for this amendment? It is somewhat unusual in this character of resolution to insert such a provision requiring the committee reporters to serve.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The House has on an annual basis reporters of committees; and where a special committee can secure the services of the official committee reporters, the Committee on Accounts felt they should serve such special committee instead of having the money which is usually paid for such services paid to outside help.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is the first time I have known of any such limiting provision incorporated in a resolution.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. This is an economy year.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer another privileged resolution (H. Res. 271) from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 271

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the investigation authorized by House Resolution 235, creating a special committee to investigate Government competition with private enterprise, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by the committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Accounts, but shall not exceed $15,000.

With the following committee amendments:

In line 7, strike out "$15,000" and insert "$10,000."

Insert after the last word in line 7 a colon and the following: "Provided, The official committee reporters shall serve the said committee at its meetings in the District of Columbia."

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7912) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order, a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-four Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment numbered 77.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following preferential motion which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SIMMONS moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 77 and agree to the same with the following amendment:

In lieu of the matter inserted by such amendment, insert the following:

"GRASSHOPPER CONTROL

"For aiding States in the application of such methods for the control of grasshoppers as in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture may be necessary to prevent crop losses, $600,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended (a) by State officials for purposes other than the purchase and transportation of poison bait or materials used in its manufacture, (b) for the payment for any such bait or materials except that which may be contracted for subsequently to the date of the enactment of this act, or (c) for labor in the local distribution or application of any such bait or materials except upon the public domain: Provided further, That before payment by the Department of Agriculture for poison bait or materials purchased by any State, all such purchases shall be certified by the head of the State agricultural college and the State entomologist or two comparable State officials responsible for its use: Provided further, That in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture no part of this appropriation shall be expended for grasshopper control in any State until the necessary State or local organizations for cooperation in carrying out the purposes of this paragraph has been established: Provided further, That in no event shall the Federal Government be responsible for the use or application of such poison bait or be liable to any State or any political subdivision thereof, or to any organization, individual, firm, or corporation, for any loss or damage resulting from the spreading or application thereof."

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, most of the Members of the House know this amendment covers what is known as the grasshopper pest. My motion is that the House further insist upon its disagreement. I think the matter has been thoroughly discussed on two different occasions, and most of the Members of the House know what is presented in the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska. Does the gentleman from Nebraska desire any time?

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask the gentleman to yield me 15 minutes.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS]. At the conclusion of his remarks I shall yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], and at the conclusion of his remarks I shall move the previous question.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, this matter has been before the House on one other occasion for discussion. At that time it contemplated an appropriation of $750,000, to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in an effort to control the grasshopper outbreaks in the Western States. The House rejected that plan. We are before the House to-day with a plan whereby $600,000 and not $750,000 is to be appropriated, to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in aid of those States that are now putting on a campaign. The proposal that we had before on the other occasion did not have the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture. The plan that we now submit has the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, and in my time I ask that the Clerk read the following letter from the Secretary of Agriculture to Mr. BYRNS on this amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

JUNE 20, 1932.

Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BYRNS: With reference to the proposed appropriation of $600,000 for grasshopper control, I desire to call your attention, and that of your committee to the developments and present status of this proposal.

On June 10 I directed a letter to Hon. J. B. BUCHANAN in which I recounted the many efforts of this department to secure from Congress the authority and the funds to carry out a campaign of grasshopper control under Federal direction. Those efforts persisted from February 4, when the President sent to Congress the original draft for the appropriation, down to May 14, when the Chief of the Bureau of Entomology, Dr. C. L. Marlat, and I appeared before a group of interested Representatives and stated that unless the authority and the funds were made immediately available any Federal control campaign would, on account of the lateness of the time, be ineffective. Congress failed to grant the authority and the funds and this department accordingly advised the States that a program carried out under Federal direction would be impossible.

It appears now that several of the States immediately embarked upon State programs of control, using such means and such funds as were available. The season in the States affected has been later than was anticipated, and the stage of development of the grasshoppers has been thereby retarded. The States and local subdivisions thereof are in many instances seriously hampered by lack of funds.

For the last week the department has had its agents engaged in making field surveys of the situation. Based upon their reports, it now appears that while it is too late to conduct a control campaign under Federal direction, much good can be accomplished and considerable of the crop prospects saved by grants of funds to aid the States financially in the purchase of poisoned bait or materials therefor, thus availing ourselves of the machinery set up by the States or counties and supplementing them beyond the point where their resources might otherwise fail.

From the foregoing considerations I have the honor to recommend the appropriation of a suitable sum, say $600,000 which may be used to assist the States affected in the purchase, after this date, of poisoned bait.

Sincerely,

ARTHUR M. HYDE, Secretary.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL].

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to say frankly that when this grasshopper item was first called to my attention I took the same view that many other Members of the House took. I was inclined to treat it lightly and as a joke. However, I have given the matter more than perfunctory consideration since that time and am firmly convinced that the great Northwest is threatened with a real devastating menace if something is not done by the Federal Government to help those States. The letter of the Secretary of Agriculture has just been read, but I am afraid few Members on the floor got the real purport of it. The Secretary began as far back as February an effort to bring the Federal Government into this picture.

It is true that in May when a subsequent effort was made to revive the matter he advised that it was entirely too late then for the Federal Government to effectively take part, but since that time, I call the attention of the House to the fact the Secretary of Agriculture has had his agents out in the Northwest section and has determined, notwithstanding the lateness of the season, that the Federal Government can now join with the States and help them very materially in their own program to curb these pests. I would be a very ungrateful person indeed if I did not take the floor at this time and make an appeal to the membership of the House to support the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska, since I appeared on the floor of this House a number of times and appealed to the membership in behalf of the great Corn Belt to have the Government help in protecting us from the corn borer. I hope the gentleman's amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN].

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, during the past two discussions of this proposition a large number of Members have considered the matter more or less as a joke, but I appear before you to-day in all seriousness and ask your aid in trying to do something to save the growing crops of eight States in the Middle West. The grasshopper menace has become so bad that millions of acres of growing crops will be destroyed unless cooperation is given by the Federal Government to aid the States and the individuals in the States to do something to control this pest. Gentlemen, you will be interested to learn that the State of Minnesota has taken $150,000 out of its treasury to fight the grasshoppers in our State. The business men of St. Paul and Minneapolis have pledged $500,000 to fight this pest in the States of Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Montana, so it will be seen that there is local contribution as far as Minnesota is concerned. I hope the House to-day will approve this amendment for $600,000 as a Federal contribution to help those States fight this pest.

What does it mean if we are not able to control the grasshopper situation in these agricultural States? It simply means that the $22,000,000 which the Government has already invested in loans for seed for these growing crops which are now being destroyed will be lost to the Government. It will mean that millions and hundreds of millions of dollars invested in real-estate mortgages by the Government there will be lost, in addition to the interest on the money which the Federal Government has loaned. Therefore I appeal to you to support the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Members of this House can accuse me of being one of those who has ever advocated that the Federal Government go entirely out of its sphere to aid the States; but I remember that the people down in my State in the past have been afflicted with the boll weevil, with the pink bollworm, with predatory animals that were destroying our property. The Congress of the United States came generously to our help and did untold service for us. I do not think that this proposal for money to be expended to exterminate pests in the States that are afflicted goes any further out of the way than a hundred things we have already done in Congress. I therefore believe it is the duty of this House, in the light of what we have done in the past, to come to the help of these people whose crops are being ravaged by the grasshopper.

I have seen the ravages of these grasshoppers in my own district, and I know that there is nothing that is as great a blight to crops as the grasshopper. I have lived in an agricultural section all my life, and I do trust that this House in its wisdom will come to the aid of these people whose acres are being laid bare by the ravages of the grasshopper. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, it may seem strange for a city Member to be interested in this difficulty under which the people of the Northwest are suffering. I am willing to vote for this appropriation because I believe the menace is serious and is worthy of the support of the city Members; but I want to change the scene a bit, and I want to draw the attention of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], and the other gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MCGUGIN], and the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS] to a situation that developed in the House the other day when the gentlemen from those agricultural States refused to help those who came from the larger cities on the question of the distribution of flour by the American Red Cross, with the privilege to the Red Cross of exchanging that flour for food, for the poor starving families of New York City, Chicago, Boston, and the other large cities.

I will vote for this amendment, but I want you gentlemen to remember that I helped, and when the time comes you help us. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I have only recently returned from the Northwest, and I say to the House that the situation up there with reference to the grasshopper menace is very, very serious. The Federal Government has in the past several years made advances to the farmers of the Northwest. Last year vast areas of the Northwest were destroyed by drought. If the crop is destroyed this year by the grasshoppers, the Government will recapture but a small part of the money that has been advanced for seed and feed. If our wheat crop is destroyed for the want of $600,000 to control the grasshopper situation, it will be reflected in an increase in the cost of food to the people of the big cities. It is a business proposition, my friends, and I appeal to you to help us get this appropriation so that we may control the situation there. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, like the gentleman from Texas, I had a sad personal experience with grasshoppers. When I was a small boy my parents located on the extreme frontier of northwestern Kansas, and for three years everything we planted was eaten by grasshoppers. We were compelled to practically walk out of that country, disheartened and completely bankrupt, so I know what this scourge is. Four years ago we had an invasion or scourge of large black crickets in my district in northwestern Colorado. I went before the Agricultural Appropriations Committee and they gave me an appropriation of $8,000 for three different years. And the officials of the Department of Agriculture superintended the work and the local people did the actual work for three consecutive years, and they have completely wiped them out. It is money well spent, and I hope the House will grant this appropriation. The people of that devastated region are entitled to this relief. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS].

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I trust the Members, particularly on my side of the House, will give this matter consideration. There are four or five States, in particular the Dakotas and Montana, that are absolutely under this scourge. You do not have any idea, if you never saw it, what the grasshopper scourge is. As I boy I saw them for a week when we could not see the sun. I saw them when you could not leave your hat or coat on the fence without having it chewed to pieces. I saw them when they actually ate rake handles and pitchfork handles. I saw them leave nothing but a standing tree, which had leaves on it before. That is the condition to-day.

We are not beggars. We are simply afflicted with a scourge. We ask you people in the name of humanity to come to our rescue now, and see if we can not remedy this situation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I have no more interest in this appropriation or in its defeat than any Member here. But I wish to say to the House, if the Committee on Appropriations can sit day after day in an effort to save the money of the people and then because a few Representatives from a limited section of the country ask an appropriation of $600,000 for purposes not recommended by the committee, and it is appropriated over the protest of the committee, then there is nothing we can say. I do not believe the House will do it.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. No; I can not yield for the moment. Let me make a connected statement, and then I will yield if I have the time.

What is the history of this appropriation? The gentleman from Nebraska, who seems never to realize that there ought to be a time when the Members of the House should not be called upon to continue to vote upon a proposition, came to me last February and he told me then when it was not authorized that if he did not get this appropriation by March 1 it would do no good; and then, later in March; told me April 1; and now here it is June 21, the middle of summer, and we are asked to vote $600,000 out of the Treasury to kill grasshoppers. Senator SHIPSTEAD, in his telegram, which I will print in the RECORD, said if this appropriation were not made last week it would be too late; why insist on it now?

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes; just briefly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think this ought to be said——

Mr. BYRNS. Just for a statement.

Mr. SIMMONS. Just for a statement. At that time we were talking about a Federal campaign of control. Now we are asking money to help the States carry on their own campaigns.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman made his own explanation of that. I am coming to that feature.

What is the history of it? The Senate put this in for $1,450,000. Then the gentleman from Nebraska offered a joint resolution authorizing $1,000,000. A motion was made to suspend the rules and pass this resolution, and without debate a majority of the House refused to second the motion to suspend the rules. It came back to the House as part of the agricultural bill probably two weeks ago, and the gentleman from Nebraska moved to concur with an amendment reducing the appropriation to $750,000, and the House by a record vote or 214 to 124, or a majority of 90, refused to adopt his amendment.

Then it went back to the Senate, and the Senate insisted on its appropriation of $1,450,000, and we are now asked to appropriate $600,000. I suppose if you vote this down you will be asked next time to vote $400,000.

When are we going to have an end to this thing? When are we going to tell the Senate that we do not change our minds over here every other day? When is the Senate going to understand that the House of Representatives does not change its mind simply because somebody asks it to do so?

Now, what is the story? Mr. BUCHANAN printed in the RECORD a letter of the Secretary of Agriculture, and I am going to ask that all this correspondence go in the RECORD because I want to show you how in three days the Secretary of Agriculture has changed his mind and now would have you vote $600,000 out of the Treasury without rhyme or reason and after he had told the House it could not be used. Who was it that brought about this change? Was it my friend from Nebraska, or was it the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN], or somebody else who went down there and got the Secretary of Agriculture to change his mind?

Mr. HOWARD. I did not.

Mr. BYRNS. And how is it——

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I can not yield. And why is it that the Secretary of Agriculture, the head of a great department, who the gentleman from Nebraska or some other gentleman said had been investigating this matter since last February, told you upon June 11 that it was entirely too late to do any good, and that the appropriation should not be made? Is this change of opinion keeping faith with the repeated appeals of the President to reduce appropriations? Is the President to be put in a false position by one of his own Cabinet members? I know what I would do under such circumstances, if I were President.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I can not yield, and I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me further. I want to be courteous to the gentleman, but I want him to be courteous to me and respect my wishes.

Mr. SIMMONS. The gentleman asked a question, and I want to answer it.

Mr. BYRNS. Well, I ask the gentleman to please let me proceed. I know the gentleman's object, but I am not going to let him disturb my presentation of the matter from my viewpoint.

Here is the letter from the Secretary of Agriculture printed in the RECORD upon June 11, in which the Secretary says that it is too late to use this fund.

I hold in my hand a telegram written in confirmation of that letter. The telegram is dated June 16, last Thursday. What does it say? It says:

HON JAMES P. BUCHANAN,
Washington, D. C.:
Present information does not justify change in department's attitude regarding grasshoppers expressed letter to you.
ARTHUR M. HYDE,
Secretary of Agriculture.

No later than last Thursday he sent that telegram. Yet, on Monday, on yesterday, I received the letter which has been read here. Now, what has come over the spirit of the dream of the Secretary of Agriculture? What information has he had since last Thursday that caused him to change his mind and ask you who voted yesterday to cut the salaries of Government employees $100,000,000, to appropriate $600,000 out of the Treasury to please a few of our esteemed friends upon this floor?

If you are in favor of economy here is a chance to show it. I hate to oppose this appropriation. There sits my good friend, the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. HOWARD, who has made an earnest fight for this appropriation and for whom we all have a high regard. There are other friends, like the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. SHALLENBERGER, and Mr. MOREHEAD, who are insistent about this matter; but if you wait to get everybody to agree to a cut in an appropriation, you will never get anywhere.

What does the Secretary say in his letter written yesterday? He says they have established clubs and organizations out there in a few States who can use this money and he wants us to hand it over to them. We have heard a great deal about the dole. We have heard a great deal in opposition to the dole, but this is nothing more nor less than a dole to these organizations.

The Secretary, in this letter, proposes to take the $600,000 and turn it over to organizations out there in these States organized to fight this pest. I wonder if politics has had anything to do with this sudden change of mind on the part of the Secretary. One thing I do know and that is that there are many Republicans in this House who are not going to let politics control them in voting on this or any other appropriation.

If you start this sort of business and if you set this sort of precedent—and this is the first time it has ever been proposed to turn over Federal money in this manner, so far as I know—you are going to be beseiged by every State in the Union. Every time they find a new bug in some State they will be rushing here for a Federal appropriation. They came here from Florida and they got an appropriation for the Mediterranean fruit fly. They spent something like $8,280,000 and it turned out that most of it was wasted, and Congress is now being asked to appropriate millions of dollars to pay damages alleged to have been caused by the poison which was used. They talk about the corn borer and I think it was $17,000,000 that was spent on that, though I am not sure, and it turns out now that the only commercial injury that was ever done by the corn borer was on some sweet corn near Baltimore, and that is admitted by some of the experts of the Department of Agriculture.

I have no interest as against this proposition but I am interested in conserving the Public Treasury. I have been to my home in the last few days, and I want to tell you that every man I saw there damned Congress for not making reductions in appropriations. They were complaining because Congress had not reduced appropriations in a greater amount. That is the way the people are talking over the country, although not deserved. I am here to tell you that you never voted for a more indefensible proposition in your lives when you vote for this proposition, because you are simply taking $600,000 from the taxpayers in other States and turning it over to organizations in certain States, where it will be under State or possibly private control, and over which the Government has no control. If you vote for this you hand it over to them and tell them to spend it as they please. That is the whole proposition. You are setting a precedent, gentlemen, that is going to haunt you.

I want to ask this House, in view of its former vote, when by a record vote of 90 majority it turned this down, having before that defeated it by a big majority, how long is it expected that the United States Senate will continue to send this appropriation over here? Let us have an end to it. Gentlemen, this is the middle, or nearly the last, of June. You are practical men. Talk to me about making an appropriation now, which will not be available for 10 days, to kill grasshoppers. If they have done any damage it has already been done. If they have created any damage out there it is too late to avoid it. Why was it not brought up sooner? This agricultural bill was held by the Senate for several weeks. Why did they not send it over here?

I am opposing this amendment because the Secretary of Agriculture wrote his letter of June 11 after investigation and told us that it was unnecessary and he could not use it. I am against it because the Secretary of Agriculture was the first man to send a letter here telling us not to make this appropriation because he could not use it effectively. If he has changed his mind in three days because somebody has seen him, I want to say to him that I have not changed mine and I am not going to change mine under those circumstances. If every State is coming here because they have a pest or plague and ask the United States Government to help, not to send its experts, not to use its own officials, but to vote money to turn over to some State or private organization over which it has no control, you will not have enough money to meet those requests and those demands.

Gentlemen, the time has come when we should stop. We have wasted millions of dollars. Take this agricultural appropriation bill, and you will find in it thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars that have been appropriated from year to year for killing barberry bushes and things of that kind. Start this and they will be asking us next December for four or five times this amount and you will find, if you live long enough, that it will be 30 or 40 years before you ever get to the end. Let us practice economy and vote this down. [Applause.]

The correspondence referred to is as follows:

BUREAU OF ENTOMOLOGY,
June 10, 1932.

HON. JAMES P. BUCHANAN,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BUCHANAN: This is to confirm my verbal statement made at our conference of yesterday, that it is now too late for the department to carry on an effective control campaign against grasshoppers as provided in the estimate for an appropriation for this purpose.

The essential feature of any control campaign against grasshoppers is to poison the young locusts as they first emerge from the egg beds and before they have any opportunity to migrate from such areas into the fields. The grasshoppers have now hatched in practically all parts of the areas where heavy infestations were anticipated and a large portion of them have moved from the hatching areas. Since this dispersion has taken place, and because of the delays incident to the organization of a Federal campaign and the securing of the necessary supplies and materials, the opportunity for effective control under Federal direction is now lost.

It will be recalled that the original estimate submitted under date of February 4 pointed out that the campaign should be carried on in the spring. This fact was also explained at the time this item was discussed before the Senate committee on February 13. The need of prompt action was stressed on May 2 in connection with the hearing on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 377) before the House Committee on Agriculture. It was further emphasized in my letter to Congressman MARVIN JONES of May 7, at which time I stated: "If, therefore, the moneys under consideration were now available, even under the most favorable circumstances of completing contracts and securing of supplies * * * there is obviously a risk that this delay would materially lessen the success of the effort." The need of prompt action was further stressed on May 14 when, accompanied by Doctor Marlatt, Chief of the Bureau of Entomology, I discussed this question with a group of Representatives and Senators at a conference called by Congressman SIMMONS. The decisive action regarding the appropriation for grasshopper control taken by the House on May 16 appeared to close the door to any Federal appropriation for grasshopper control, and accordingly on May 18 I sent letters to the governors of various States suggesting that the States, counties, and persons in interest prepare to carry on the necessary control campaigns.

Sincerely,

ARTHUR M. HYDE, Secretary.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 16, 1932.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, June 20, 1932.

Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BYRNS: With reference to the proposed appropriation of $600,000 for grasshopper control, I desire to call your attention and that of your committee to the developments and present status of this proposal.

On June 10 I directed a letter to Hon. J. B. BUCHANAN, in which I recounted the many efforts of this department to secure from Congress the authority and the funds to carry out a campaign of grasshopper control under Federal direction. Those efforts persisted from February 4, when the President sent to Congress the original draft for the appropriation, down to May 14, when the Chief of the Bureau of Entomology, Dr. C. L. Marlatt, and I appeared before a group of interested Representatives and stated that unless the authority and the funds were made immediately available any Federal-control campaign would, on account of the lateness of the time, be ineffective. Congress failed to grant the authority and the funds, and this department accordingly advised the States that a program carried out under Federal direction would be impossible.

It appears now that several of the States immediately embarked upon State programs of control, using such means and such funds as were available. The season in the States affected has been later than was anticipated, and the stage of development of the grasshoppers has been thereby retarded. The States and local subdivisions thereof are in many instances seriously hampered by lack of funds.

For the last week the department has had its agents engaged in making field surveys of the situation. Based upon their reports, it now appears that while it is too late to conduct a control campaign under Federal direction, much good can be accomplished and considerable of the crop prospects saved by grants of funds to aid the States financially in the purchase of poisoned bait or materials therefor, thus availing ourselves of the machinery set up by the States or counties and supplementing them beyond the point where their resources might otherwise fail.

From the foregoing considerations I have the honor to recommend the appropriation of a suitable sum, say, $600,000, which may be used to assist the States affected in the purchase, after this date, of poisoned bait.

Sincerely,

ARTHUR M. HYDE, Secretary.

The following telegram of Senator SHIPSTEAD and the reply thereto appear in the RECORD of June 17:

Hon. ARTHUR M. HYDE,
Secretary of Agriculture, Morrison Hotel, Chicago, Ill.:

Letters and telegrams coming from Northwest telling of tremendous hatching of grasshoppers. Your letter of June 10 to Congressman JAMES P. BUCHANAN influenced the House of Representatives in killing appropriation intended to be used to stop impending devastation of crops of Northwest. Bureau of Entomology informed me to-day that if funds can be made available this week it will still not be too late for effective use. If you will withdraw letter to Mr. BUCHANAN and back the Department of Entomology with another letter favoring an appropriation, another effort will be made to obtain funds for this work.

HENRIK SHIPSTEAD.

CHICAGO, ILL.

Senator HENRIK SHIPSTEAD:

Present information does not justify change in department's attitude regarding grasshoppers as expressed letter to BUCHANAN.

ARTHUR M. HYDE,
Secretary Department of Agriculture.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska to recede and concur with an amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SIMMONS) there were—ayes 72, noes 102.

So the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana to further insist upon the House disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 82: On page 95, line 15, strike out "$175,408,814" and insert in lieu thereof "$177,424,768."

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment numbered 82 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$175,671,665."

The motion was agreed to.

INVESTIGATION OF CERTAIN MATTERS AFFECTING THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the resolution (H. Res. 226).

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 226

Whereas the deficit in the Post Office Department of late years has increased beyond all reason; and

Whereas it is charged and evidence has been submitted before several committees that these deficits are due to excessive air mail, railroad, and steamship transportation, as well as to the reckless and extravagant prices paid for land and leases for post offices; and

Whereas it is also charged that collusion exists between contractors and the bonding companies which makes it virtually impossible for independent contractors not in the combination to obtain bid bonds and thereby prevents competitive bidding; and

Whereas it is charged that collusion exists between architects, contractors, and others whereby changes in plans and specifications have been made after contracts have been let and whereby inferior materials and equipment contrary to those originally specified have been substituted; and

Whereas it is charged and evidence has been submitted to the effect that it is proposed to purchase power, light, and heat for Government buildings and additions thereto at exorbitant rates and under unjustifiable economic conditions, which, if carried out, will result in further increases in the postal deficit; and

Whereas it is further charged that plans and specifications covering engineering work for Government buildings are at times poorly drawn, which results in contractors placing higher bids than they would have otherwise placed, in order to protect themselves against the uncertainties occasioned by the said poorly drawn plans: Therefore be it

Resolved, That for the purpose of obtaining information necessary as a basis for legislation the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, as a whole or by committee, is authorized to investigate (1) if the contracts entered into for carrying mail, whether by air service, railroad, or steamship, are excessive and to what extent they should be reduced; (2) if the prices paid for land or sites acquired for post-office buildings in the last 10 years are reasonable or exorbitant and to ascertain the actual amounts paid for each site in excess of $10,000, and the names of those who have negotiated the purchases as well as the leases; (3) all contracts entered into for the construction of all post-office buildings wherever the cost of such buildings was in excess of $100,000, and to secure the names of all contractors; (4) to what extent collusive agreements have been sanctioned by the Treasury and Post Office Departments; (5) to what extent collusive agreements, if existing, have affected Government work from financial, architectural, and engineering standpoints; (6) prices paid and contracts entered into for power, light, and heat and, in addition thereto, estimated cost for generating power, light, and heat in buildings now under construction and contemplated where plans have been drawn and where the cost of building is above $500,000; and (7) the first costs and the operating costs for generating power, light, and heat for all Government buildings.

The committee shall report the results of its investigations to the House with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out the preamble.

After line 15, page 3, insert:

"For such purposes the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned; to hold such hearings, to employ such experts, and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants; to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents; to take such testimony, to have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures as it deems necessary, not exceeding $10,000."

Mr. SABATH. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] desire any time on the resolution?

Mr. PURNELL. I hope the gentleman will give me the usual 30 minutes.

Mr. SABATH. I do not propose to take up a great deal of time, but if the gentleman desires time I shall yield him the usual amount.

Mr. PURNELL. Could the gentleman possibly give me 40 or 45 minutes? I have so many requests for time against the resolution that I can not take care of all of them.

Mr. SABATH. I have a great many requests myself, but I thought we would expedite the matter, inasmuch as practically everybody is for it anyway. However, I shall give the gentleman all the time he is entitled to and all that the rules and regulations provide.

I yield the gentleman from Indiana 30 minutes.

Mr. PURNELL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, when the Post Office appropriation bill was under consideration about five years ago I made certain inquiries of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee in an effort to secure some information about certain leases and the reasons why certain post-office sites had been purchased. Since that time I have made some observations in regard to other leases entered into by the postal authorities two years ago. Since then I have been receiving a great deal of information and a great many inquiries asking why the Government and the Congress permit the post-office authorities to enter into such unfair and unjustifiable leases, and at the same time why they should purchase properties and sites for post offices and pay, in many instances, 100 or 200 per cent more than the market value for them.

I do not desire to make any charges against anyone to-day. This is the first time in 25 years that I have brought up a resolution to investigate a matter, and if it had not been for the fact that many individuals in various sections of the country have implored me and appealed to me I would not have introduced this resolution.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I notice the resolution provides that this investigation shall be carried on by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Is that committee asking for the passage of this resolution?

Mr. SABATH. I have talked to the chairman of the committee and he feels they do not have the power to make this investigation. For this reason he thought such a resolution should be passed.

Mr. MICHENER. What I am interested in is this: The committee did not appear before the Rules Committee and ask for this legislation, and I wondered whether it is the idea of the gentleman from Chicago only or if it has any support from any other committee of the House.

Mr. SABATH. I may say that the chairman of the Post Office and Post Roads Committee, being a new chairman of that committee, is not, I presume, familiar with all of the complaints that have been lodged against and all the abuses that have occurred in the department.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman said that the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads is a new member and that he is not familiar with the duties of his office——

Mr. SABATH. No; I have not said that.

Mr. MICHENER. I resent that. I think he is a capable man.

Mr. SABATH. Please do not misquote me. I want to be fair, and the gentleman knows I am fair. I have not said that. I said that the gentleman has not been informed or acquainted with some of the misdeeds and some of the transgressions and abuses in that department.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman, being a member of the Committee on Rules, of course knows that we have a committee of the House on expenditures and that that committee needs no authority to make just such an investigation as the one provided in this resolution. If the gentleman from Illinois had presented any evidence to that committee, the committee would have taken the matter up.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman's committee has been very busy. The gentleman and his committee have been trying to carry on some additional investigations and some additional work with respect to the economy program, and I felt it would be an imposition to put these additional duties and burdens on that committee.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. In reading the resolution I do not find it covers an investigation of leasing contracts or rentals, and so on. Does the gentleman intend to cover that in this investigation?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; the resolution covers that.

Mr. PARSONS. It is not mentioned specifically, only by indirection.

Mr. SABATH. I want to bring to your attention some facts which have come to my notice this morning.

Here is a Washington morning paper, and I want you gentlemen to listen to this:

Failing to post a performance bond with the Government, the Great Lakes Construction Co., of Chicago, has lost its contract to build the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Labor Department Building. The contract will now go to the second bidder, James Stewart & Co., of New York, which offered to do the work for $9,081,000.

As against $8,846,000.

Now, in my resolution I provide that we should investigate the collusive agreements between contractors and bonding companies.

Four months ago it was brought to my attention that a contractor who is not in the ring can not secure any Government construction work. That is a serious condition, and we should not permit anything of that kind to go on. Last week my attention was called to another contractor on Government work, who said that he was prevented from giving a bond because he did not belong to the combination. The same thing occurred in the Chicago post office. There were four different contractors who could not secure even a bond permitting them to make a bid.

I have talked with some of the contractors, and they say that collusion exists between the surety companies and some contractors and that, as a consequence, they have no chance to get it at all.

In view of this condition and in view of the fact that we are preaching economy and trying to do everything we can to save money for the Government, I believe that you should find out why these conditions exist and whether there is any real foundation for the complaint. If there be such things they should be stopped in the future. I know that all of you men are desirous of doing what is right and for that reason I feel that you will, after duly considering this measure, support it and authorize the committee to look into this matter, because I am not providing for a special committee or for a fifty or a hundred thousand dollar expenditure; all I provide for is $10,000, and I am leaving it to the Post Office and Post Roads Committee to look into these abuses that have been called to my attention in the last few months.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time. I have already yielded 30 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL].

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself five minutes. This resolution, gentlemen, ought not be adopted for a number of reasons. In the first place, it came out of the Committee on Rules without any hearings. I will say to you frankly, as one member of the Rules Committee, I learned for the first time from the gentleman from Illinois, when he spoke on the floor, the purpose he had in his mind when he introduced the resolution.

It was reported out of the committee at the close of a busy session of the Rules Committee without any discussion whatever. It gives almost unlimited power and authority to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads which they have not asked for. I know that no member of the Committee on the Post Office has asked for the passage of this political "smelling committee," and that is exactly what it is.

I am sorry the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] is temporarily absent from the Chamber. I am sure he will vote against this resolution, and I call upon you Members on the Democratic side to follow your economy leader.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] gave a suggestion a moment ago in his question which ought to be emphasized and given heed, and that is that we have a Committee on Expenditures in this House with sufficient authority to do what is sought to be accomplished by this resolution. I will ask the gentleman from Missouri if that is not a fact?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Absolutely, we do not need any authority from the House, and I know that no information has been given to our committee that would warrant it in holding hearings. I will say further, that if they will give us the information, I will call a meeting of that committee to-morrow.

Mr. PURNELL. That is a fair statement. We are here in the concluding days, I hope, of this session. If there was some definitely needed information, and we were in the middle of a session, I should be inclined to give more than passing consideration to the question of appointing a committee to look into such evils as are alleged to exist in order that the information might form the basis of legislation.

But we are asked to appoint a committee for the purpose of sitting during the recess, and in my judgment, if appointed, it will be nothing more nor less than a political snooping committee. I have heard nothing from the gentleman, my good friend from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] that would justify me in asking anybody to investigate anything.

Mr. SABATH. If the gentleman wants facts I can give him facts.

Mr. PURNELL. The gentleman has 20 minutes more, and I hope he will devote part of that time to that purpose. As I say, I have heard nothing from the gentleman that would justify me in asking anybody to investigate anything or vote to vest authority in a committee which does not ask it and give it an appropriation of $10,000 with which to start. Mark you, I say start, because if a committee of this kind sets out to investigate all of the ramifications set forth in this resolution the original $10,000 provided for in the resolution would not pay interest for 30 days upon the amount that will be ultimately expended before the investigation is concluded. There is no justification for it, there is no reason for it. No one is demanding it, and again let me suggest, it opens the way for another one of those investigations which, as we all know, starts with a small amount and runs into tremendous figures. The resolution ought to be voted down, and the membership of the Democratic side which a moment ago stood up so squarely against the grasshopper item, as they thought for economy, ought to join with us in defeating the resolution.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL].

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] brought out through a question from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] the point that I wish to emphasize, and that is that there is no real necessity for the House to take action on this resolution at this time because the House, if it feels there is something that ought to be investigated, has a medium through which it can act. I am always doubtful of any resolution or bill that carries a preamble. It always seems to me that the preamble is for the purpose of bolstering up a weak case. We have a preamble here taking about two pages setting forth a whole lot of things which says that "evidence has been submitted," and the gentleman from Illinois says that evidence has been submitted. If it has been submitted, and it is satisfactory to the gentleman, why does he not take it to the Department of Justice, where it belongs, or submit it to the district attorney out in Chicago? It seems to me that the whole proposition here lies in a row between two different factions in the city of Chicago, and they expect us to spend $10,000 of money raised in other sections of the country for the purpose of giving some benefit to one or the other faction.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. I assure the gentleman that there is no Chicago faction involved in this, and this is not a factional or a sectional matter.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I thank the gentleman, but I call attention more particularly and specifically to the fact that in all my experience here I have yet to find one special committee that has justified the expenditure of the money appropriated to carry on special investigations.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman made that statement this morning. I do not believe that the gentleman would say that about the committee that investigated railroad holding companies.

Mr. UNDERHILL. There has been no report from the committee.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, yes; there has been a very thorough report.

Mr. UNDERHILL. What legislation has been based upon it?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Legislation has been introduced and reported out in relation to it. I do not think the gentleman would say that about the silver investigation.

Mr. UNDERHILL. They have not reported.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; they have a full report, and have come out with recommendations.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Have the recommendations been carried out? Let me call attention to the Mapes investigating committee. The Committee on Accounts reported out a certain amount of money for the Mapes committee, and no more capable, no more honest, no more efficient committee was ever appointed than the Mapes committee, and no more comprehensive report was ever submitted to this House. What good has it done? Not a particle. They have taken the District bill over on the other side of the Capitol, and have made the same appropriation of $9,500,000 or thereabouts.

Mr. O'CONNOR. We passed legislation in this session of Congress in respect to it.

Mr. UNDERHILL. It has not become effective. I am talking about results.

Mr. O'CONNOR. We can not control the other side of the Capitol.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Speaking about the railroad holding company investigation, that was made by experts and not by a congressional committee.

Mr. UNDERHILL. It was made, of course, with the help of experts. I am not criticizing any one of these committees, but I am criticizing the House for going off half cocked, not realizing that all of these investigations cost money, and that the only way that we can raise money is through the medium of taxation. If we brought about any remedial legislation, I would not be so keen in my opposition.

Mr. KETCHAM. Has the gentleman given attention to the fact that in another body a committee has been at work on this very identical subject for a long time, and that we have all of that information?

Mr. UNDERHILL. If there is anything under the sun, the moon, or the stars that another body has not investigated in the last six years, I have to hear of it, and its expenditures, which have run into the millions of dollars, have not resulted in a single iota of benefit to the people of the country. I hope this resolution will be defeated, and that the House will take a determined stand against further investigating committees.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS].

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, this resolution does call for the expenditure of money. That is the reason why the Committee on Expenditures of the House of Representatives could not undertake this job. That committee does not have the powers nor facilities granted under this resolution. It can not subpœna witnesses nor administer oaths. It has no money to spend for actual investigation. A genuine investigation, if it is not turned into a political forum, will be the greatest kind of economy. We all know the fight that was made in this House and later in the Senate on post-office leases. When that fight was initiated there was a great deal said about it being purely political, and that nothing would ever come of it. As a matter of fact, as a result of that effort an investigation was held. The investigation was started by the House committee. It was found that its powers were not broad enough, but sufficient evidence was brought out before this committee so that it made a recommendation to the House for a complete investigation. That merely covered the matter of leases, however. The investigation disclosed such startling information about the leasing, that the President himself announced the abandonment of that policy, which had been heretofore so ardently defended by the Post Office Department, and which was defended all during the time we were trying to get the investigation. We were told there was nothing wrong with those leases; that they were fine and sweet-smelling. As a matter of fact, they smelled to high heaven.

We found that the leases have gravitated into two leasing rings, who control practically all of the leasing of post-office sites from coast to coast. These leasing rings have issued bonds ranging from 200 to 1,000 per cent of the value of those properties. Yet it is said there is no justification for such an investigation.

Recently there has been a great deal of widespread criticism, suggesting that there have been some collusive agreements between contractors and supply firms, the architects, and the Post Office Department. I do not say there are those collusive agreements, but complaints are widespread throughout the country from competing contractors, to such an extent that it will remain as a blot unless it is investigated and we find out whether the charges are true or not. When those charges are made as generally as they are being, in justification to the Post Office Department itself and to the Treasury Department, we should have an investigation. We should find out whether those charges are justified; and if they are not justified, after a competent, impartial investigation, the departments should be vindicated. If the Members who are opposing this resolution are convinced that there is nothing which needs investigating, certainly there is nothing to fear from the investigation. The Post Office Department and the Postmaster General should be the first to demand such an investigation. In view of the charges that have been made, they should insist upon this House conducting an investigation.

This resolution also takes up the question of air mail subsidies. There has been a great deal of criticism in the past that the air mail subsidies have been tainted with fraud. That suspicion is more or less general. There has been the charge made that the air mail subsidy has not been administered efficiently, as well as the ship subsidies. Those charges should be investigated.

As a matter of fact, I think a very excellent piece of work has been done in building up the great transcontinental air routes, but I do think that within the past year or so the problem has become so great and the Post Office Department has been so busy politically that they have not been able to devote their attention to the administration of this fund. The Postmaster General and his assistants have been away from the department, and they have turned over the administration of this $20,000,000 air mail fund to subordinates. That should be looked into. We have an enormous investment from the standpoint of national defense involved in the air mail subsidies. If there is fraud involved, we want to know about it. It is real economy if we can eliminate wasteful or fraudulent expenditures of Government money.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman has taken a great deal of interest in this matter. Can the gentleman assure this House upon his own personal responsibility that he is in possession of sufficient facts to justify this investigation?

Mr. MAAS. Absolutely. So much so that the facts I presented before the Committee on Expenditures, when that committee was headed by a Republican chairman, came before the House with a resolution asking authority for this same thing.

The Senate committee investigated leases. Their authority was limited exclusively to the question of leases, and sufficient facts were developed by that committee to justify a complete investigation of the whole department, with probable recommendations of a complete realignment and reorganization of the Post Office Department.

But for a few thousand dollars spent by that committee in its investigation, millions of dollars will be saved in excessive rentals. Already we have saved one hundred times what has been spent. There is no question but that these leasing rings have gotten away with at least $150,000,000 in the last 10 or 12 years; and if this leasing situation had been permitted to continue, they would have gotten away with another $200,000,000 in the next 10 years. All of this information has come out under oath, and by documentary evidence. If that has been true in the leases, it certainly justifies an investigation of all of the other expenditures of the Post Office Department. In fact, I can not see how this House can conscientiously refrain from investigating, in view of what has been disclosed before the House committee and the Senate committee and the Federal Trade Commission, which has also investigated certain phases of this situation.

Of course, we do not have complete documentary proof with which we could go before a court, or we would not be asking for the investigation. We would go before the court with it, but there is sufficient evidence to justify an investigation. An investigation is what is being asked for. The court part may come later. I do not see how anyone can justify refusal to have this committee of the House investigate these serious charges. There is a distinction between political charges and serious charges of this nature. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOGG].

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, we have had so many ideas expressed in the last few minutes that it is time to get away from opinions and ascertain just what the facts are in regard to the activities of the Post Office Department. It has been suggested that there is a possibility of fraud in the letting of the air mail contracts.

The Post Office Committee of the House during the present session conducted hearings over a period of several days concerning air mail contracts. The gentleman from Minnesota appeared three times before the committee. No one said anything about fraud. The Postmaster General, Mr. Brown, appeared and gave an extended accounting of his stewardship. All questions were answered by him with candor. No information requested from the department was withheld. These hearings are printed and available. What, then, are the facts?

The Postal Department is spending for carrying air mail less than one-fourth of the Government's total expenditures in the interest of aviation. No other nation approaches the magnificent system of air mail which we have. You can send a letter from New York to San Francisco in 30 hours for a nickel. This postal service has done more than all other things combined to encourage aviation. It needs no defense. Mr. Brown should have the thanks of the American people for his splendid work.

Total expenditures for aviation in one year are as follows:

National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics	$1,012,300
Department of Commerce, Aeronautics Division	8,929,660
Navy Department, Bureau of Aeronautics	26,660,000
War Department, Army Air Corps	25,482,903
Post Office Department, air mail	16,942,454
Total	79,027,317

A substantial part of the air mail appropriation is returned in the postage on air mail. America is justly proud of its air mail system. No other expenditure has produced such results.

This resolution would require the expenditure of a large sum of money. Our country demands real economy. I am opposed to the resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS].

Mr. MAAS. I wish to take this minute to reply to the gentleman from Indiana. The gentleman was present at all sessions when I appeared before the committee, and I did testify before the committee and submitted evidence that the specifications for bids on air mail contracts were so written that only the favored bidders could possibly submit a bid. I gave specific illustrations of that very situation.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Has the gentleman read the hearings?

Mr. MAAS. Yes; I have. Have you?

Mr. LAMNECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield.

Mr. LAMNECK. Is it not a fact no original air mail contract has ever been made by the Postmaster General that was not made under competitive bidding?

Mr. MAAS. That was not under competitive bidding?

Mr. LAMNECK. Yes.

Mr. MAAS. Under the law it is supposed to be competitive bidding, but there never was actually any competitive bidding. The evidence before the committee showed there never were any competitors.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] that the Committee on Expenditures has never been too busy, and never will be too busy, as long as I am chairman, to investigate fraud provided a responsible official or responsible person will present evidence to the committee that will warrant an investigation.

I have not missed a session of this House since I have been a Member of it. I am here every day. The gentleman from Illinois has never approached me about this subject. He has never asked for a hearing before the committee. The same applies to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS]. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS] did appear before the committee in the last Congress, but a Senate committee was formed after the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS], took his evidence to the other side. That committee is still in existence. It has not made its final report, and I just confirmed this over the telephone by talking with Senator BLAINE'S office.

Mr. MAAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. MAAS. The Senate committee is limited exclusively to leases. That is the only subject they are authorized to investigate.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I would like to know what authority the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads has to investigate public buildings. This resolution provides for such an investigation.

The Committee on Appropriations has gone into the question of mail subsidies for the merchant marine. I think if you will read the record and the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARNOLD], made before this House in this session, you will find that they have gone into that subject and very thoroughly.

The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MONTET] made certain charges on this floor in reference to a mail contract with a line running between Key West and Habana, Cuba, I believe it was, and those charges are now in the hands of the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries which has jurisdiction over the White Act.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That was not an air mail contract; that was a steamship contract.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That is right, not an air mail contract but the new ship is to carry mail.

If you will turn to page 81 of the economy bill which we passed yesterday and will read sections 320 and 321, you will find that the Economy Committee has inserted legislation in that bill that will prevent just exactly what the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Minnesota complain about in reference to leases of public buildings. It places a limitation on the department.

So far as I am concerned, I shall remain in Washington, if necessary, to investigate during the summer any charges that will be placed before the Expenditures Committee if the committee after considering the charges deem an investigation is necessary. One should never be too busy to investigate a fraud on the Government.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. Would the gentleman favor an amendment giving his committee jurisdiction to make this investigation?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. We do not need authority; we have the authority now.

Mr. SABATH. The committee has no authority to expend any money.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. We do not need any money to determine if there are grounds for an investigation. If we discover fraud in a preliminary investigation we can get money, if necessary.

We can investigate right here in Washington, starting with Government officials. We can call the Postmaster General; we can call the Secretary of the Treasury. We can hear the Supervising Architect. We can hear members of the Building Commission.

Mr. SABATH. That I am not very much interested in.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. We can get the Government officials before our committee in 24 hours. It will not take long to determine if an investigation is necessary if you will give the committee the evidence you claim to have.

Mr. MAAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. MAAS. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Postmaster General when called before the Senate committee absolutely refused to testify and refused to make his records available.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I may say to the gentleman from Minnesota that no Cabinet officer has ever refused to appear before the Committee on Expenditures or has ever withheld records. One Cabinet officer balked a bit on one occasion, but he finally agreed to appear.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman expect to get the information necessary in reference to such an investigation out of the Cabinet officers?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I think that is one way to get the information. We must start somewhere. If we find it necessary to go ahead with an investigation and have the facts to present to the House that would warrant an expenditure of public funds to make the investigation, we will come in here and ask for the money.

What I desire to impress upon the House is, you have created a committee of 21 members to make just such investigations as is provided for in this resolution. A committee that has never refused to work. I know this because I have been a member of that committee since the day it was created. The committee, however, must have some specific information before it can start an investigation. If Members of the House want to be heard on any bill or resolution within the jurisdiction of the committee, they have been and will be accommodated. The committee has many requests for investigations. A Government employee loses his job; he is naturally put out; he comes to the committee and wants this man or that man or department investigated. The committee requires that the charges be placed in writing, and then it considers whether an investigation is warranted. If the Members who claim they have evidence of fraud will present it to our committee, they will get action if action is warranted. There is no necessity for a special committee or to spend $10,000 until the evidence upon which the Members demand the investigation is presented and considered. We can get department records and department officials without trouble, and we can demand that they disprove the charges the Members present. What more can you ask? Remember, there is always a reaction when some one makes charges that he can not support by evidence. Give the Committee on Expenditures an opportunity to hear your charges, and you will get action if action is warranted. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, our distinguished Speaker, who has happily returned to health and who has been occupying the Chair this noon, has issued a very momentous statement which I believe the membership of the House should know about as suitably as possible. Among the many courageous things the Speaker has stated in that statement is the following, and I ask your respectful attention concerning it.

When the prohibition amendment was proposed I, as a Member of Congress, voted against it. I have never believed it sound or workable, and it should be repealed.

[Applause.]

Now, gentlemen, in these days of ballyhoo and buncombe, in these days when Republicans in convention assembled lacked the courage to say what they mean, when a Republican President and his Cabinet force upon delegates—most of whom can not call their souls their own—a prohibition plank of weasel words, is not the statement of our distinguished Speaker as refreshing as the cool air in the heat of summer? There is a statement that is courageous, forthright and honest, and I commend it to the gentlemen on the minority side, and I ask the Democratic delegates about to assemble in Chicago to take heed. The country expects them to be just as forthright, just as honest and just as courageous as the Speaker. Let there be no evasion. Let there be no subterfuge. The country wants what the Speaker wants—"repeal."

It is interesting to note—and it is well to put this in large red letters so that he who runs may read—so that Democratic delegates may read and heed—that those who now have their hats in the ring, the distinguished Speaker; the governor of my State, Mr. Roosevelt; the former governor, Mr. Smith; Mr. Young; Mr. Baker; Governor Ritchie; and Mr. Traylor, are all for repeal.

In no uncertain language have they made their sentiments known to the Nation, and particularly to the Democratic Party. It is well indeed for the delegates about to assemble to realize that their candidates will be for out and out repeal. The Democratic plank should embody that in the simplest language. The Nation demands it.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Would it not be a good idea for the gentleman to make that speech at the convention rather than here?

Mr. CELLER. No. It is a good idea to tell gentlemen on both sides of the aisle that both parties are really for repeal, as the distinguished Senator from Idaho said yesterday. The Republican Party is for repeal but lacks the courage to say so. I want my party, in forthright, honest, and courageous language to say it is for repeal, no more, no less. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert all of the statement issued by the Speaker of this House, as given to the press.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement referred to follows:

Many of my friends, not only those residing in my own district and State, but throughout the country, have asked me repeatedly to express myself on various public questions. I have maintained the position I assumed when I was elected Speaker of the House of Representatives, that I would not indulge in the discussion of controversial issues not immediately under consideration by the House. Moreover, during the 30 years I have been a member of Congress, practically every principle involved in the problems of the Nation to-day have been before the House, and my views thereon are a matter of record.

This country has erected tariff barriers that are practically excluding the products of foreign nations. This makes it economically impossible for those nations to buy from us the products of our farms and our factories, thereby aggravating our industrial depression.

All relief measures so far have been purely temporary and do not go to the root of the trouble. No sound, thinking citizen can favor the dole; neither can the Government sit idly by and see its people starve when they are willing to work. Enough work must be provided to keep the people from starving, and we shall be fortunate indeed if this irreducible cost minimum does not greatly exceed the amount provided in the relief measures which I sponsored.

Before genuine and permanent relief can be accomplished the finances of the basic industries of this Nation must be placed on a saner basis, thereby removing the specter of receiverships and foreclosures and restoring their buying power and ability to employ labor.

International trade must be reestablished by the restoration of international confidence and credits. Honesty among nations is as essential a virtue as honesty among individuals. An individual who borrows and makes no honest effort to pay is dishonest; the same applies to a nation. If foreign debts should be cancelled, the credit of the nations involved would be destroyed and they can not borrow again. The Government of the United States owes it to its citizens to collect from the debtor nations to the extent of their ability to pay, and there should be no flimflam accepted as to that ability to pay.

When the prohibition amendment was proposed I, as a Member of Congress, voted against it. I have never believed it sound or workable, and it should be repealed.

The cost of government—city, county, State, and national—can and should be reduced not less than one-third.

The principal obligation of a government established in accordance with the American principles and traditions is to protect all of its people in the free enjoyment of the fruits of their labor and the pursuit of happiness. The constantly increasing tendency toward socialism and communism is the gravest possible menace. The Government should use every means within its power to prevent their further spread, and they should receive no encouragement from any American citizen, high or low.

The Democrats of California and of my native State, Texas, are sending delegations to the national convention in Chicago instructed to vote for my nomination for the Presidency. This has been done without my solicitation. I appreciate the support of my friends, and am willing to serve my country and my party to the limit of my capacity.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, again we have an illustration of Democratic economy. If the Democratic majority in this House to-day sees fit to adopt this resolution, they will simply be following along the lines they followed yesterday when they wanted to put through a bill under suspension of the rules that would have provided another $100,000,000 for highway construction. This is simply putting the camel's head under the tent and giving an opportunity to spend a nice, fat sum of money.

The gentleman says they are only asking for $10,000. Well, we know from history the manner in which deficiencies are paid for as the result of special investigations.

It is a very interesting thing to me that neither the Post Office Committee nor the Committee on Expenditures comes forward with the slightest interest in this resolution, and that those committees have done nothing in an effort to have it adopted.

Where is the chairman of the Post Office Committee? Has he appeared here to advocate the adoption of this resolution or to take away from the power already vested in his committee by appointing a subcommittee to carry on this particular line of investigation?

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] has appeared here and has violently opposed the adoption of the resolution, as the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures, and the gentleman offers to sit here voluntarily during the summer, if the slightest information is presented to him, and receive such evidence as may be submitted to him.

Let me call the attention of the House to the fact that it is very apparent there are a few of our colleagues who are anxious to get back at somebody for something, and this is really the purpose of the resolution. We have heard the conditions in Minnesota discussed time and time again, and we are willing to believe that so far as conditions locally in Chicago are concerned, they are pretty rotten, but I do not think that has anything to do with governmental affairs.

Further, I want to call the attention of the House to the type of power granted this committee if the resolution should be adopted. I am particularly interested in the language beginning in line 7, paragraph 2, in relation to post-office buildings, to see whether sites acquired during the past 10 years have been acquired at prices that were reasonable or exorbitant and to ascertain the actual amount paid for each site in excess of $10,000.

Why should a special committee, having nothing whatever to do with constructing buildings for the Government, be endowed with power to inquire, over a period of 10 years, whether in their personal opinion these prices were fair and reasonable? What a ridiculous proposition to try to take it out of the hands of the Treasury Department, where such power rests, and place it in the hands of a committee that has never had the slightest thing in the world to do with the subject matter of the resolution.

The same idea can be applied throughout the resolution. I hope the resolution will be defeated by the common sense of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, we to-day witness a very unusual situation in the consideration of so important a resolution. There seems to be no one for the resolution, no one back of it, no one asking for the resolution except the gentleman from Chicago [Mr. SABATH], supported by the gentleman from St. Paul [Mr. MAAS].

I am not going to discuss at all the purposes or the reasons for the resolution, but I am going to make a few observations in reference to the resolution itself and just what it provides.

You know I am not surprised at all that all the members of the Rules Committee on the other side of the aisle have deserted the gentleman from Chicago, leaving him alone here to defend his bill. [Laughter.]

I see the gentleman from New York has arisen, and I, therefore, qualify my statement to the extent that the gentleman from New York City is willing to stand up and say he has not deserted the gentleman. Then here comes my good friend from Georgia [Mr. Cox], who, I am sure, will not take the floor for one minute and advocate the passage of this resolution. I say this because I serve on the Rules Committee with the splendid and distinguished gentleman. I know his inclinations. I know what he thinks of legislation. I know what he feels to be the duty of the Members of this House, and, knowing him as I do, I do not hesitate to say, without fear of successful contradiction, that unless the gentleman receives the inspiration this very moment from the gentleman from Chicago, he will not take the floor and defend the resolution.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Surely.

Mr. COX. Lest the impression be made that I am unfavorable to the resolution, I would like to say that as a member of the committee I voted for it to come out and there goes with that, the implication that I favor the resolution.

Mr. MICHENER. Oh, the poor gentleman from Georgia! If the gentleman could only tell the House how many times he votes to report resolutions and bills out, with which he is not in sympathy at heart, I am sure it would be a tale interesting to all the Members here. The gentleman says that such action carries with it the implication that he is going to vote for the resolution, but we all know the gentleman well enough to know that when his heart is for a thing of this kind, the gentleman is on the floor defending it. The gentleman would be shoulder to shoulder here with the splendid gentleman from Chicago, but the gentleman does not believe in the resolution. I do not believe the gentleman does. Of course, I may be wrong. I can not look within a man's heart, and see, but I just know from the way the gentleman usually considers matters of this kind——

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MICHENER. Certainly.

Mr. COX. I am sorry the gentleman has used me as an argument against the resolution. As a matter of fact, while I appreciate the compliment the gentleman has bestowed upon me, I think well of the resolution.

Mr. MICHENER. I am surprised. The gentleman says he thinks well of the resolution. The gentleman is a good lawyer. Let us see what the resolution provides.

Mr. COX. Let me state that I am in favor of the purposes of the resolution.

Mr. MICHENER. The resolution provides, first, that all contracts ever made or entered into for the carrying of the mail, whether by air or railroad or steamship, shall be investigated by this committee. A stupendous task.

Second. All contracts covering lands for post-office sites purchased in the last 10 years shall be investigated.

Third. All contracts entered into for the construction of post-office buildings, up to the amount of $100,000, shall be investigated, and that the names of all the contractors shall be secured.

Fourth. The committee must ascertain to what extent collusive agreements have been sanctioned by the Treasury and Post Office Departments.

No collusion is alleged, but this committee is to go through the highways and byways, making search to find out, if possible, if any collusion has taken place.

Fifth. To what extent collusive agreements, if existing, have affected Government work from financial, architectural, and engineering standpoints.

Sixth. Prices paid and contracts entered into for power, light, and heat, and in addition thereto, estimated cost for generating power, light, and heat in buildings now under construction and contemplated, where plans have been drawn, and where the cost of the building is above $500,000.

And then the small amount is appropriated to do this stupendous work. If this work is laudable, if the work should be done, we should at least entrust the task to a friendly committee, we should not force it on any committee which says it is not necessary, and we should not limit the amount to such an extent as to make the very purpose of the bill a joke; because you can not begin to do this thing for $10,000. If I voted for the resolution, I would ask $100,000 of the people's money be appropriated to go to the very bottom of the thing.

Gentlemen, the people of this country do not want any more investigations of this kind. If an investigation is advisable it should be nonpartisan and thorough, and this resolution will accomplish nothing but possibly some publicity, which does not tell the whole story. The country wants the Congress to balance the Budget, practice economy, appropriate relief where it is needed, and go home. [Applause.] They do not want this committee to go roaming about the country creating more distrust in the Government. This is no time for muckraking, and if there was ever a time when we should stress the virtues of our Government it is now. If there is corruption in government, those guilty should be punished, but these times require facts, not suspicion, and this resolution will not get the facts, but on the other hand will create more distrust. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York three minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I can not concur in the thought just advanced by the gentleman from Michigan that the way to inspire confidence in the Government is to refrain from investigating when there are charges of wrongdoing. I can not subscribe to that.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] says this resolution is only for "the purpose of letting the committee hound somebody." That charge is rather broad, but I do not hesitate to say that I expect to be right after every air mail contractor who refuses to give their employees a square deal.

Permit me to say that the air mail contractors have only themselves to blame if they are to be investigated as a result of this resolution. Until they treat their pilots and personnel and mechanics fairly and justly I am going to hound them. I serve notice right now of that fact.

The purpose of our air subsidy policy is to encourage aviation industry and aviation personnel. That is the primary purpose. The fact that the subsidy is made through postal contracts is only incidental. Some of the postal air mail contractors understand this. Others are seeking to hog the whole thing. The primary purpose is to develop the manufacturing of up-to-date planes for passenger and mail transportation. That means that subsidized operators must at all times have the very best of equipment for their planes and motors. Within this primary purpose is also that of keeping a well-trained flying personnel as well as training and keeping of first-class mechanics. I repeat, the operation of the lines and subsidy paid to them is to carry out these purposes. Therefore along with the best of motor and plane equipment the flying personnel must have the very best of treatment in salary and working conditions and a voice in all matters pertaining to flying conditions. Operators enjoying Government subsidies must understand this condition, and unless they live up to it I, for one, will do everything within my power—and I know that there is a very large number of Members who will agree with me—not to permit them to draw huge amounts from the Public Treasury and treat their personnel unfairly and unjustly. I served notice on the operators not very long ago, and other Members of the House warned them that unless they indicated by their action and treatment of the pilots and mechanics that they would live up to all requirements for which subsidies were paid, a thorough investigation would follow.

There are some good contractors who have a proper appreciation of the responsibility of pilots. There are good contractors that keep their equipment in shape, but unfortunately they must suffer on account of the selfishness, poor management, and greed of the other contractors. There is no place for hogs and exploiters in aviation.

Mr. Speaker, I served notice on them a few weeks ago that they had to change their attitude. I introduced a bill to bring all the air personnel within the provisions of the railroad labor act, so that pilots could adjust their differences and be free to make suggestions as to flying conditions and safety appliances without being discharged or penalized. The Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce, which has nothing to do with the matter, filed protests in the matter. Mr. Laurence had better attend to his own business or else he will be responsible for killing the aid, assistance, subsidies, and help that aviation is getting from the Government.

I have been trying to get that bill out of the committee. I am going to keep pounding until I can get the air pilots under the railroad labor act and give protection to pilots and other employees the same as the law accords to others employed in railroad transportation.

Statements have been made to-day that complaint has not been heard concerning the administration of ship subsidies under the merchant marine act. That is not so. I personally have appeared before committees and have repeatedly informed the membership, right from this floor, of very grave abuses in the administration of subsidies under the merchant marine act. The award of the contract to the Seatrain Co., to my mind, was nothing short of a scandal, if not a crime. When I exposed the facts this House did not hesitate to insert a proviso in both the postal appropriation and the independent office appropriation bills prohibiting the payment of money in loans or for services under this contract. I still believe that the contracts and the giving of ships to the American Export Co. was most imprudent, and I always suspected that it was tainted. I laid the facts concerning the American Export Co. on the desk of the President of the United States. I laid it on his desk, but the American Export Co. is still operating ships. I believe the thing to do, if we are going to continue the policy of subsidies, is to ventilate the entire administration of the law and expose it and to get all of the facts, and compel a decent, intelligent, prudent administration of that law. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] said that "the people of this country did not want any more investigations."

We might as well be perfectly frank about the situation here to-day. Instead of saying "the people," the truth is "the Republicans do not want any investigation." In the Rules Committee, eight Democrats voted to report this resolution; all the Republicans voted against reporting it. Why? Nothing was then and there said about "economy."

I am willing to wager that the vote, when it is taken on this resolution, will be strictly political; because for the past 12 years at least, every post-office site, every lease of a post office, has been a question of patronage. Why, Mr. Speaker, it would be impossible to spend as much money as has been spent on them—honestly. It would be impossible to spend $75,000 or $100,000 for a post office in certain villages, unless there was patronage in it. Since the Republicans have been in control of the Government how often have they ever bought or leased a site from anybody but a Republican? That is why they do not want the situation investigated. Cite an instance if you can; cite one to the contrary. Name one Democrat from whom a site was purchased or a building leased.

This talk about the Expenditures Committee having jurisdiction is not true in fact. All members of the Rules Committee know that committee does not have the power. Every committee of this House comes to the Rules Committee for power to investigate, to subpœna witnesses, to examine documents. No committee has that power except by a special rule. Likewise the Post Office Committee has not the power except by a special rule such as this.

During all this session I have chafed under the flood of loose words in this Chamber.

Now, let us talk politics plainly. The Republicans were talking here to-day about "economy."

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] went over the extravagance of spending $10,000 under this resolution. Why, the minority is practicing deception in talking about the possible $10,000 to be spent in this investigation. That opposition is just as sincere, that economy plea you were talking about yesterday and to-day is backed by just as much sincerity as your plea of cooperation or nonpartisanship. There has been no cooperation on your part during this session. There has been partisanship in every move you have made, and there will be until the end of the session. Every time you have talked about economy you have been insincere, and you did not mean it. Where were you with your economy during the past 12 years you have been in power, when, as a result of your economy, you thrust our country in the depths of distress and depression, piling up on us billions of dollars of a deficit? You talk about economy! You protest against spending $10,000 to reveal millions of dollars of graft! You thought nothing of wasting $500,000 on the Wickersham Commission.

Now, let us stop this false talk about cooperation, nonpartisanship, and economy. When we come back for the next session let us spread our cards out on the table face up, and let you say, "We are Republicans," and we will say, "We are Democrats," and let us go to it. The reason you do not want this investigation is that every spot it will touch will be Republican, not Democratic. Let us be frank about it. Every Democrat should support this resolution. I am sure every Republican will be against it, solely for the reason that it is directed against expenditures under a Republican administration. You are partisans, you have been partisans every day and every minute of this session of Congress. The Democratic majority has had no cooperation from you on economy or anything else. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

All time has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment to the body of the resolution.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment striking out the preamble to the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 190, nays 138, not voting 102, as follows:

AMELIA EARHART PUTNAM

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, as the Representative in Congress from Westchester and Rockland Counties, New York, it is my special privilege, and I consider it a great honor, to introduce to my colleagues in the House the first woman to fly the Atlantic, the first woman to fly it alone, and the first pilot, either man or woman, to cross the ocean twice in an airplane.

Yesterday this House authorized the President of the United States to present her with the distinguished-service medal in recognition of her brilliant accomplishment. All the world joins the United States in rendering her the homage which she so richly deserves.

No woman is more gentle and no man more courageous. I present to you Amelia Earhart Putnam, of Westchester County, N. Y. [Applause.]

COLLECTION OF IMPORT DUTIES, VIRGIN ISLANDS

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 4367, to enable the collection of import duties on foreign-made goods entering the Virgin Islands through parcel-post mail, and consider the same at this time. This is an administration bill dealing slightly with changing the customs laws of the Virgin Islands. It involves no expense whatever to the Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Let the bill be reported.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of an act entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the West Indian Islands acquired by the United States from Denmark by the convention entered into between said countries on the 4th day of August, 1916, and ratified by the Senate of the United States on the 7th day of September, 1916, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1917 (39 Stat. 1134; U. S. C., title 48, sec. 1395), as amended by the act of February 25, 1927 (44 Stat. 1235; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 48, sec. 1395), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That until Congress shall otherwise provide all laws now imposing taxes in the said West Indian Islands, including the customs laws and regulations, shall, in so far as compatible with the changed sovereignty and not otherwise herein provided, continue in force and effect, except that articles the growth, product or manufacture of the United States shall be admitted there free of duty: Provided, That upon exportation of sugar to any foreign country, or the shipment thereof to the United States or any of its possessions, there shall be levied, collected, and paid thereon an export duty of $6 per ton of 2,000 pounds, irrespective of polariscope test, in lieu of any export tax now required by law: Provided further, That the internal-revenue taxes levied by the Colonial Council of St. Croix, or by the Colonial Council of St. Thomas and St. John, in pursuance of the authority granted by this act on articles, goods, wares, or merchandise may be levied and collected as the Colonial Council of St. Croix, or as the Colonial Council of St. Thomas and St. John, may direct, on the articles subject to said tax, as soon as the same are manufactured, sold, used, or brought into the island: And provided further, That no discrimination be made between the articles imported from the United States or foreign countries and similar articles produced or manufactured in the municipality of St. Croix, or in the municipality of St. Thomas and St. John, respectively. The officials of the Customs and Postal Services of the United States are hereby directed to assist the appropriate officials of the municipality of St. Croix, or of the municipality of St. Thomas and St. John, in the collection of these taxes."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman make a brief explanation of the bill? I am acquainted with the measure, but I want to know whether the Senate bill is identical with the provisions of the bill recommended by the House committe.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, in 1916 the United States acquired by treaty the Virgin Islands from Denmark. In the treaty it was provided that the laws in force in the Virgin Islands at the time we acquired them from Denmark should remain in force and effect, except that any commodity or product grown, produced, or manufactured in the United States should be permitted to enter the Virgin Islands free. The old laws under the Danish rule still apply, with that exception, and the only way the three cities of the islands meet their expenses is by levying taxes on goods imported. They do not collect sufficient amount of taxes to pay their expenses, and the United States Treasury has to make up the deficit. It is believed if this bill is passed those cities will become more nearly self-sustaining. This bill is an administration bill. It was sent to the Ways and Means Committee by the Treasury Department and also to the Senate committee, and the bills are exactly alike. The Ways and Means Committee had before it some of the officials of the Government, and the Ways and Means Committee unanimously reported the bill with a favorable recommendation. The only practical effect the bill has is to permit the postal authorities and the customs authorities located on the Virgin Islands to assist the authorities of those municipalities in examining parcel-post mail to see that goods are not smuggled into those communities without paying the tax. Goods grown, produced, or manufactured in the United States, as I say, are permitted to enter free. The Postmaster General says his department has no objection to the bill, the Treasury Department says it has no objection to the bill, it is easily administered, and the Secretary of the Interior makes a similar statement. The Governor of the Virgin Islands was here urging the speedy and prompt consideration of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I understood that they wanted to collect some revenues to pay expenses of the cities, but on the other hand, that everything from the United States goes in free.

Mr. CRISP. Yes. The Virgin Islands are a part of the United States. The United States does not levy taxes on goods going from one State to another State, and the United States does not levy taxes on goods coming from Puerto Rico, and they can not collect taxes on goods shipped from here. This confers on the Virgin Islands the same right to have the assistance of these officials that is conferred upon the Puerto Rican government. That is all it does.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CONSENT CALENDAR

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order to consider the bills on the Consent Calendar to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. That is, those that would have been in order yesterday?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. With that qualification, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the calendar.

CONSERVATION OF WILD LIFE, ETC.

The first bill on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 263) to promote the conservation of wild life, fish, and game, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I am not ready with that bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

VIRGIN ISLANDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11363, relating to the immigration and naturalization of certain natives of the Virgin Islands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a similar Senate bill will be considered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a native of the Virgin Islands of the United States who is now residing in any foreign country shall for the purpose of the immigration act of 1924, as amended, be considered as a nonquota immigrant for the purposes of admission to the United States; but shall be subject to all the other provisions of that act and of the immigration laws, except that—

(a) He shall not be subject to the head tax imposed by section 2 of the immigration act of 1917;

(b) He shall not be required to have a passport or immigration visa;

(c) If otherwise admissible, he shall not be excluded under section 3 of the immigration act of 1917, unless excluded under the provisions of that section relating to—

(1) Persons afflicted with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease;

(2) Polygamy;

(3) Prostitutes, procurers, or other like immoral persons;

(4) Contract laborers;

(5) Persons previously deported; or

(6) Persons convicted of crime.

SEC. 2. The foregoing provisions of this act shall not apply to any such alien after the expiration of two years following the enactment of this act.

SEC. 3. An alien admitted to the United States under this act shall not be subject to deportation on the ground that he has become a public charge.

SEC. 4. Terms defined in the immigration act of 1924, as amended, shall, when used in this act, have the meaning assigned to such terms in that act.

SEC. 5. Section 1 of the act entitled "An act to confer United States citizenship upon certain inhabitants of the Virgin Islands and to extend the naturalization laws thereto," approved February 25, 1927, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(d) All natives of the Virgin Islands of the United States who are, on the date of enactment of this subdivision, residing in continental United States, the Virgin Islands of the United States, Porto Rico, the Canal Zone, or any other insular possession or Territory of the United States, who are not citizens or subjects of any foreign country, regardless of their place of residence on January 17, 1917."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. May I ask the author of the bill what was the purpose in extending the privileges to those who reside in the Canal Zone?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Because the last act of Congress touching the matter took in only a certain number who resided on the islands. The status of most of the persons born on the Virgin Islands is such they can not go back to their own Virgin Islands. It applies only to those who were born on the islands.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the pro forma amendment and shall offer a substantive amendment of a minor character.

I have examined the Senate bill. We are confronted with a little confusion arising out of the change of name from Porto Rico to Puerto Rico, and I offer an amendment to change the spelling to the ancient form, which has recently been modernized and accepted—Puerto Rico.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: On page 3 of the Senate bill in line 6, strike out "Porto Rico" and insert in lieu thereof "Puerto Rico."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATURALIZATION LAWS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10274, to amend the act approved March 2, 1929, entitled "An act to supplement the naturalization laws, and for other purposes" (45 Stat. 1512).

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and yield part of my time to the chairman of the committee for an explanation.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over to the next calendar day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HEIRS OF DECEASED INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6684, to amend the act of June 25, 1910, entitled, "An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the disposal and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the lease of allotments, and for other purposes," so as to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to modify the terms of certain contracts, when in his judgment it is in the interest of the Indians so to do.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to inquire of the author of the bill the reason the committee did not follow the recommendation of the department?

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent this bill may go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RESTORATION OF STATUS OF WARRANT OFFICERS, REGULAR ARMY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11174, to restore to their former retired status in the Regular Army of the United States persons who resigned such status to accept the benefits of the act of May 24, 1928 (45 Stat. 735), and for other purposes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this matter, I understand, is still in the courts. It is true that the Comptroller General rendered a decision as to the rights of these retired men, and then some additional or newly discovered evidence was submitted and a new decision was rendered.

The only right involved in these two decisions, they tell me, is the right to buy at commissaries, and things of that kind.

It seems to me that inasmuch as the case is still in court the matter should go over. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have the bill passed over without prejudice.

Mr. JAMES. This has nothing to do with post exchanges.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is the only privilege they are losing.

Mr. JAMES. This is a case where certain officers had to retire in order to come under a certain law.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They are getting their pensions.

Mr. JAMES. No.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, yes. I inquired about that, and they are not losing their pensions at all.

Mr. GOSS. This has been requested by the department, and the committee was unanimous in reporting it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I took up the matter with the Comptroller General and he says the cases are still pending in court.

Mr. JAMES. This has reference to retired pay.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I know, and they are not losing their retired pay at all. The gentleman can check that up. I would not stop it if that were so, but they are not losing their retired pay.

Mr. GOSS. It puts them back in their former status. They got out of this status to get this benefit.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They chose to go to court so let them abide by the court decision. We should not interfere at all. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10084, authorizing the city of Omaha, Nebr., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Missouri River at or near O'Hern Street, South Omaha, Nebr., and to acquire, maintain, and operate the existing toll bridge across the Missouri River between the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three objections are required.

Mr. SWANSON, Mr. ROBINSON, and Mr. THURSTON objected.

COLLECTION AND PUBLICATION OF STATISTICS OF TOBACCO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9590, to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the collection and publication of statistics of tobacco by the Department of Agriculture," approved January 14, 1929.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand the bill it broadens the territory for the gathering of statistics on tobacco. If the tobacco people believe that it will do them some good I am willing to abide by their judgment, but from my research of the subject I can not see that this particular survey and the publication of these yearly statistics is doing much good.

Mr. JONES. I will state to the gentleman that personally I am not familiar with tobacco, but a subcommittee was appointed and after hearing tobacco people that committee unanimously agreed that the bill would be beneficial.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I may say to the gentleman from New York that I do not think the present law goes far enough and I do not think this amendment goes far enough but it, at least, gives added information to the tobacco growers.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Do they heed that information?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It gives them this added information when they sit across the table from the man who buys the tobacco. The purchaser has information as to the extent of the tobacco crop. If the growers of tobacco can have information as to the quantity, quality, type, and grade of tobacco on hand that is helpful to them in making a better deal as to the price.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. As a matter of fact, when they get information—and this becomes interesting in the light of our whole attitude toward the control of production, if we can—as to the quantity of tobacco on hand, do they regulate their planting accordingly?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. There is more regulation going on now than heretofore. This bill provides for the reports for the three-fourths period of the preceding calendar year instead of the full calendar year. Under the present law, you do not get those data until after the season's crop has been disposed of. If you provide for the period of three-fourths the calendar year, the growers will have the information as to the quantity on hand, type and grade. That undoubtedly gives them some information that is of great help to them.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS. How much additional will this cost?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I do not think there is any substantial additional expense to it at all.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It will increase the source of information and, of course, it will mean more stationery and things of that sort, but I do not think the added cost will be very much.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The cost is not appreciable.

Mr. JENKINS. Is not this the principal argument in favor of the bill, that the information which would be of help to the man who sells his tobacco does not come out in time to give him the full benefit of the information which may be obtained as to the crop and the quality of the crop?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. If he sells his tobacco in December or January and the report is not available until February, the grower does not have the advantage of that knowledge in time for it to be worth anything. This would not mean any appreciable added expense.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there are two questions that are confusing me—one in particular—and that is as to the authority that is attempted to be conferred in section 2. What constitutional right have we to exact from any tobacco grower the furnishing of statistics without any return for his efforts in compiling such statistics?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. We have that right now, and we are exercising it under the present law.

Mr. STAFFORD. I question very much if any tobacco grower wished to set up the constitutional objection that there is no power in the National Government to exact the furnishing of such statistics as to his private business, whether his right would be questioned to decline to furnish the statistics.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I may say to the gentleman that the original grower is exempted from the operation of the section.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is stated here, "dealer, manufacturer, quasi manufacturer, warehouseman, broker, holder"——

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. "Other than the original grower."

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; but what right have we to exact from these designated persons or associations the furnishing of information without any compensation for such service?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The answer to that, I think, is that we have the same right the Census Bureau has to come in and collect such information.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is beyond his position so far as the constitutional prerogative as to the census is concerned. Under the Constitution we are authorized only to take a census of the population. This is not a census of population.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But the Census Bureau takes a census of other things.

Mr. STAFFORD. And I can cite the gentleman to a decision of one of the United States courts that absolutely negatives the right of Congress to call upon any individual to furnish information of this sort other than with respect to population.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I may suggest to the gentleman that the only amendment in section 3 is the addition of the words "quasi manufacturers," and limiting the time of the report from 15 days to 10 days.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am quite aware of that fact, but I am bringing up this constitutional question in view of the tenacity which the gentleman from Kentucky sometimes asserts on matters of constitutional rights.

This brings up the further question as to why the collation of these statistics should not be under the Census Bureau rather than the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman knows that even in the last census, besides taking a census of population, we took a census of the radios, a census of farms, and all sorts of matters.

Mr. STAFFORD. They were taken at the expense of the National Government, but here you are requiring a service from an individual which you have no right to exact without compensation. It is taking private property without due compensation at law, and wherever that prerogative has been asserted the courts have upheld the right of the individual to refuse the furnishing of the information. I may say here that in the economy bill yesterday we repealed a provision that was passed some years ago when I was out of Congress, unfortunately——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Unfortunately, for the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; fortunately for the bill. This provision required the collation of statistics on leather and the like, a needless expense put upon the leather manufacturers, requiring them to give information as to the amount of leather they may have in their possession.

I now put this direct question to the gentleman. Why are not these statistics compiled by the Census Bureau, as we do in the case of cotton rather than by the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I can answer the gentleman right to the point. Formerly the statistics were compiled in the Department of Commerce. The friends of the tobacco growers made specific request to have the statistics compiled by the Department of Agriculture, thinking it was more in keeping with their work and that they would certainly be more friendly to the farmer. I was one who made this fight to secure the change.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not think the gentleman from Wisconsin would argue that it would be constitutional for the Bureau of the Census and unconstitutional for the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; it is unconstitutional in either instance. I am simply taking the floor to point out to these growers that there is no power in the Constitution requiring them to do this work without paying them for it.

I withdraw the reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the collection and publication of statistics of tobacco by the Department of Agriculture," approved January 14, 1929, is amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to collect and publish statistics of the quantity of leaf tobacco in all forms in the United States owned by or in the possession of dealers, manufacturers, quasi-manufacturers, growers' cooperative associations, warehousemen, brokers, holders, or owners, other than the original growers of tobacco. The statistics shall show the quantity of tobacco in such detail as to types and groups of grades as the Secretary of Agriculture shall deem to be practical and necessary for the purpose of this act, and said statistics shall show the stocks of tobacco of the last four crop years, including therein the production of the year of the report, which shall be known as new crops, separately from the stocks of previous years, which shall be known as old crops, and shall be summarized as of January 1, April 1, July 1, and October 1 of each year: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall not be required to collect statistics of leaf tobacco from any manufacturer of tobacco who, in the first three-quarters of the preceding calendar year, according to the returns of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, manufactured less than 35,000 pounds of tobacco, or from any manufacturer of cigars who during the first three-quarters of the preceding calendar year manufactured less than 185,000 cigars, or from any manufacturer of cigarettes who, during the first three-quarters of the preceding calendar year, manufactured less than 750,000 cigarettes."

SEC. 2. Section 3 of such act of January 14, 1929, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of every dealer, manufacturer, quasi manufacturer, growers' cooperative association, warehouseman, broker, holder, or owner, other than the original grower, except such persons as are excluded by the proviso to section 1 of this act, to furnish within 15 days after January 1, April 1, July 1, and October 1 of each year, completely and correctly, to the best of his knowledge, a report of the quantity of leaf tobacco on hand, segregated in accordance with the blanks furnished by the Secretary of Agriculture. Any person, firm, association, or corporation required by this act to furnish a report, and any officer, agent, or employee thereof who shall refuse or willfully neglect to furnish any of the information required by this act, or shall willfully give answers that are false or misleading, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $300 or more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHIPPEWA INDIAN TERRITORY IN MINNESOTA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9495, to establish the boundary lines of the Chippewa Indian Territory in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, the legal description contained in this bill is not accurate and at the suggestion of the Indian Bureau I introduced a similar bill (H. R. 12329), which is No. 362 on the calendar. I therefore ask unanimous consent that this bill be stricken from the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

DIMINISHED COLVILLE INDIAN RESERVATION, WASH.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2983, for the relief of homesteaders on the Diminished Colville Indian Reservation, Wash.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it has been several days since I have looked at my calendar. How about this 5 per cent interest provision? Is that lawful? Is not that rather high?

Mr. HILL of Washington. It is rather high, but that is the suggestion of the department.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] say about that?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have examined the bill very carefully. This is a Senate bill. There is no objection to the bill in its present form. If you want to reduce the amount, of course there may be objection to it.

As to the rate of interest——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is what I am concerned about.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, the House imposed upon me and I graciously accepted the burden the duty of trying to adjust the differences between those opposed and those in favor of extending the time for payment of construction charges on irrigation works.

The major question was as to the amount of interest to be paid on the deferred charges. They left to the Secretary of the Interior the determination of the rate of interest. The Secretary of the Interior fixed it at 5½ per cent, for the reason that it was not fair to those who had paid charges to be relieved of the burden, and also more or less of a penalty, so that everyone would not come in and avail himself of the privilege of deferred construction charges.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I think in all of these extensions, affecting both whites and Indians, the uniform rate has been 5 per cent.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In other words, it is not any criterion that the Government is establishing a rate of interest; it is more in the form of payment for deferred charges.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. That is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to extend for a period of not to exceed two years the time for the payment of any installment or installments due, or hereafter to become due, of the purchase price for lands sold under the act of Congress approved March 22, 1906 (34 Stat. 80): Provided, That the payments extended under the provisions of Public Resolution No. 33, approved March 19, 1920 (41 Stat. 535), may be extended hereunder: Provided further, That any and all payments must be made when due unless the entryman applies for an extension and pays interest for one year in advance at 5 per cent per annum upon the amount due, and patent shall be withheld until full and final payment of the purchase price is made in accordance with the provisions hereof: Provided further, That where payments are extended hereunder for more than one year the same rate of interest shall be paid in advance for the second year: And provided further, That failure to make any payment that may be due, unless the same be extended, or to make any extended payment at or before the time to which such payment has been extended as herein provided, shall forfeit the entry, and the same shall thereupon be canceled, and any and all payments theretofore made shall be forfeited.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. The only question about these deferred collection payments was paying the interest in advance. I would like to inquire from the author of the bill, or the gentleman having the matter in charge, whether we usually require that condition of making the interest payable in advance?

Mr. HILL of Washington. I am not really advised about that. We came to Congress and asked for this leniency and consulted with the Secretary of the Interior, and the department imposed it in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice in the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office he says it is the practice of this office to hold an entry for cancellation for nonpayment of the required amount, in a letter addressed to the register of the land office for the district in which the land is situated, setting out that if the required payment is not made, or an appeal filed within the time allowed, the entry will be canceled and the case closed, and it is not believed that any good purpose would be served by having this practice changed in the case of the Colville land.

Mr. HILL of Washington. I want to say that they had a series of trying years with no crops, and they were unable to meet their payments.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much acreage is involved?

Mr. HILL of Washington. I would have to guess, but I would say something like 10,000 acres.

Mr. STAFFORD. How many settlers?

Mr. HILL of Washington. There are 110 acres of land to each settler in a quarter section. I am not advised as to the number of settlers.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TAX LAWS FOR RESERVED AREAS AT BOULDER DAM

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 11945, to provide that tax laws in Nevada and Arizona shall apply to construction and reserved areas at Boulder Dam.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS, Mr. STAFFORD, and Mr. COLLINS objected.

INDIAN IRRIGATION PROJECT

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, S. 3675, an act relating to the deferment and adjustment of construction charges for the years 1931 and 1932 on Indian irrigation projects.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve an objection. How many of these Indian projects are there?

Mr. LEAVITT. The Indian irrigation projects under contract and under similar conditions to these—as far as I know—would apply to two projects in the State of Washington, one or two in Montana, and that is as far as my information goes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I would like to say that there is one project in my district which has made more repayments than any other Indian project in the United States. At this time it is not able to carry on at all. There are several hundred of these water users on the Wapato project. I repeat, this project has an unsurpassed record for repayments, but at this time the farmers greatly need this legislation, and I hope no gentleman will object to the present consideration of the bill. My farmers are in sore distress at this time.

Mr. LEAVITT. What it does is to give these people who are situated in exactly the same way as the water users on Government irrigation projects, exactly the same treatment as those others receive. It provides that they shall have exactly the same treatment as was given under the bill which passed the House and Senate and is now a law to those living on other projects. To begin with, they must apply for it, and pay the interest on the deferred charges, with one year of complete deferment, for the second year deferment on one-half of the charge.

Mr. GOSS. There is nothing in the report that says how much money is involved.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not think there is any justification for the bill at all. I am perfectly willing to let it go over without prejudice.

Mr. LEAVITT. There is the same justification that is found in connection with the other Government projects. The statement made at the end of the report by the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs reads as follows:

> It would seem altogether consistent, therefore, that, if Congress enacts legislation granting deferment and adjustment of construction charges on lands included in projects under the reclamation law, similar legislation be enacted extending relief to the projects under the Indian irrigation service as is contemplated.

We did pass such an act for the other projects, and that is the justification for this, in order that the people who are situated exactly in the same way, except that they are on the Indian irrigation projects, shall have exactly the same treatment. This bill does nothing except to extend exactly the same treatment already given by a vote of the House and Senate to settlers situated in exactly the same way on other projects. However, that legislation applied only to Federal projects and could not be extended to those on the Indian projects. That is why we need this legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. A moment or two ago I referred to the general bill that we passed providing for the relief of settlers on irrigation projects. In my investigation of the subject it was called to my attention that 50 per cent had paid their construction charges, and that it was mostly the ne'er-do-wells who were pressing their Representatives in Congress to get this concession. I rise to ask whether the gentleman would have any objection to this series of amendments: Line 5, page 1, after the word "of," insert "such of the"; and after the word "charges," insert the words "as are in default," so that it would read:

> To defer the payment of such of the construction charges as are in default for the calendar year 1931.

Also, in line 9, strike out the words "and to the same extent."

I do not think the gentleman should ask or that it is his purpose to extend this privilege to those who have paid their construction charges.

Mr. LEAVITT. No; there is no such intention.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the original act there was no inducement made to have the privilege extended to those who had already paid and were in a position to pay. It was nothing more than a raid, a stampede upon the part of the ne'er-do-well settlers who were organized in Idaho to try to take an unfair advantage of the Government. I recognize the merit of the position of the gentleman in trying to extend the provisions of that law to these Indian projects.

Mr. LEAVITT. Of course the result of that would be that the settlers on the Indian projects would not get exactly the same treatment as those on other Government projects, and we have already given to the settlers on the other projects certain privileges. All this act does is to extend to those settlers what we have done for the others.

Mr. STAFFORD. If I had known at the beginning of my investigation what I did at the conclusion, I would not only have fought it from the first but I would certainly have excepted those settlers who had paid their construction charges; and I am asking that reasonable provision to come to the relief of those not able to pay, not for the relief of those who are.

Mr. LEAVITT. Of course, I would have to accept that if the gentleman insists upon it, although I think it would be discriminatory. The difficulty is that we deal here with associations of people, not with the individuals. A number of years ago the Reclamation Service abandoned the idea of dealing with the individual. The same situation exists here. I have in mind the Flathead project, not in my district, where they have organized their districts and deal with associations. To apply the gentleman's proposition would be difficult on that account. I think they should have just the same treatment, because they are in exactly the same situation. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that, because it would be hard to apply.

Mr. STAFFORD. The remedy would be extended to those who are needful of relief, but it would not be extended to those who do not require this relief.

Mr. LEAVITT. The way the other has worked out is that many of them have not made any application at all, and this requires the making of an application and dealing with the organizations.

Mr. STAFFORD. My amendment is a very reasonable one, in view of the disclosures in connection with the other measure.

Mr. LEAVITT. Of course, as I have said, I can not resist it on the Consent Calendar, if the gentleman insists.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to examine the gentleman's amendment, so I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

TAX LAWS OF NEVADA AND ARIZONA

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, with reference to the bill immediately preceding the one just disposed of, namely, H. R. 11945, to provide that tax laws of Nevada and Arizona shall apply to construction and reserved areas at Boulder Dam, I made objection to that bill when it was called. It is a bill in which my colleague, the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. ARENTZ, is interested, and the gentleman is not present. Some of my colleagues have asked that that objection be set aside. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the objection be set aside and an order substituted that it be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

COLORADO RIVER REIMBURSABLE LOANS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3864, authorizing expenditures from Colorado River tribal funds for reimbursable loans.

Mr. GOSS. Reserving the right to object, I notice from reading the report that there is no mention of how much money is in that fund. I notice the bill asks for reimbursing $25,000. I would like to inquire how much is in the fund?

Mr. HOWARD. I do not know offhand, but I think that tribe has considerable money.

Mr. PATTERSON. If the gentleman will yield, I have the figures.

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. PATTERSON. Fifty-five thousand four hundred and eighty-eight dollars.

Mr. GOSS. Then this would take about one-half the funds of the tribe?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes; if the Secretary should decide to use that much.

Mr. GOSS. Why does the gentleman put in the language contained in lines 8 to 14 on page 2 of the bill "except in the case of loans on irrigable lands for permanent improvement of said lands in which the period for repayment may run for not exceeding 20 years"? Why the 20 years?

Mr. HOWARD. Well, there is good security there. It would not matter.

Mr. GOSS. The gentleman knows that many of these irrigation projects come here with these Indian irrigation matters and put them off and put them off, and the funds never get back to the Treasury.

Mr. HOWARD. This particular irrigation project, as I understand, is out of debt.

Mr. GOSS. There is no debt?

Mr. HOWARD. That is the way I understand it, and I take it for granted that the Secretary of the Interior regards that loan as absolutely good. That would be my estimate of it, although I am not qualified to speak for the Secretary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to use not to exceed $25,000 from tribal funds on deposit to the Indians of the Colorado River Indian Reservation, Ariz., for the construction of homes for individual members of the tribe, the purchase for sale to them of seed, animals, machinery, tools, implements, building material, and other equipment and supplies, and for advances to old, disabled, or indigent Indians for their support, and Indians having irrigable allotments to assist them in the development and cultivation thereof: Provided, That expenditures for the purposes above set forth shall be limited to the fiscal years 1932 and 1933 and such expenditures shall be made under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for repayment to the United States for deposit to the credit of the Colorado River Indian tribal fund on or before June 30, 1938, except in the case of loans on irrigable lands for permanent improvement of said lands in which the period for repayment may run for not exceeding 20 years, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and advances to old, disabled, or indigent Indians for their support, such advances to remain a charge and lien against their lands until paid.

Passed the Senate April 25, 1932.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO EXAMINE GOVERNMENT RECORDS IN RE WISCONSIN INDIANS

The Clerk called the next business on the Consent Calendar, Senate Joint Resolution 125, authorizing the attorney general of Wisconsin to examine Government records in relation to claims of Wisconsin Indians.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a Senate joint resolution. Ordinarily I would move to strike out the whereas clauses as that is generally done. Of course, that would necessitate the bill going back to the Senate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have had some private talks with my friend the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHNEIDER] about the investigating privileges to be conferred by this bill. I had some doubt as to whether we should confer upon any representative of a State the right to invade the departments and obtain evidence or information as the basis of a claim, without the approval of the department head. I am a little wary about granting the privilege to a subordinate of a State to go into a department with a certificate of authority from the National Government and say, "I have authority from the National Government and I can search your files and records to any extent I may, because here is congressional authority."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The secretary says you can get all of this information.

Mr. STAFFORD. As far as the Secretary of the Interior is concerned, there is no need whatsoever for this resolution. My colleague the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHNEIDER] told me it is desired to have this investigational power as to other departments.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. I would like to state to the gentleman and to the House that that desired information can not be secured from the Comptroller General. I have a letter to that effect wherein he says he can not grant that permission without the consent of Congress by act. Therefore, that resolution was introduced and passed by the Senate. The provisions in the resolution mentioned by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] are granted in jurisdictional bills, wherein they ask to go to the Court of Claims. The acts carry the provision that the department shall furnish all the information.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would my colleague have any objection to the incorporation in the first section on page 2, after the word "authorized," the following: "subject to the approval of the respective departments or independent establishments"?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I was going to suggest that it seems to me the authority should have been permissive to the United States officials. If I were drawing this bill, I would say that the Secretary of the Interior or any head of a department is hereby authorized to permit the attorney general, and so on. I would have made it permissive. This gives them the absolute right to walk in and search the records. While it may be all right in this instance, it is a peculiar precedent to establish.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. I would like to have my colleague read the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. After the word "authorized" in line 1 on page 2, insert, "subject to the approval of the respective departments or independent establishments," so that it will read—is authorized, subject to the approval of the respective departments or independent establishments, to examine official letters, papers, documents, and records, etc.

Mr. LEAVITT. The gentleman means subject to the approval of the heads of those departments.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; subject to the approval of the respective departments.

Mr. LEAVITT. Does the gentleman not think the language "approval of the heads of the respective departments" should be included?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That may put the discretion of permitting the giving of the information with the head of the department. I wonder if it would not be better to say "under such conditions as the heads of the respective departments may prescribe"? I think that would be better.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield there? There is no reason why the Federal branch should not permit the State attorney general to have the information if he wishes it. It is permissive; the head of the department may.

Mr. LEAVITT. The Department of the Interior may. The gentleman from Wisconsin has a letter from the comptroller stating that he does not have the authority under the law to allow a search of the records there.

Mr. JENKINS. I do not believe he ought to have the authority.

Mr. LEAVITT. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment that would permit him to do that under such rules as he may prescribe. If I may take just a moment, I will state what the Committee on Indian Affairs is attempting to do, although perhaps it has not approached it in exactly the right way there in accepting the Senate language just as it came to us. You will recall that in the case of California we passed a bill that authorized the bringing of certain cases in the Court of Claims under the requirement that the attorney general of the State should represent the Indians of the State.

Here we have a situation where the State of Wisconsin has taken the preliminary steps to represent through its own attorney general Indian citizens of that State, and we think that under conditions such as are presented to us, it is a good thing to open the door.

I agree with the gentleman from New York that it should be under proper restriction, but an examination of the records is necessary so they can properly represent the rights of the Indian citizens of that State.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not think there is any objection to what the gentleman is endeavoring to do. What this bill does, as pointed out by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], is to grant the power and authority in the visiting official or State officials. What you intend to do is to make it permissive for the State officials to obtain this information.

Mr. LEAVITT. I think the gentleman's suggestion is a good one.

Mr. JENKINS. The part I am opposed to is not that part which was sought to be amended, but the last part, which says: "And the departments and the independent establishments of the Government shall give access to the attorney general of Wisconsin, or his duly accredited representative, to such official letters, papers, documents, and records." Now, that is going pretty far.

Mr. LEAVITT. If it were not too late in the session, I would want to substitute "attorney general of any State."

Mr. BALDRIGE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CHELAN NATIONAL FOREST

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3711, to authorize the adjustment of the boundaries of the Chelan National Forest in the State of Washington, and for other purposes.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice in the report that there are some 350,000 acres embraced in this 4-mile tract that it is proposed in a permissive way to acquire as part of this national forest.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. I notice there are some 40,000 acres of public land.

Mr. HILL of Washington. I think there are 35,000 acres of public land.

Mr. GOSS. What are the timber rights on this land? I take it there is stumpage on the land.

Mr. HILL of Washington. The timber on some of this privately owned land has been cut off. In fact I would say the timber has been largely cut off, but there is a new growth of timber coming on, and the land is valuable, particularly to that country, for watershed purposes.

Mr. GOSS. In these cases sometimes the exchange is made on the basis of stumpage. Of course the gentleman is familiar with these terms, coming from a lumber State. In several instances they acquire the land itself; and sometimes in these transfers, unless we are pretty well safeguarded, there is a chance for fraud.

Mr. HILL of Washington. This land is to be exchanged on the land-value basis.

Mr. GOSS. Is it on the value of the stumpage or the value of the land?

Mr. HILL of Washington. The value of the stumpage belonging to the United States Government within the national forest. The exchange is for land of equal value within the 4-mile area.

Mr. GOSS. That is just the point. Within the Government forest there is timberland, and there are stumpage rights. Is not that true?

Mr. HILL of Washington. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. If you transfer that property for some of these logged or partially logged off lands, it seems to me we are giving away some pretty good stuff.

Mr. HILL of Washington. It is only on the basis of equal value.

Mr. GOSS. That is the point I am making. How is it arranged? Is it stumpage in one instance and the plain lands in the other instance?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. This is one of a series of bills that apparently is in accord with the policy of the Forestry Department to increase the size of the forests by extending the boundaries a certain number of miles. Most of them are 6 miles, while this one is 4 miles. The policy is to exchange lands which are already in the forest for lands which are outside, and for the United States Government to obtain title to lands now in private ownership outside of the forests, so that they may have control over certain lands outside the existing forests. What the Forestry Bureau is going to do in the future has not yet been disclosed.

Mr. GOSS. The proposal is to give land that has good stumpage rights for land that is partially cut over. There is a lot of difference between the value of the land itself and the value of the land and the stumpage. That is what I am getting at.

Mr. LEAVITT. Under the forest exchange act this sort of thing has been done for a considerable period of years.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Since 1922.

Mr. LEAVITT. I am sure no gentleman can call my attention to any criticism that has ever been raised as to this exchange not being on a proper basis of value. The Forest Service has its organization that appraises the land and looks out for the interests of the Government. It knows the amount of stumpage that is being exchanged and the value of it in the market, and the exchange is made entirely on the basis of value.

Mr. GOSS. The railroads have endeavored to get rid of a lot of that timberland out there, and there have been some great scandals in connection with some of those deals.

Mr. LEAVITT. The gentleman can not point to any scandals in connection with these forest exchanges on the part of the Forest Service. Nothing that even breathes of scandal has ever transpired.

Mr. GOSS. I notice there is not any money carried in it; but if we are going to take on 350,000 acres, it is going to cost something to patrol it and police it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is acquainted with the fact that the House, when the Committee on the Public Lands had its day on Calendar Wednesday, objected, and very strenuously objected, to a similar bill involving a large acreage located in the State of Idaho, some 500,000 acres, which it was intended to have incorporated in a forest reserve under similar conditions.

Mr. LEAVITT. Not the same conditions. As I understand, this bill allows an exchange within 4 miles around the boundaries of the national forest.

Mr. HILL of Washington. That is correct.

Mr. LEAVITT. Such a law has been in existence in Montana for quite a few years, and under its provisions exchanges are gradually made and consolidation of various areas are being brought about. This adds to the efficiency of administration rather than adding difficulties.

Mr. STAFFORD. We virtually buy the lands outside the present borders, and through this procedure we always increase the borders of the forest reserves.

Mr. LEAVITT. In order to have what you might call proper control in the way of fire protection and efficient administration of the forest, it is to the general advantage of the community to have this done. That can be shown through the fact that the communities which surround these forests are continually presenting petitions asking that areas of this kind be included in the forests for protection and better administration.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Before the committee the only objection made to this type of bill has been where there has been a general authorization given to an entire State, but in various States those who know something about the particular forests have given evidence to the committee that in the case of particular forests it is proper to let those interested in such forest determine the boundaries and get the advantage of this exchange provision in existing law for lands outside the present boundaries.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman believe it proper for the National Government to purchase such lands?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, if I am to be shut off, I will have to object.

SILVER SERVICE OF THE GUNBOAT "MARIETTA"

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1225, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Campus Martius Memorial Museum, of the city of Marietta, Ohio, the silver service presented to the United States for the gunboat Marietta.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I make this reservation for the purpose of calling the attention of the author of the bill to the fact that there is one misspelled word in the title. I do not suppose that can be corrected without an amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume the gentleman from Ohio, the author of the bill, will have no objection to the incorporation of the customary reservation that this silver service shall be returned when the Navy Department has need of it?

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. I have no objection to such an amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the customary reservation in all these bills. The gift is always made with the proviso that in case the Navy Department has occasion to use the silver service it may claim it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think the better thing would be not to accept any more silver-service sets.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is a patriotic spirit developed when they see a silver service formerly in use on some cruiser or some battleship that can be kept as an heirloom.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But I think the tradition is different The silver set was usually presented to a battleship when they were used in drinking punch.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, outside of the 12-mile limit there is no law that forbids the sailors or the officers to drink punch, I am very happy to say——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I never thought of that.

Mr. STAFFORD. And perhaps in the near future they may have renewed use for it.

Mr. JENKINS. If the gentleman will permit, I am sure the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MOORE] would not want these articles returned for that purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. But it may be that the authorities may want them withdrawn for that purpose and I want to fix it so they may be returned in that event.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Campus Martius Memorial Museum, of the city of Marietta, Ohio, for preservation and exhibition, the silver service which was presented to the United States for the gunboat Marietta by the citizens of Marietta, Ohio: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for the delivery of such silver service.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Stafford: Page 1, line 6, after the word "exhibition," insert "until such time as he shall determine the Navy Department has need of the same."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the clerk be authorized to correct the spelling of the word "museum" in the title.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CRATER LAKE NATIONAL PARK

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 4070, to authorize the acquisition of a certain building, furniture, and equipment in the Crater Lake National Park.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me we will have complications here if we permit an individual or a private corporation to construct a building on Government property in this way. It might be easier if we simply gave them title to as much land as may be necessary for this purpose.

Mr. LEAVITT. Not in one of the national parks.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Who owns the building?

Mr. BUTLER. Kisers (Inc.).

Kisers (Inc.), under a permit from the Park Service, put up this building at an expense of six or seven thousand dollars. Apparently, it was not profitable to them. The Government then commenced to use it, and the Park Service and the Interior Department do not feel that it is just to these parties to use this valuable building, which, if it were taken away——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It can not be taken away.

Mr. BUTLER. Strictly speaking, it can not be taken away. When the permit expired, ownership became vested in the Government, but the man who placed it there has lost the money and they feel it is an act of justice. Personally, it means nothing to me. The owner is not even a constituent of mine.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It will be much easier for me to object under those conditions.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I object, Mr. Speaker.

WIDOWS ISLAND, ME.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5642, to authorize and direct the transfer of Widows Island, Me., by the Secretary of the Navy to the Secretary of Agriculture for administration as a migratory-bird refuge.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the impression I gained from reading the report on this bill is that the Secretary of Agriculture wants to have a nice summer outing place for some of the officials of that department.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I thought it was for the birds.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think the Secretary of Agriculture has made a strong case, except for providing a hibernating place for some of their officials during the summer months up in the delightful climate of Maine. I therefore object.

FORT WORTH DIVISION OF THE NORTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF TEXAS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11390, to detach Hardeman County from the Fort Worth division of the northern judicial district of the State of Texas and attach the same to the Wichita Falls division of said district.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, on these bills I usually reserve the right to object to inquire as to whether there is any objection to the bill on the part of the lawyers or any of the bar associations.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. My understanding is that everybody is in favor of it.

Mr. JONES. It saves the Government some money and saves the people some inconvenience.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Hardeman County, of the Fort Worth division of the northern judicial district of the State of Texas, be, and the same is hereby, detached from said division of said district and attached to and made a part of the Wichita Falls division of said northern judicial district of the State of Texas.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COLVILLE NATIONAL FOREST

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 9440, to authorize the adjustment of the boundaries of the Colville National Forest in the State of Washington, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GOSS. Reserving the right to object, here is another of these national forest bills, involving 674,900 acres of land. I notice down here that the prices range from 25 cents to $7 an acre. That takes in the question of stumpage.

Mr. HILL of Washington. This is the same proposition. This is outside of the Indian reservation.

Mr. GOSS. I do not think at this time we should involve the Government in taking over these large tracts of land, and have to police them.

Mr. HILL of Washington. We do not have to take them over right away; this is simple permissive.

Mr. GOSS. But I never saw a permissive bill that did not actually come into a reality.

Mr. HILL of Washington. This is simply to give them the opportunity—that is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. GOSS. I wish we had some more definite information about the stumpage and the value of the stumpage. This is too big a proposition to let it go by without consideration.

Mr. HILL of Washington. These lands are mountain lands of very little value. They are isolated, and what little timber is on them would be of the value of about $2.50 a thousand. The land and the stumpage is cheap on account of the isolated character of the country.

Mr. GOSS. I object, Mr. Speaker.

AMENDING THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TRAFFIC ACT

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, S. 4123, an act to amend the District of Columbia traffic act as amended.

Mr. COLLINS. I object.

PAYMENT OF GRATUITY TO DEPENDENT RELATIVE OFFICERS, ETC.

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 6734, a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize payment of six months' death gratuity to dependent relatives of officers, enlisted men, or nurses whose death results from wounds or disease not resulting from their own misconduct," approved May 22, 1928.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I object.

Mr. BARTON. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. BARTON. This is an amendment to a statute approved by the Navy Department. It was passed by both Houses two years ago, and is approved by the Naval Affairs Committee. Under the law as it stands to-day the Navy Department determines the relationship of all dependent persons not named by the deceased soldier. The purpose of this act is to permit the Navy Department to determine the relationship, both of those designated by the deceased soldier and those not designated.

It seems very peculiar to say that when a soldier fails to designate, then the Navy Department can determine it, but if he does designate it, then it is to be determined by the Treasury Department. This bill would place the determination of both in the hands of the Navy Department.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The anomaly the gentleman refers to is this: Congress had a great many discrepancies when it had no control over the construction or expenditure of public funds, when each department had its own comptroller audit its own expenditures. We have appointed an agency, a General Accounting Office, created the office of Comptroller General, and I for one shall resist any attempt to curtail his power or remove from his control any matter, no matter how trivial it may be. That is the proper auditing office of the United States Government, and there it should remain.

Mr. BARTON. Would the gentleman be willing to withdraw his objection to the bill if that feature of the bill were stricken out?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is the whole bill.

Mr. BARTON. Oh, no; there is some more.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is the real purpose of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I object.

Mr. BALDRIGE. I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

MARINE CORPS RESERVE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5329) to amend section 24 of the act approved February 28, 1925, entitled "An act to provide for the creation, organization, administration, and maintenance of a Naval Reserve and a Marine Corps Reserve," as amended by the act of March 2, 1929.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. PATTERSON. I object.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN THE NAVY

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5352) to provide for the better administration of justice in the Navy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. COLLINS. I object.

Mr. PATTERSON. I object.

WATER-RIGHT CHARGES ON FEDERAL IRRIGATION PROJECTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11966) to amend section 14 of an act entitled, "An act to adjust water-right charges, to grant certain others relief on the Federal irrigation projects, and for other purposes," approved May 25, 1926 (44 Stat. 636), as amended (46 Stat. 249).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Does this remit any existing liability?

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no; it does not involve any expenditure of money. It does not reduce the obligation that the district owes to the Government to any extent whatever. It is administrative.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a similar Senate bill (S. 4614) will be substituted.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 4614

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to adjust water-right charges, to grant certain other relief on the Federal irrigation projects, and for other purposes," approved May 25, 1926 (44 Stat. 636), as amended by the act of April 23, 1930 (46 Stat. 249), be, and the same is hereby, further amended by adding after the subparagraph (a) in section 14 the following new subparagraph:

"(a–1) The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to reclassify all lands within the Klamath irrigation district and to place in the temporarily unproductive class such lands as he determines are properly subject to this classification."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

CAMP SITES AND RIFLE RANGES, SOUTH DAKOTA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 487) to authorize an appropriation for the purchase of land in South Dakota for use as camp sites for rifle ranges for the National Guard of said State.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. It seems to me under the Williamson plan of retrenchment, this is hardly the time to authorize additional expenditures, particularly so when my own State furnishes the rifle ranges and the armory and the field. I do not believe we ought to embark on any new policy.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. In 1903 Congress appropriated approximately $2,000,000 for the purpose of purchasing camp sites and rifle ranges in various States of the Union. Under that act allocation was made to South Dakota in the sum of $15,704.75. New York doubtless got its share, and presumably still has it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That was in 1926?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. No; in 1903. The camp site and rifle range was acquired in 1906 and 1908. Under the national defense act of 1916 the Congress provided that in cases where camp sites were sold the money should be placed to the credit of the State where the site was located so that the State would not lose the fund allocated to it under the act of 1903. In 1918 Congress inserted a provision in the Army appropriation bill authorizing the Government in certain cases to sell camp sites. The camp site purchased at Watertown, S. Dak., while suitable at the time it was purchased for a camp site and rifle range, became undesirable because of the gradual encroachment of settlement and construction, making it dangerous to use it as a rifle range. For that reason the camp site was sold and the money was placed in the Treasury to the credit of the fund "Arming, equipping, and training the National Guard," instead of "to the credit of the State (South Dakota)," as contemplated by the national defense act (act of June 3, 1916).

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is $5,876?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. There were two sales. The total sum amounts to $13,267, upon which there was accrued interest in the sum of $412.78, making a total now in the Treasury of $13,680.58. The fact is that this should have been placed to the credit of South Dakota. The National Guard has not been able to get the site it wanted until this winter, or the return of this money would have been asked for long ago.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They say the only reason it is not available to the State is the deposit was not made for that purpose, but the deposit was made for the general purpose of arming, equipping, and training the National Guard.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. It was wrongfully made, because the act of 1916 provided that it should be placed to the credit of the State.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. What impressed the subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs, which reported this bill to the full committee, was the fact that here were funds that rightfully belonged originally to the State of South Dakota that had been transferred to the Treasury.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It was allocated originally to the State. It did not belong to the State.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. They could not agree upon a camp site, and at the end of the 3-year period it automatically went into the general fund, and we can not get it out without authorization. I may say in this connection that a bill identical with this bill has already passed the Senate. A similar bill passed the Senate in the Seventy-first Congress, but too late to get action in the House.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I think we had better wait until next year when conditions are better, and therefore I will object.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will not the gentleman reserve his objection for just a moment and let me explain the situation?

Mr. COLLINS. I will reserve it.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. In an effort to secure the site desired by the National Guard we have already secured the passage of an act at this session of Congress under which the Government has arranged to purchase the necessary lands. In order to complete the transfer, which has been authorized by the Congress, we must have the funds provided for in this bill.

Mr. COLLINS. I appreciate the necessity of a rifle range, but I think we can very well wait until next year. I object.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill does not go off the Consent Calendar.

BOUNDARY LINES, CHIPPEWA INDIAN TERRITORY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12329, to establish the boundary lines of the Chippewa Indian territory in the State of Minnesota.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the passage of this act the territory in Minnesota to be considered as Indian-treaty territory under provisions of article 7 of the treaty of February 22, 1855 (10 Stat. L. 1165–1169), between the United States and the Mississippi Bands of Chippewa Indians shall be reduced to the territory within the boundaries described as follows:

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TO AMEND SECTIONS 328 AND 329 OF UNITED STATES CRIMINAL CODE OF 1910, ETC.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11595, to amend sections 328 and 329 of the United States Criminal Code of 1910 and sections 548 and 549 of the United States Code of 1926.

Mr. BLACK. Reserving the right to object, what is this all about?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, this legislation was introduced by the chairman of the committee, Mr. HOWARD, of Nebraska, at the request of the Indian Bureau. The law as it now stands will not permit Indian officials to punish adequately major violations of the law on Indian reservations. Under the present law they can only give 90 days for offenses against the person.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, this is a bill that is highly penal, and it seems to me it should have gone to the Committee on the Judiciary, even though it deals exclusively with Indians.

Mr. KNUTSON. But it is always customary to refer a bill to a committee which has exclusive jurisdiction. The Committee on the Judiciary could hardly legislate for an Indian reservation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Why not?

Mr. KNUTSON. While I have the highest regard for the ability of the Committee on the Judiciary and its membership, they could not legislate for an Indian reservation. I admit there are some Indians on the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. STAFFORD. As the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs will testify, originally it was the policy not to have the National Government take jurisdiction over any crimes on Indian reservations. Then they increased that jurisdiction gradually to confer jurisdiction in certain cases. This bill merely extends jurisdiction to the following crimes: Incest, carnal knowledge, and assault with intent to rape. I have read the report very carefully, and I think this added jurisdiction should be conferred for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction on the United States courts in these cases of sexual crimes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. On the part of Indians?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes. They can not handle it as it is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a similar Senate bill (S. 4511) will be substituted for the House bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 328 of the United States Criminal Code of 1910 and section 548 of title 18 of the United States Code of 1926 are hereby amended to read as follows:

"All Indians committing against the person or property of another Indian or other person any of the following crimes, namely, murder, manslaughter, rape, incest, assault with intent to kill, assault with a dangerous weapon, arson, burglary, robbery, and larceny on and within any Indian reservation under the jurisdiction of the United States Government, including rights of way running through the reservation, shall be subject to the same laws, tried in the same courts, and in the same manner, and be subject to the same penalties as are all other persons committing any of the above crimes within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States: Provided, That any Indian who commits the crime of rape upon any female Indian within the limits of any Indian reservation shall be imprisoned at the discretion of the court: Provided further, That as herein used the offense rape shall be defined in accordance with the laws of the State in which the offense was committed.

"The foregoing shall extend to prosecutions of Indians in South Dakota under section 329 of the United States Criminal Code of 1910 and section 549 of title 18 of the United States Code of 1926."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER BETWEEN CHEROKEE AND OSAGE STREETS, ST. LOUIS, MO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9265, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near a point between Cherokee and Osage Streets, St. Louis, Mo.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA and Mr. PATTERSON objected.

TOLL BRIDGE ACROSS EAST BRANCH OF NIAGARA RIVER NEAR TONAWANDA, N. Y.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12077, granting the consent of Congress to the Niagara Frontier Bridge Commission, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the east branch of the Niagara River at or near the city of Tonawanda, N. Y.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a similar Senate bill (S. 4778) will be substituted for the House bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress approved June 17, 1930, to be built by the Niagara Frontier Bridge Commission, a State commission, created by act of the Legislature of the State of New York, chapter 594 of the laws of 1929, across the east branch of the Niagara River, from the town of Tonawanda, about midway between the southerly city limits of the city of Tonawanda and the northerly city limits of the city of Buffalo, to Grand Island, in the county of Erie and State of New York, are hereby extended two and five years, respectively, from June 17, 1932.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making an inquiry. I notice there are two bills, Calendar Nos. 365 and 366, which seem to be on the same subject matter. I would like to have somebody explain the difference between them, or why a pair of bridges is needed.

Mr. BLACK. They are two different cities.

Mr. GOSS. Niagara Falls and Tonawanda are both the same, are they not?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. The so-called Peace Bridge connects Tonawanda with the opposite shore. I believe that is a toll bridge.

Mr. REED of New York. The Peace Bridge is farther up the river. It is way up above Tonawanda.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman says "way up."

Mr. REED of New York. Yes. The Peace Bridge is from Buffalo across. Tonawanda is below Buffalo, toward Niagara Falls.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let me get my geography right. When I cross the Niagara River from Canada at Black Rock, I can see to the south the Peace Bridge; and when I get across on the American side, that is Tonawanda.

Mr. REED of New York. Oh, no.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is it, then?

Mr. REED of New York. The gentleman is mixed in his geography.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have a pretty good acquaintance with the geography around Black Rock and around Niagara Falls, United States, and Niagara Falls, Canada; and I know where Tonawanda is.

Mr. REED of New York. I know, but I live right in that section. The Niagara River runs practically north and south. Right at Buffalo the Peace Bridge goes straight across into Canada. Then you go down the river for miles before you get to Tonawanda. Tonawanda is quite a large city. There are two Tonawandas, there is North Tonawanda and South Tonawanda.

This bridge is to accommodate them. They are thriving industrial communities and not to give them this convenience is bound to impair their business efficiency in every way.

Mr. GOSS. How far apart are Buffalo and Tonawanda?

Mr. REED of New York. Ten miles.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman mean to say there is much business activity on the other side of the river?

Mr. REED of New York. On the Canadian side?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. REED of New York. There is a good deal of activity on both sides.

Mr. STAFFORD. At Bridgeburg and Niagara Falls, Ontario?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes; there is, with the great hydroelectrical development there.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think I know more about the conditions at those places than my friend, the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. Oh, no. I live there.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not conceive of any reason why we should have a bridge at Tonawanda and another at Niagara Falls.

However, I do not intend to press the matter further.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS NIAGARA RIVER NEAR NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12078, granting the consent of Congress to the Niagara Frontier Bridge Commission, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the east branch of the Niagara River at or near the city of Niagara Falls, N. Y.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Niagara Frontier Bridge Commission, a State commission created by act of the Legislature of the State of New York, chapter 594 of the Laws of 1929, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge and approaches thereto across the east branch of the Niagara River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, from the city of Niagara Falls, in the county of Niagara and State of New York, at a point east of Evershed Avenue in said city of Niagara Falls, to Grand Island, in the county of Erie and State of New York, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That this act shall be null and void unless the construction of said bridge is commenced within two years and completed within five years from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 3. If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of the bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and opened free of tolls; or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the costs of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress approved June 17, 1930, to be built by the Niagara Frontier Bridge Commission, a State commission created by act of the Legislature of the State of New York, chapter 594 of the Laws of 1929, across the east branch of the Niagara River, from the city of Niagara Falls, in the county of Niagara and State of New York, at a point east of Evershed Avenue in said city of Niagara Falls, to Grand Island, in the county of Erie and State of New York, are hereby extended two and five years, respectively, from June 17, 1932.

"SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended.

BRIDGE ACROSS OHIO RIVER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12243, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Wellsburg, W. Va.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I reserve it.

Mr. BACHMANN. I wish the gentleman would enlighten me as to his objection to this bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I believe in supporting our administration. I believe we ought to give all the moral support we can to our administration, Mr. Speaker. I am for standing by the administration, and when the Department of Agriculture says—

The department, therefore, recommends against enactment of the pending bill—

I am going to uphold the hands of the President and the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture. [Applause.]

Mr. BACHMANN. If the gentleman will permit, he remembers we passed an act in the last Congress giving the West Virginia Bridge Commission certain powers of inspecting bridges in West Virginia. I have not introduced a bill since that act was passed without submitting it to the West Virginia Bridge Commission and obtaining its approval. In this particular instance they have already started and completed one of the abutments of this bridge at Wellsburg, W. Va.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, no.

Mr. BACHMANN. I direct the gentleman's attention to the report.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It says:

More than four years have already elapsed since the original franchise was granted for the construction of this bridge by private enterprise, and apparently those to whom the authorization was granted have been and are unable to arrange for the construction of the bridge. It, therefore, is not believed that they are entitled to any further extension of time. Furthermore, it would seem inadvisable to further tie up this proposed bridge location by extending the life of the private franchise, as the State bridge commission may at some date in the near future decide to proceed.

Mr. BACHMANN. We are not far apart and that is just what I am coming to. If the gentleman will look at the report on page 1, the last paragraph, he will see this wording:

In addition to the expenditure made at the time the franchise was taken over by them, they have built one of the abutments on the West Virginia side in strict accordance with the plans and specifications. In making these statements the writer has been in close touch with the bridge company at all times and is speaking advisedly.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Who is Mr. Thomas J. Reid?

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Reid is one of the prominent citizens of Wellsburg, who went before the city council, at my request, and secured the approval of the city council before I introduced this bill and then took it up with the bridge commission. I have taken the letter from the bridge commission and given it to the Senator in charge of the same bill in the Senate and that letter is there now, and the West Virginia Bridge Commission approves the extension of this particular bridge. There is no question about any holdup or making the State of West Virginia pay any sum for this franchise that is not reasonable and right. The matter has the approval of the town council, has the approval of the West Virginia Bridge Commission, and they have made this expenditure. We are only asking for this one because the bridge commission says that if they do not do the work they will never come back and I would not introduce a bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not think they will ever come back, and I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12316, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Helena, Ark.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I withhold it.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 3847. An act to amend the act approved March 3, 1931, relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on public buildings.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar Wednesday business in order to-morrow be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there is on the calendar the so-called copyright bill. In what shape will that be?

Mr. O'CONNOR. As to the copyright bill, I have letters from two physicians stating that the chairman of the committee, Doctor SIROVICH, is in the hospital in New York and will be there for a few weeks.

Mr. SABATH. So he will not lose his rights.

Mr. O'CONNOR. He will not lose his rights, but will have his day to bring up that bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I feel I shall have to object.

Mr. BLACK. The chairman of the committee got in touch with me to-day and he asked that this request be made, that Calendar Wednesday business in order to-morrow be dispensed with.

Mr. PATTERSON. If it is the wish of the chairman of the committee, I have no objection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, as many Members of the House know, a great deal of interest has been manifested in an amendment to the copyright bill which has been placed in my hands. I think, perhaps, the Members will be interested in knowing that the persons and parties who are interested in this amendment are willing that this order shall be made at this time, because they realize the copyright bill could not properly be considered without the presence of the chairman of the committee, Doctor SIROVICH.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to say to the membership of the House that the amendment in question will be found in the bill (H. R. 12425), relating to copyrights, introduced by the gentleman from New York, Doctor SIROVICH, on June 2, 1932, at page 10, beginning in line 8. It is purposed to offer the amendment in the form in which it appears there broadened, perhaps, so as to also include mechanical reproductions.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is that the bill that is on the calendar?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; this is not the bill that is on the calendar. This is the bill introduced by the gentleman from New York and the number is H. R. 12425.

For the information of the Members of the House, from many of whom I have received inquiries on the subject, I here insert the amendment which I intend to offer to the copyright bill when it receives consideration by the House:

If, in any suit for infringement for the unauthorized broadcasting or mechanical reproduction of any copyright musical work or works, it shall appear that the suit is brought by or in behalf of any association, society, corporation, or combination which deals with or in the issue or grant of licenses for the broadcasting or mechanical reproduction of such works and which exercises in the United States a substantial control of the performing, broadcasting, or mechanical reproduction rights in such works or in any class thereof, recovery shall be limited to an amount which will justly compensate the plaintiff for the use made of such work or works and shall in no event exceed the amount of a reasonable fee for a license which, under similar circumstances, would have authorized the infringing act or acts complained of. In determining the amount of such just compensation or of such reasonable license fee the prices currently paid for similar rights under similar circumstances shall be considered. Upon payment of a reasonable license fee, as found by the court, the infringer shall, in the discretion of the court, be entitled to continue the infringing acts complained of, upon such terms, and for such reasonable license period, as the court shall deem just. No injunction shall issue in respect to any works other than those proved to have been infringed.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, the only reason I withdraw my objection is because it is the wish of our chairman. This is very important legislation, and I would otherwise object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAINEY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR]?

There was no objection.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the majority leader now occupying the chair I submit the following unanimous-consent request:

That on to-morrow it may be in order to consider unobjected-to bills on the Private Calendar in the House as in Committee of the Whole, the call to begin where the last call ended, under the old rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that it may be in order on to-morrow to consider unobjected-to bills on the Private Calendar in the House as in Committee of the Whole, the call to begin where the last call ended, under the old rule.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, under the old rule, when the Private Calendar was last considered, I asked that there be passed over the last bill, calendar No. 393, a bill introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING], who was then in the hospital with a broken shoulder. The gentleman from Ohio came to me a little while ago and asked me if we would consider his bill at the next call. If the star were printed one space above, his bill would be the first one to be considered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am willing for the gentleman to submit that request, under the circumstances.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the request that we proceed under the old rule?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BANKHEAD)?

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the consideration of bills on the private calendar to-morrow we commence with calendar number 393, the bill (H. R. 5289) for the relief of Samuel Puff Bailey.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—SHORT SELLING

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, two and a half years ago, in October, 1929, I called the attention of the American people to the most stupendous racket in our country, namely, that connected with the New York Stock Exchange. On December 7, 1929, I introduced a bill to put a stop to the operation of short selling, and on December 9, on the floor of this House, condemned and scored these criminal activities that are responsible for closing the doors of banks and businesses, throwing millions of wage earners out of employment, pauperizing 20,000,000 people, and causing thousands of suicides.

Ever since then I have appealed to President Hoover and to the governors of the stock exchanges to take action against these activities, and have tried to secure legislation to stop this wholesale racketeering, but unfortunately neither the President nor the governors of the stock exchanges have acted in compliance with my appeals, nor have I secured any consideration for my bills to prohibit short selling.

During this session I was granted a hearing finally on my bills, but due to the illness of the chairman of the Judiciary Subcommittee [Mr. TUCKER], no action has been taken aside from hearings extending over a period of a few days.

The gentlemen on the other side of the Capitol have begun investigating instead of acting—this, I am informed, for the purpose of delaying action. Although the chairman of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee [Mr. NORBECK] is well intentioned, I am satisfied that the board of strategy of the Republican leaders are endeavoring to use the investigation for political purposes.

That this is a fact can not be honestly denied. For it is clearly evident that, notwithstanding that 95 per cent of the largest, most active, and outstanding manipulators are Republicans and among the largest contributors to the Republican campaigns, the committee is devoting most of its time and publicity to one or two Democrats who, they say, were members of stock pools in 1929.

What the country now demands is the immediate prohibition of the dishonest, destructive, yes, criminal, activities of the outstanding bear raiders and market manipulators, against whom the President refused to take and is still refusing to take any action whatsoever. I believe that it is necessary, therefore, for the country to have all of the available information in regard to stock manipulations and stock inflation from 1927 to 1929.

I realize the great power and influence of these financiers who are endeavoring to forestall congressional regulation, but is it possible that in addition to controlling the President they also control Congress? They have stated repeatedly that short selling is absolutely essential to an orderly market; yet without apparent regard for their contention, they have issued several restrictive rules affecting it. On May 20, for the fifth time, the exchange issued a rule restricting short selling by making it necessary to put up a 10-point margin on all short sales. This will no more restrict short selling than the "April fool" rule. If it be necessary to have short selling in order to preserve a fair and orderly market, why have they adopted these rules? It is clear that the exchange is hiding behind these subterfuges to prevent congressional legislation.

If the exchange officials were not so greedy, they would have prohibited short selling long ago, for in all instances where short selling was prohibited the downward movement of security prices was immediately arrested. I repeat, you can not restore confidence and legitimate business until you stop these criminal manipulations. The evidence which disclosed the operations of the Radio and Warner Bros. pools and the few millions of dollars these pools made is a joke in comparison with some of the real profits and the destruction brought about by the real bear operators.

VETERANS' RELIEF

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD four 10-minute speeches made over the radio on May 25, 1932, in this city, by the department commanders of the four major veterans' organizations, namely, the United Spanish War Veterans, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the American Legion, and the Disabled American Veterans of the World War.

There being no objection, the addresses were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS BY MRS. HELEN EVANS O'NEILL, COMMANDER OF GENERAL W. W. ATTERBURY CHAPTER, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA DEPARTMENT, DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS OF THE WORLD WAR

It is believed that this will be the first time in radio history that four department commanders of the four major veterans' organizations—namely, the United Spanish War Veterans, Veterans of Foreign Wars, the American Legion, and the Disabled American Veterans of the World War—have broadcast on the same program.

The spirit of cooperation shown throughout the past year by these commanders is again manifested by their appearance here to-night.

It gives me great pleasure at this time to introduce to you Maj. Samuel J. McWilliams, department commander of the District of Columbia Department, United Spanish War Veterans.

ADDRESS OF MAJ. SAMUEL J. M'WILLIAMS, DEPARTMENT COMMANDER OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA DEPARTMENT, UNITED SPANISH WAR VETERANS

As the guest of the Disabled Veterans of the World War, I feel highly honored. However, it is not for myself that this honor is extended, but for and to that splendid group of American veterans who fought and won one of the most decisive wars in the history of mankind, before many who now hear my voice were conscious of mundane affairs. I refer to the soldiers of ninety-eight and to America's war with the Kingdom of Spain. I say that was a decisive war because the issues submitted to the arbitration of that armed conflict has never since been raised on the American Continent, and no one has ever questioned who won the war. I like to refer to that epochal event as the second discovery of America; and, by a singularly strange and grim irony of fate, Spain was the discoverer on both occasions. But it was not Spain alone who, out of that conflict which drove Old World tyranny from the Western Hemisphere and proclaimed a new world power of the first magnitude, discovered something new. Our own people discovered in themselves a united people, knowing no North, no South, no East, no West, with renewed devotion to those high ideals made sacred by the blood of our fathers. It was indeed a grand discovery, and none can claim so great a share in the supreme joy afforded by that revelation than we sons of the North who shared the hardship in camp and in field with the sons of the South and found their loyal zeal to Old Glory equal in every respect to our own. And Europe also discovered something. She discovered a new world power with high ideals, willing and able to make good that immortal pronouncement in the American Declaration of Independence that the power of government may only be exercised at the consent of the governed, and to enforce, if need be by armed power the Monroe doctrine, never since questioned. But time will not admit our attempt to further recount even in part the many blessings to ourselves and to humanity resulting from that conflict, or to mention the individual acts of valor displayed or hardship endured by those who took part in it, although their memories inspire and the temptation is great.

I should like to dwell again in tender memory with the immortal Roosevelt, the gallant Lawton, the invincible Dewey, Fitz Hugh Lee, Joe Wheeler, the spirited Funston, and a hundred other heroic souls whose deeds of valor have been preserved in history and will remain as a priceless heritage to generations yet unborn.

> "There are moments, I think, when the spirit receives > Whole volumes of thought on its unwritten leaves.
> There are moments that glow with an angel's fair face,
> There are hours that throb with the hope of the race."

We can not stop to do further honor to these heroes or to those other sainted souls who gave their lives in that conflict; their memories are tender and sacred, but the living present cries to us for the solution of present-day problems which threaten our very existence as a free Republic and to reduce our Nation to the state of helpless China, which to-day is at the mercy of a much smaller nation but one which has at all times been prepared for aggressive action against its weaker neighbor. Again the voice of the pacifist is heard seeking to destroy our Army and our Navy under the false plea of economy. These modern Copperheads fought the efforts of our Government during the days of the World War as persistently and as viciously as did their kind of Civil War days, which hampered our Army and so sorely distressed President Lincoln. Not satisfied with the destruction they have wrought to our pitifully small Army and to our Navy, which must protect us against future wars if wars are to be averted, they direct their vicious shots toward the men who won our past wars and demand the repeal of all veteran legislation which undertakes only in part to equalize their economic status with that of the slacker who remained out of the war and profited at the expense of the Army. While the veterans bared their breasts to German steel and "took it on the chin" in the blood-soaked fields of Flanders those who profiteered in blood now seek to deny to the distressed of them all assistance except and in case they have first been reduced to abject poverty. In respect to both of these issues must their challenge be met "head on." From the point of efficiency our Army and Navy must be strengthened to second to none in the entire world, if further wars are to be averted; and the veterans who won our past wars, and their dependents, must be provided for against want when weakened by age or infirmities, if we are to preserve our self-respect as a nation. It is a strange cry that those of great wealth now make against the man who served in the trenches of Flanders at $30 per month, less insurance and Liberty-bond deductions, while they amassed great fortunes on abnormal profits from the war. No question was raised as to the credit of our Government or its ability to pay so long as the profits flowed into their coffers; but now that the flow has stopped and adjustments are in order they shudder in fear of greater taxes and cry "Treasury raiders" when friends of the Nation's defenders in Congress propose legislation intended to smooth the economic paths of their most unfortunate.

It would be far more consistent with the true situation, and more in keeping with the spirit of equality and justice, if men of great wealth would offer up prayers to the fates to preserve us against further wars, and to draft memorials of thanksgiving and praise to the veterans for preserving them from the demands of German tax collectors, which would have been their lot but for the sacrifices of these men, many of whom are now and evermore will remain helpless invalids. The picture which we now see in Germany, of the tax-burdened citizen turning over his crops and his cash as tribute to a conquering foe, and the misery attending, is mild in comparison with what would have been the plight of the American people had Germany won the war and Kaiser Bill made good his threats to "take it out on America."

It is these enemies of our country, happily in the minority but dangerous because of their wealth, and the doctrines they stand for, that we veterans of all wars must face in these times of peace, and in our contest with them we solicit the assistance of all true patriots who have never failed us in the past.

Mrs. O'NEILL. It is again my pleasure to introduce to you another department commander—Charles B. Jennings, department commander, District of Columbia Department, Veterans of Foreign Wars.

ADDRESS OF CHARLES B. JENNINGS, COMMANDER OF THE VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES, DEPARTMENT NO. 1, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Good evening, everybody. You have just heard the able remarks of Comrade McWilliams, of the United Spanish-American War Veterans, who has told you something about that wonderful organization of his. You will in the course of the evening hear from the representatives of the other three major groups of war veterans, namely, Commander Fraser, of the American Legion; Commander Turner, of the Disabled American War Veterans; and myself in behalf of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States. This program is given to you through the courtesy of station WJSV, a station that always has our interest at heart, and through the endeavors of Mrs. O'Neill, commander of General W. W. Atterbury Chapter of the Disabled American War Veterans. As a result of her efforts, the four veteran groups have been brought together for the first time in a program of this nature.

Fundamentally speaking there is little difference in the various groups of veterans. The difference appears mostly in our eligibility requirements. Commander McWilliams represents that group of men who served in the stirring days of '98 in the war with Spain my good friend and comrade, Fraser, represents those whose services are identified with the World War; my good friend and comrade, Turner, represents that group who were injured or wounded in the late World War, while I have the honor to represent a cross section of American veterans—men who have served their country in time of war from the days of '48 up to and including the recent crisis in China. Our eligibility requirements are not limited to any particular war or period of our history; but we do require that one must have an honorable discharge from the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, or still in active service in the aforesaid organization with a record of foreign service in time of war or during an expedition recognized by the War or Navy Department by the issuance of a campaign badge. Hence the V. F. W. represents a veritable cross section of America's fighting men. Until death took the last surviving member a few months ago, our ranks contained those who served with Taylor in the Mexican War of '48. We still boast of those who served with Grant and Lee in the days of '61; those who followed the flag in the war with Spain, storming the heights of San Juan and El Caney; or with Dewey at Manila Bay. Men who followed Chaffee before the walls of Peking during the Boxer uprising; gobs and marines who landed at Vera Cruz in 1914; cavalry men who followed Pershing into Mexico; men who participated at Cantigny, Chateau-Thierry, St. Mihiel, the Argonne, and in Siberia during the World War; marines and blue jackets who were under fire in Nicaragua, Puerto Rico; and men who defended American lives during the very recent China trouble. Our oldest member is around the century mark, and our youngest a mere lad of 17. We call ourselves the evergreen organization because of the fact that just so long as there are wars, just so long will there be a V. F. W. dedicated like our sister organizations to the principles of Americanism, pledged to promote comradeship among our members, obligated to care for needy comrades in distress and to provide for their widows and orphans, and sworn to protect the United States of America from her enemies, whosoever.

One of the cardinal objectives of our order, and of all veteran groups, is to preserve the history and the memory of our dead, and special emphasis will be laid upon that phase of our endeavors in conjunction with all veterans next Monday—Memorial Day. Prior to that day the Veterans of Foreign Wars will live up to their slogan of remembering the dead by helping the living. We will launch here in the District of Columbia our annual buddy-poppy sales. You see there buddy poppies in the hands of our representatives Friday morning. You can identify them by the little green copyright label bearing the legend, "Buddy poppy made in United States hospitals." These poppies were made by disabled veterans in the Government hospitals, who will be benefited by the proceeds derived from the sale thereof; for a part of the proceeds will go to those who made them, giving them the opportunity to make a little spending money to purchase a few little luxuries they are now denied, or to send to their families who are deprived of their services, much-needed financial help. A part of the proceeds will go to support the Veterans of Foreign Wars National Home for the widows and orphans of deceased comrades, located at Eaton Rapids, Mich. This home is sponsored by the Veterans of Foreign Wars and supported by that organization. It is the only institution of its kind in America to-day. Although the Government provides a home for the old soldier, it remains for the Veterans of Foreign Wars to provide one for widows and orphans. The remainder of the proceeds will go to the relief of veterans and their families here in the District of Columbia. The President of the United States, the District Commissioners, and many others have indorsed this sale and we hope you will by purchasing a poppy. On Memorial Day the Veterans of Foreign Wars will join with the other veteran groups in carrying out the program of the day under the auspices of the few surviving members of the Grand Army of the Republic, an organization revered and respected by all of us. These exercises will culminate in services in the Amphitheater of the Unknown Soldier, whose tomb is a national shrine to-day. The unknown soldier, it is true, is a product of the World War; but in the short space of time elapsing since his interment in Arlington Cemetery, he has become symbolic of American war dead, irrespective of the war in which they died or the manner in which they left our ranks.

It is fitting, therefore, at this time to recall the burial of this unknown hero. Many of my listeners this evening were no doubt spectators to the solemn ceremonies surrounding that event. You will recall that scarcely 10 years has elapsed since his body lay in state in the rotunda of our National Capitol, from whence it was carried to its present resting place. Many of you will recall the funeral procession of that day. Leading the procession and in humble homage there walked a President of the United States. By his side there marched the Commander in Chief of America's Expeditionary Forces, John Pershing. Behind these two dignitaries there trudged members of the Cabinet, the judiciary, of Congress, and high officials in Government life. Then came a police patrol, and then in a horse-drawn vehicle rode America's war President, then a troop of cavalry, and then on the caisson that had borne Lincoln, Grant, Dewey—and later Harding—rode the flag-bedecked casket containing the immortal remains. In the caisson's wake marched representatives from the various military and civic orders. On either side of Pennsylvania Avenue thousands stood and watched, through tear-dimmed eyes. Slowly and surely the column serpentined its way to Arlington Cemetery and there at a selected spot halted, that final tribute might be paid. At this spot the crowned heads of Europe, through their proxies, paid their nations' tribute; at this spot the rulers of the Asiatics, through their proxies, paid their nations' tribute; at this spot the Presidents of the Latin Republics, through their proxies, paid their nations' tribute. At this spot a President of the United States, in the name of the American people, eulogized. A firing squad fired a soldier's salute, and a trumpeter sounded a soldier's farewell, and as the last clear clarion notes of the bugle echoed and reechoed over the hills of Virginia, the casket was lowered into a grave. A grave—it is nothing but a hole in the ground, that is filled again; it is as it was; but then a cross is nothing but two sticks, a crown but a band of metal, a flag but a stained piece of cloth. We take none of these for their material worth, but for their symbolic value. Hence the cross is symbolic of Christianity, the crown of sovereignty, and that dye-stained old flag with its azure blue and its argent white and its crimson red, is symbolic of the grandest Nation that ever saw the rising or the setting of the sun.

That grave in Arlington is to America what Westminster Abbey is to England, what the pyramids are to Egypt, and what Napoleon's grave is to France—a place for pilgrimage, a spot for worship. And who lies in that grave to make it so hallowed, we do not know; it is to be hoped that we shall never know, for to know would be only to detract from the sacred sentiment that now enshrouds the spot. He might have been a degenerate of the Barbary coast, or he might have been from the élite of Park Avenue. He might have been just released from penal institutions, or he might have been a minister of the gospel. He might have been a free son of the West who quit the logging camp or cattle trail to give his all for his country, or he might have been one who occupied his own small sphere in a Government office. He might have been yellow; he might have been red; he might have been black; or he might have been white; but whoever and whatever he was, he plied one trade worthy of plying—the trade of a soldier—and he died one death worth dying, the death of the soldier. He died that men might live, and we know that he was called by the Commander of All Battles and bivouacked on His right. We know that his body lies in its sacred shrine, symbolizing the deeds of those whose services will never be forgotten, and he is to us veterans—veterans of all wars—a constant reminder of the fact that we are dedicated to the principles for which he died—the principles of America, of Washington—life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; the principle of Lincoln—with malice toward none, with charity for all; and the principle of Roosevelt—one God, one flag, and one country.

Mrs. O'NEILL. You have heard the splendid addresses of two of the District of Columbia department commanders, and it is hoped that you will enjoy the remarks of the following two.

I now desire to introduce to you Fred G. Fraser, District of Columbia department commander, the American Legion:

ADDRESS OF FRED G. FRASER, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA DEPARTMENT COMMANDER, THE AMERICAN LEGION

Comrade Commander O'Neill, my associate department commanders of the District of Columbia, comrades, friends, before proceeding with my part in this harmonious gathering, permit me to thank our charming hostess, Comrade O'Neill, of the Disabled American Veterans, for having arranged this program and the authorities in charge of station WJSV for their courtesy.

The American Legion is on record in the Halls of the Congress and with the American people in its care of constructive legislation as regards the disabled veteran, the widow and orphan, national defense, veterans' preference, and hospitalization. For several months past the public at large has heard of the American Legion's activity on behalf of the unemployed. Newspapers throughout the land have not only cooperated with us, but have commended our constructive leadership in this worthy cause.

The American Legion's stand for national defense does not mean to imply that it believes in war; on the contrary, it emphatically means that those who served their country in time of war know the horrors thereof, and unless our country is adequately prepared, another conflict is certain to follow.

We hear much talk these days of Government expenditure on behalf of veterans. We must realize that these expenditures are a direct result of our war engagements and the responsibilities that such conflicts brought upon us. We all recall the stirring days of 1917 with the bands playing, the flags waving, the cheering and the sudden outbursts of oratory, which promised to those brave lads going to the defense of their country everything that a grateful Government was able to give. And to-day in time of peace, those who defended their country in time of war are heralded by some unscrupulous individuals and advertised to the public as Treasury raiders. Yet we must realize that the obligations of war do not cease with the signing of an armistice, but continue on for generations. Preparedness in time of peace does not mean that we are aiming at war, but it does mean the ultimate saving of human life, useless and unnecessary expenditures and the safeguarding of our shores against a foreign foe. We talk to-day of a movement called economy that will practically disarm our country and leave us open for attack. Other countries are not disarming, other nations do not want war, but they believe that the best way to assure peace is by being adequately prepared. Our national defense at the present is one of the weakest in the world and the further curtailing of appropriations for the Army and Navy will leave us exposed to the expenditure of billions, being unprepared as we are, and in the event that we are called upon to defend our land against a foreign invasion. A few months ago, newspapers throughout the country carried glaring headlines informing us that Japan had invaded China. We know that Japan is small in regard to area and population in comparison with China. Had China been prepared for such a crisis, she would have been spared the great loss in human lives. France, in the late political battle, placarded the entire country with the following phrase: "France has experienced invasion four times in the last 100 years and must not disarm without being assured of its security." Another prominent poster blazed out: "Frenchmen, remember that my predecessor of 1914 was a victim of facing the enemy insufficiently armed."

Veterans' organizations claim that the sacrifice of human life in the late World War, which numbered 10,000,000 dead, 19,000,000 wounded, 9,000,000 orphans, 5,000,000 widows, would have not taken place had the countries been prepared and sufficiently armed. Therefore, we veterans represented here this evening call upon you to assist us in every way possible to prevent further disarmament by the United States and to make certain that every avenue of preparedness to secure peace shall be opened.

In 1917 a proclamation was declared that we were in a state of war and that all citizens would be called upon to serve their country toward a victory that would make the world safe for democracy and peace for all time. To-day, however, we have equally as important a crisis—we all know what it is—unemployment. Are we facing this test or are we shrugging our shoulders and leaving it to the other fellow to do? My comrades and friends, have you ever been without employment? Do you realize the hardships that it brings to a home? Oh, the first few weeks perhaps slip by like a holiday, but as weeks lengthen into months it is harder to smile. Shoulders bend and heads bow. Gradually self-respect is lost and faith in God and man dwindles. If the unemployed person is married, he becomes obsessed with the idea that even his own family no longer respects him. This unemployment situation is indeed a terrible calamity. These unemployed citizens do not want charity, they want work. In the past we have realized and appreciated too little the benefits of labor, forgetting that it is one of our greatest blessings. This Government of ours, of the people, by the people, and for the people, can not afford to leave thousands of its citizens without employment. Such a condition not only breaks down the morale of the country but it impairs the health of the future generations.

Just a word at this time to Members of the Congress who believe that a move should be made to cut Government salaries, prevent the filling of vacancies, and the refusal to recognize justified and well-earned promotions. We veterans believe that such a step would tend to break down the morale of the employees in the Government service. It would surely mean a step backward instead of forward. The masters of industry and capital must assume responsibility in meeting this crisis by refusing to cut prices on commodities—they should reassure their employees that the bottom has been reached and that employment is guaranteed and secure. By so doing the element of fear would be destroyed. Can't Members of the Congress realize that their movement to cut Government salaries is most harmful? Can they not realize that it is a direct challenge to all employers to do the same? Can they not see that when the spending power of a community, State, or Nation is decreased that it retards industry?

A reduction in salaries would necessarily mean that the standards of living would likewise be lowered, and how in the name of common sense can we buy more when the power to buy is being constantly decreased, and how can a Government maintain law and order when appreciation of human values is lost in the interest of a false movement known as economy?

Can not the united veteran citizenry of the District of Columbia call upon you for assistance at this time, as you called upon us in 1917? What do we wish you to do? Write your Congressman and Senator; tell them that you are for preparedness for America's sake and that you are opposed to a cut in Government employees' salaries, because such an act would tend to destroy the fine standards of the American citizenry.

Mrs. O'NEILL. Now, last but not least, I desire to introduce to you my own commander, Lee T. Turner, department commander District of Columbia Department, Disabled American Veterans of the World War.

ADDRESS OF COMMANDER LEE T. TURNER, DEPARTMENT COMMANDER DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA DEPARTMENT, DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS OF THE WORLD WAR

Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience and Mrs. Helen Evans O'Neill, first woman chapter commander of the Disabled American Veterans, it is doubtful if at any time since the armistice there has been such a mass of propaganda in the public press and over the air on the matter of veterans' relief as has been placed before the public in the past few months. In other words, the men who are to-day suffering because of the part they individually played in winning the World War have been suddenly thrown into a distinctly defensive position.

It will no doubt be news to the listeners to know that the first war risk insurance law was enacted before the First Battle of the Marne in 1914, or almost three years before America entered the war. This was in the form of protection to Americans in the crews of ships endangered by submarine activities. From that day on there has not been a session of Congress during the past 18 years that has not amended in some way this basic act. In other words, the original law has been changed and altered and patched until it contains many features that should be smoothed out.

However, the position of the Disabled American Veterans is that, instead of Congress appointing a committee to hold executive sessions and then bring out from behind closed doors bills that overnight would deprive hundreds of innocent disabled men of benefits, amendments to be made should come from deliberate across-the-table discussion between Members of Congress, officials of the Veterans' Administration, and the representatives of the service organizations. If such procedure is not to be followed and Congress pursues a wild chase to effect economies, it is manifest that in the actual operation of any new enactments damage will be done to the very persons Congress has been endeavoring to protect.

The public should not be beguiled into believing that $1,000,000,000 a year is going into the pockets of the World War men. If such a condition, or approximately such a condition, existed, there might be justification for the use of the expression "Treasury raiders" to this class of Americans whose patriotism was amply demonstrated not so many years ago. This billion dollars is the total sum which the Government uses in a year to pay every cent of administration salaries, maintenance of institutions, pensions from the War of 1812 up to and including peace-time payments of pensions to men who served in the military or naval forces when the country was not at war.

It is not my intention to bore this audience by a recital of tiresome statistics but, if anyone who is listening in is sufficiently interested to analyze the costs of relief covering all the wars of more than a century and will address me at the office of the District of Columbia Department of the Disabled American Veterans in the Transportation Building, I will be pleased to forward to him or her a copy of the annual report of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

While it is conceded that the veterans' relief costs have run into high figures, it is believed a calm study of where the money goes would go far to dissipate the effect of the aggressive propaganda which has gone far toward putting the former service men in a most unenviable plight during these days of national depression.

But, getting down to the World War, there are three separate and distinct classifications of the men who served. There is the able-bodied veteran, who constitutes the vast majority of the former service men of the country to-day, and to him the Government has granted only an adjusted-service certificate payable in 1945. This certificate is in no way, shape, or form a bonus, but merely an adjustment between the pay he received while a soldier and the average pay of the average American during war times. Even the fact that the soldier had his meals and uniform paid for was deducted, and he is allowed the difference between his Army pay and a dollar a day for domestic service and a dollar and a quarter a day for foreign service. Obviously this is not a bonus but is merely a belated endeavor to adjust service pay. Up to last year there was due on these certificates about one-half of what would be due in 1945, and Congress allowed veterans to borrow up to that point. However, the point is that aside from this Congress has made no monetary allowances to the overwhelming majority of those who served. The second class of veterans are the men who served and are to-day disabled. Regardless of the cause of this disablement, if it is permanent, there is an allowance which averages about $18 per month, or a little more than 50 cents per day, as long as the ailment continues, with a top figure of $40 per month for total and permanent. The third class of veterans number a few more than 300,000 out of more than 4,000,000,000 men who were under arms. These are truthfully disabled veterans in the sense that their disabilities resulted from the war. Based upon the assumption that if there had been no war these men would not have been disabled for these particular causes, Congress and the American people have accepted the obligation of compensating these men—so far as compensation is possible—for the results of the hazards of war on identically the same principle that a commercial company would compensate a workman for a disability received in connection with his work.

The Disabled American Veterans is an organization composed exclusively of men suffering as a result of their participation in the war, and while the relationship continues most friendly and there is a mutual tie of comradeship with the able-bodied as well as the men who once served and are now disabled, the Disabled American Veterans has made a determined stand on the matter of eligibility. Our membership is composed of service-connected disabled men, and our objective is the conservation of the rights of these men through obtaining them justice. We resent and oppose any suggestion of charity in the relationship of these service-connected cases with the Government and the people and, based on that, are opposed to the so-called pauper clause that would deprive men whose disabilities were a result of their service receiving the small compensation the Government grants them purely because they have had sufficient courage and intelligence to fight his way back into civilian pursuits in spite of war handicaps.

Just as the Disabled American Veterans is extremely strict on the matter of eligibility for membership, so do our officers endeavor to protect the prestige that the organization has built up during the past decade in its relationship with the public and Congress. Appearing before a committee the other day, the Hon. JOHN E. RANKIN, chairman of the Veterans' Committee in the House, made this public statement: "I say without hesitation and without fear of successful contradiction by anybody, that there is no organization that has done more for them or worked harder to secure just, adequate, and equitable relief for the disabled veterans of the World War and their dependents than the Disabled American Veterans." Having received this unqualified endorsement from the head of the committee handling veterans' affairs in Congress, Gen. Frank T. Hines, administrator, then made this statement concerning our cooperation on the matter of policies with the agency set up for distribution of relief: "I desire to testify as strongly as I can to this organization's efforts in assisting the disabled man in many ways." Asked by a Congressman whether the Disabled American Veterans had been an asset to the Government, General Hines said, "Yes; I say that unqualifiedly. I think they have been and they are of assistance to us now."

Within the next few days it is expected that the Senate Economy Committee will bring in its report to that branch of Congress and, if rumors may be credited, there will be proposed large reductions in the outlay for veterans. When this was tried in the House a couple of weeks ago it was possible to defeat the plan; and if the Senate committee recommends in its report that there be a curtailment of relief to service-connected cases, it will find the Disabled American Veterans mobilized to its fullest extent to repel any such injustices. There could unquestionably be vast savings in different governmental activities, and there might be savings here and there in the Veterans' Administration; but if the effort is made to have America break her solemn pledges to care reasonably for those who are to-day disabled because of the part they played in the war, the Disabled American Veterans will oppose it to the last ounce of the organization's strength.

Mrs. O'NEILL. Now, ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience, you have heard the program which, no doubt, is the first ever given to the public over the radio, and we sincerely hope that you have enjoyed it. Thank you.

LOANS TO STATES—SYSTEM OF HIGHWAYS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12445) to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by authorizing and expediting a public-works program and providing a method of financing such program.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, before the Senate recessed yesterday afternoon, some discussion was had of a proposal to limit debate in order that some decision may be reached touching the bill within a reasonable time. I desire now to submit a request for unanimous consent, namely, that after the hour of 7 o'clock p. m. to-day no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes on the bill or any amendment thereto.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I would like to explain to the Senator from Arkansas the situation that confronts me. I have been working for some time on what I believe is a very important proposal in connection with the bill. Under orderly parliamentary procedure, it being practically in the nature of a substitute for the committee amendment, it can not be offered until all amendments to the text of the committee amendments are disposed of. There have been, as the Senator knows, a great many of those amendments offered each day, and the debate on those amendments has consumed the time of the session. If I were to agree to the Senator's request, not knowing how many individual amendments there are to the text of the committee amendment, and judging from our experience on previous days in the consideration of the bill, the entire time might be exhausted on those individual amendments and I would have to present my proposal under the 10-minute limitation proposed in the Senator's request. Obviously I can not do that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, since the Senator from Wisconsin implies an objection to the request which has been stated, I ask the privilege of submitting another, namely, that on amendments to the text of the bill no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 15 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, on yesterday I made a short statement in regard to a farm bill that is on the calendar and has been there for more than a month. Unless I can get some understanding as to when it shall be taken up separately I propose to offer it as an amendment to the pending bill. For that reason, and until I find out a little more about it, I must object to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I understand that the Senate is not in a mood to agree to a limitation of debate to-day. I ask unanimous consent that after the Senate meets to-morrow no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 15 minutes on the bill or upon any amendment thereto. I will say that if that is agreed to I shall cooperate with other Senators who may feel disposed to do it to continue to-day's session, so that it will not interfere with the amendments which it is indicated will be proposed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I have had printed and lying upon the table several amendments to the bill, some of which are important. I have determined, however, that there is but one of the amendments which I am proposing which affects the question of policy involved in the measure. I shall offer that amendment only. I am entirely willing to accommodate myself to the 15-minute limitation suggested by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is very kind of the Senator.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. MCNARY. I think we all share the desire of the Senator from Arkansas for a complete and yet early decision with respect to the unfinished business. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] desires to present a conference report. I have discussed the matter with him, and he is willing to withhold the report until reasonable time may be given to the further consideration of the unfinished business.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is entirely right in his position, namely, that he wants full opportunity to present his substitute, but he can not do so until the text of the unfinished business is perfected. Let me suggest to the able Senator from Arkansas that we run along two or three hours—say until 2 or 3 o'clock—at which time we can determine what disposition may be made of the text of the unfinished business. Then I think we can probably come to some agreement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well, Mr. President; but I wish to say before relinquishing the floor that I appreciate the attitude that has been taken by the Senator from Washington, and for my part I do not mean to impose upon him any embarrassment or serious delay in the consideration of conference reports on appropriation and other bills.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement. I want to help to expedite action on the pending measure in every way possible, so that it may be disposed of as rapidly as it possibly can be; but I think I should call the attention of the Senate to the condition of the appropriation bills.

The general deficiency appropriation bill has not as yet been reported.

The Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill has not been acted upon by the Senate, although, of course, it has been acted upon by the House and has been reported to the Senate and is ready for action by the Senate. After the Senate shall pass it, of course it will have to go to conference so that the differences between the two Houses may be adjusted.

Then there is the independent offices appropriation bill, which is in the same condition.

The agricultural appropriation bill has not as yet been finally disposed of, there being some items still pending in conference.

The War Department appropriation bill is still in conference, and there has been no report on it made to either House. So also with the naval appropriation bill, which is likewise in conference.

The bill making appropriations for the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor is still pending. The conference report is prepared and ready to be presented, but has not been acted upon by either body as yet.

As to the legislative bill, the conference report is ready to be presented to the Senate at the very first opportunity.

The District of Columbia appropriation bill is still in conference and has not been acted upon; it is necessary to adjust the differences between the two Houses in regard to that measure.

So the Senate can very well see that the great majority of the appropriation bills which are supposed to be passed by the 1st of July are still pending.

The independent offices appropriation bill is especially urgent because of the checks that have to be made out for the soldiers. There are about a million of such checks, if not more, and it takes time to get them out, and, unless that bill shall be acted upon at a very early date, a very serious situation will confront the Government.

As I have said, I want to expedite the pending bill in every way I possibly can, but the appropriation bills must be passed and put into effect before the 1st of July. Other measures can run, of course, indefinitely if it is necessary. I hope it will not be necessary; but we must press the appropriation bills as rapidly as possible.

I am willing to withhold action on some of these conference reports, in the hope that some satisfactory sqlution at least may be reached with reference to the bill that is now pending, but after that, if I find it necessary, I must insist as much as I possibly can on having the appropriation bills kept before the Senate until finally disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], which is the pending amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 101, line 12, before the word "period," it is proposed to strike out the word "reasonable," and in the same line, after the word "period," to insert "not exceeding 30 years."

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, may I suggest that the clerk use the new print of the bill. We have on our desks a new print with the amendments which have been adopted indicated. When the clerk states amendments from the original bill, they do not correspond to the pages and lines of the new print. It seems to me that the amendments ought to be stated from the new print.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will announce that it is impossible for the clerk to use the new print. The official copy must be the copy used at the desk.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I understand that the new print was prepared only for the information of the Senate, but that, so far as the parliamentary situation is concerned, we must still use the original bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, that is quite right. Under the rules the amendments must be stated in their relation to the official text. I might suggest, in view of what the Senator from Michigan has just said, however, when the location in the official text has been stated that the clerk can readily tell us on which page of the new print which has been prepared for our convenience we may find the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] to the committee amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I offered an amendment yesterday to strike out section 8.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator temporarily to withdraw the amendment and that it was laid aside.

Mr. ASHURST. If there is no other amendment pending, then I wish to renew the amendment to strike out, if it be in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment of the Senator from Arizona.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 112, after line 16, it is proposed to strike out section 8, as follows:

SEC. 8. (a) A commission is hereby created to be known as the Industrial Commission, and to be composed as follows: 5 Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate; 5 Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker; and 9 other persons who shall fairly represent the various industries and employments of the United States, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

(b) It shall be the duty of the commission to investigate questions pertaining to agriculture, labor, manufacturing, and business, including domestic and foreign commerce, to report to Congress from time to time, and to recommend such legislation by the various States of the Union and the Congress as will harmonize conflicting interests and be equitable to the laborer, the employer, the producer, and the consumer, and which is calculated to revive trade and promote the general welfare. Upon the completion of its investigation the commission shall submit a final report to the Congress.

(c) The commission may hold hearings and, if necessary, it may appoint a subcommission or subcommissions of its own members to make investigations in any part of the United States; and it shall have authority to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths and affirmations, and to incur necessary expenses, including expenses for clerks, stenographers, messengers, rent for place of meeting, and printing and stationery, in an amount not to exceed $50,000 per annum for the purposes of this subdivision.

(d) The commission shall cease to exist upon the expiration of two years after the date of enactment of this act. The salary of each member of the commission appointed by the President shall be at the rate of $3,600 per annum. Each member of the commission shall be allowed his actual traveling expenses.

(e) Any vacancy occurring in the commission by reason of death, disability, or any other cause shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

(f) A sum sufficient to carry out the provisions of this section is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I need not discuss this amendment more than to say that it proposes to strike out section 8, which provides for the creation of a commission composed of 5 Senators and 5 Representatives, who are to serve without salary, and 9 additional members, who are proposed to be paid a salary of $3,600 a year. It is also proposed to grant to this commission the sum of $50,000 for rent, clerk hire, and stenographers.

I see that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the author of the provision, is not present. I understood he was to be here. So, Mr. President, I shall withhold the amendment until that Senator comes into the Chamber. I do not care to suggest the absence of a quorum, as we just had a quorum call. I have nothing more to say at the moment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. I inquire what amendment is pending?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. The Senator from Arizona had an amendment striking out section 8, which he has temporarily withdrawn.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if there be no further textual amendments, in view of the absence of the Senator from Maryland, I ask unanimous consent that his amendment may be laid aside without prejudice, and I will then be prepared to go forward with the amendment I desire to offer.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I have one or two amendments to offer.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I mean no discourtesy to the Senator from Oklahoma, but I shall ask the Senate to vote on the amendment I have offered and if the Senator from Oklahoma feels aggrieved, I shall support a motion to reconsider, if he sees fit to make such a motion. But in the interest of progress I should like to have a vote on my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona to the amendment reported by the committee, which the secretary will again report.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 112, after line 16, it is proposed to strike out section 8.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arizona to strike out section 8. Those in favor of the amendment to the amendment will say "aye"——

Mr. SMOOT. Yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Contrary, "no." The ayes seem to have it; the ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire to move to strike from the bill subdivision (b) beginning on line 18, page 101.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President. as I understand the amendment of the Senator from Arizona, it was to strike out all of section 8.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct, and the amendment was agreed to. The Senator from Alabama proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 101, after line 17, it is proposed to strike out the following:

(b) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to advance to the Secretary of Agriculture, in addition to the amounts allocated and made available to him by section 2 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, not to exceed $40,000,000, of the amounts made available under section 2 of this act, for the purpose of financing sales of agricultural products in the markets of foreign countries in which such sales can not be financed in the normal course of commerce, but no such sales shall be financed by the Secretary of Agriculture if, in his judgment, such sales will affect adversely the world markets for such products. Any loan or advance made by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purposes of this subdivision may be made with or without security, as the Secretary of Agriculture deems advisable.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss this proposal at any length; but I desire to call attention to the fact that numerous protests have reached me with reference to this particular provision. It will be noted that it provides $40,000,000 to be turned over to the Secretary of Agriculture to be utilized by him in financing sales, evidently abroad. I can not vouch absolutely for the statement which has been made to me with reference to this proposal and which I am now about to call to the attention of the Senate; but I have been informed that the Secretary of Agriculture has caused the suggestion to be offered in seven different bills in the House of Representatives; that it has not met with approval in the House; and, as a matter of fact, I am informed, that if it should be adopted on this measure, the chances are that it would receive opposition from practically the entire Democratic membership of the House.

The objection which has been offered to this proposal has come, in the main, as I understand, from farmers. They do not desire that the wheat and cotton which is now held by the Farm Board shall be dumped on the markets of the world at this time. They believe that it would be injurious to the market and would further, if possible, reduce prices.

I believe it will be found by anyone who may be interested that the Secretary of Agriculture has been seeking to get this power since the very beginning of the present session of Congress. Personally, I am not willing to risk the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture, as is provided in this amendment.

It will be noted the provision reads in part:

But no such sales shall be financed by the Secretary of Agriculture if, in his judgment, such sales will affect adversely the world markets for such products.

It may be that there are some who believe that the record of the Secretary of Agriculture is such as to lead to the conclusion that we should place this vast power in his hands. It has not been such, however, as to convince me that his interest in the American farmer has been so manifest that we can trust him with this fund of $40,000,000, to be used within his discretion and affecting the market for every cotton farmer and every wheat farmer in America.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to inquire exactly what the Senator's proposal is. Is it to strike out paragraphs (b) and (c)?

Mr. BLACK. It is to strike out paragraph (b) entirely.

Mr. FLETCHER. How about paragraph (c)?

Mr. BLACK. As I understand, subsection (c) has nothing to do with subsection (b).

Mr. FLETCHER. Is it the Senator's construction that this money would be used by the Secretary of Agriculture to unload on foreign markets the surplus wheat and cotton that is now on hand under the control of the Federal Farm Board?

I rather favored this provision. My idea was that it was to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to open up new markets for agricultural products in this country by extension of time, and being able to finance sales which otherwise would not be made at all, and that it would apply to new products of agriculture—not to the surplus on hand.

If that is carried out, I should think this provision might accomplish a great deal of good by enabling us to dispose of our cotton and wheat and other agricultural products in places where otherwise there would be no opportunity to dispose of them. If it is simply to facilitate the handling of the surplus, I do not see that that would help our producers very much; but there are opportunities in foreign markets whereby, with a little financial help, such as extension of time beyond the time demanded by banks, our products—cotton, for instance—can be disposed of, and where present existing financial facilities will not accomplish that result. If cotton can be sold to spinners in Europe on such length of time that they can convert the cotton into goods, and market the goods, and then pay their bills, it seems to me that would be a very desirable thing to accomplish; and that could be done under this sort of an appropriation. If, however, it is simply to unload the surplus on foreign markets, I rather agree with the Senator about it.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, the measure specifically leaves it within the power of the Secretary of Agriculture to refrain from making sales if, in his judgment, such sales will affect adversely the world markets for such products. If this is a proposal to help agriculture, it should be taken up with the Agricultural Committee. It has no place in this bill. I am informed by the chairman of one of the most important committees of the House that the Secretary of Agriculture has tried for months to obtain a provision of exactly this kind in various measures. I am also informed that he has not met with any success in the House. In several instances he has tried to get $100,000,000 instead of $40,000,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I was very much perplexed as to what this particular provision meant and what its object was; and I had supposed that when we got into the discussion of it, some Senator would defend it. What is the reason given by those who are for this provision for its inclusion in the bill?

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORBECK. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that I want the Senator from Alabama to complete his remarks, and then I will try to explain the provision.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I am not going at any length into a discussion of this proposal which seems to have found its way into this bill—a bill in which, in my judgment, it is wholly improper to place such a subject. If the Farm Board needs $40,000,000, the Farm Board ought to get its $40,000,000 by coming up to the committee and suggesting that it should have $40,000,000. Why should it be necessary to go through the circuitous route of the Secretary of Agriculture?

Personally I am not willing to place any such power in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture. My judgment is that many of the powers that have been vested in the Secretary of Agriculture have not been exercised in such a way as to benefit the American farmer. Why should we complicate this bill with this proposal when, according to my information—which can be verified, and I shall be glad to verify it in a few minutes—when the effort has been made in several different instances to obtain the passage of this proposal through the House, either for $40,000,000 or for $100,000,000, the House committees have declined to approve it?

There has been no hearing on this proposal in this body. It was simply inserted, as I understand, at the request of the Secretary of Agriculture. I am also informed that a bill to this effect was introduced in the House by a Member of the House, and that he had published in his home State of Kansas a statement that he offered it wholly and completely at the instance of the Secretary of Agriculture, who had dictated the measure which he had offered in the House.

I am opposed to placing in a bill for the relief of unemployment a provision for turning over to the Secretary of Agriculture at this time $40,000,000 which plainly could be used for purposes beyond those which clearly appear in the bill. The provision leaves it entirely to his discretion. Of course it has been amended so as to state that adequate security shall be given for loans; but we still have the provision that we are vesting in the Secretary of Agriculture the power to dump on the markets of the world the wheat and the cotton which are now held; and every time any of those products are dumped at the present time they displace other cotton and other wheat that might be utilized for sale in those foreign markets.

While this provision is being explained, in order that I may be absolutely sure, I am going to call up and ascertain just how many times the effort has been made to secure the passage of this proposal in the House, and how many times it has been rejected.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, there has been advanced here a new line of argument that I shall not discuss, and that is, whether we shall assume that the attitude of the other House is a certain way and vote accordingly. I can not go into that matter. I am sure the Members of the House do not take that view toward us. They wait until our bills come over, and then deal with them on their merits as they think best.

Mr. President, this provision is to take care of some surplus grain that was bought by the Farm Board and put in storage. It is one of the mistakes of the Farm Board. It is the proof of their bad judgment. It confirms the worst suspicions that I had when I voted against the farm marketing act. Not only two years ago, but some five or six years ago, when Senator Lenroot urged it, I said that if we would let a Government board speculate in grain with Government money, they would lose the money; it would be pointed to forever as proof of the fact that nothing could be done. We were headed into a blind alley at the time, and we went into it, and this is the result.

But, Mr. President, we are faced now with three alternatives. What are we going to do with this grain—export it, sell it in an American market, or keep it in storage as the Farm Board has been doing, where the cost of storage will eat up its value in three years, and we will still have the grain; and, worst of all, it is a threat on the market that depresses the market, because nobody will buy grain, not knowing what day it will be released.

There is really only one alternative to the export plan, and that is to impound the grain and announce to the world that it never will be sold. We can take our choice between leaving it as it is, selling it abroad, or impounding it so that it shall never be sold and never be used.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes.

Mr. KING. We appropriated $500,000,000 to the Farm Board which was to be used as a revolving fund. Certainly they have not lost the entire $500,000,000. Why do they not use a part of that and sell this wheat and take their losses? If they can get only 20 cents a bushel for it, why not sell it and get rid of it, if that is the wisest course to pursue? We gave them the $500,000,000, and certainly that has not all been squandered.

Mr. NORBECK. I am unable to answer the Senator from Utah from the record, but I think it is well understood here that the Farm Board are so involved and so obligated that they can not carry on this transaction.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NORBECK. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that this $40,000,000 is for the purpose of enabling the Farm Board to get rid of this surplus that they have on hand?

Mr. NORBECK. Absolutely; I understand why the Secretary of Agriculture is designated here is that there is such a feeling that the Farm Board should not be trusted with this undertaking, and there is an effort made to intrust it to somebody else who seems to enjoy more confidence for business ability, but I happen to know that the Farm Board is perfectly willing for the Secretary of Agriculture to handle it.

Mr. BORAH. What I am asking the Senator—and I have very great respect for his judgment in regard to the matter—is, What will be the effect of trying to unload on the market, through the process here outlined, this surplus? What would be the effect upon the price of the wheat that the farmer has produced this year?

Mr. NORBECK. The plan they have in mind is unloading it outside the tariff wall, which is 42 cents high. We have this year a wheat crop that is only equal to the domestic demand, and there is not any reason under the sun why the tariff of 42 cents should not be effective; and we should get 42 cents more for the wheat than we are now getting, without increasing the cost of bread to anybody, if we will get this wheat out of the way and do the best we can with it. I think it is one of the things that will really relieve the wheat situation for one year.

Mr. BORAH. Let me ask the Senator whether there has been any investigation as to where they could dispose of this wheat. I can not think of any place they can place this wheat that it will not hurt the farmer, except in China.

Mr. NORBECK. Of course, if they should dispose of it in the United States, it would depress the market. It must be exported. Whether or not they can export it all remains to be seen; but this will give them the money with which to do it in case they find the market, and they think they can, as I understand. If, however, it can not be done, of course, no action will be taken.

Mr. BORAH. Has there been any hearing upon this matter? Has anyone come before any committee and undertaken to explain where they are going to send this wheat?

Mr. NORBECK. This matter has been discussed informally a good deal for the past two years in the Agricultural Committee, and China has been looked upon as the most hopeful market; but the question of marketing is not a thing that we can determine here in the Senate, whether that wheat shall be sold, or at what price it shall be sold, or how it shall be sold. We are simply giving a governmental agency the power to do it, in the hope that it can do it, and thereby relieve the situation of wheat and cotton; and this would be especially effective with regard to wheat.

Mr. BORAH. We are naming here the Secretary of Agriculture; but, of course, the Farm Board will do the business, if any business is done.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. NORBECK. I do.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Inasmuch as the idea which prompted the incorporation of this provision in the bill has been the subject of some discussion, I feel like saying that the sponsors of the bill had in mind, in incorporating it therein, the considerations adverted to by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. None of them had in mind at all the utilization of this fund for the purpose of disposing of any of the grain held by the Farm Board. I am not a little surprised to learn that it is in contemplation now that it shall be used for that purpose.

Mr. NORBECK. Will the Senator pardon me? It is possible that I did not make a clear enough distinction in regard to the matter of surplus. I am assuming that there is practically no surplus in this year's crop. It may have been that when they started out they wished to dispose of the surplus; but I think the weather conditions and the economic conditions have taken care of that, and that the only threat of any importance hanging over the market is the Farm Board wheat.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Very well, that may be; but the idea that was in the minds of those who incorporated this provision in the bill was that by reason of the world-wide depression our ordinary export market would be almost altogether cut off, or at least very largely restricted; that the ordinary way in which exports of agricultural products are financed could not be in this situation relied upon; that the foreign purchasers of commodities would be unable to get the financing which they usually have, and therefore that it would be necessary to extend to them credit which, under ordinary circumstances, would not be extended, at least for a longer period. So it was intended to utilize this for the export of agricultural products in that way.

I do not know how the impression was conveyed to the Senators who took the responsibility of framing the bill, but I got the impression some way or other myself that a bill to this effect had passed the House of Representatives and was now pending before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate. I am informed, however, by the chairman of that committee that that is erroneous, that no such bill has come to that committee; but I do understand that the subject has had consideration by the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate.

However, Mr. President, if it is believed that this is for the purpose of further financing the operations of the Federal Farm Board, I am not going to interpose any objection at all to the excision of this paragraph from the bill, for if the Farm Board requires further financing it ought to be taken care of by a straight appropriation from the Treasury to the Farm Board and we should not be relying upon resources derived from the sale of bonds to take care of the unemployment situation further to finance the Farm Board.

It appears now, from the development of the discussion, that it would scarcely be applicable to any other exports than those which might be carried out by the Farm Board.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, would the Senator be better satisfied if it provided that the current surplus should be dealt with and the Farm Board be instructed to hold the wheat for another year, so as not to depress the market?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; but if I were framing a bill, I should put in a provision for the export of the agricultural surplus other than that held or acquired by the Farm Board, or any of its instrumentalities.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator means limit it to the others?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Limit it to stocks other than those held by the Farm Board.

Mr. NORBECK. I am one of those who think that even that might, under certain conditions, be helpful. I think we must not deal lightly with this problem. I think that the prices of farm commodities, at least certain of them, are absolutely involved in the action we take on this paragraph.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if this provision is not to take care of the surplus, and get out of the way the surplus which is constantly depressing prices, I do not see how it is going to benefit the farmers of the country. What we are trying to do is to lend money to some government or somebody in Europe or elsewhere by which they can turn around and buy wheat from us.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; the idea would be to lend the American exporter of grain who is obliged to give credit, long-time credit, to the European purchaser.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; in other words, they have not the means by which to purchase, therefore we lend to the exporter, and he can extend credit to them; but in the sum total of things it amounts to the same thing, because if they are not able to pay we lose, for the exporter will not be able to pay.

Another thing we have to bear in mind is that the markets of the world for the products which come in competition with our farmers are well supplied. Why should they come here to buy from us when they can buy from other countries where the products are just as cheap?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, this is a bill for furnishing employment, and, of course, to extend credit to Europe in the sum of $40,000,000 would furnish a vast amount of jobs to American unemployed.

Mr. BORAH. That is true; but if this will affect the prices of farm products, and it can be shown to be in that respect relevant, it would have its tendency to take care of unemployment. But I can not see any benefit to the farmer arising out of this matter. If I can see in it an increase of farm prices, I will support it, but I must be assured of that.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, if we can get away from the surplus that depresses our market, so that our production which is sold in the United States is not in excess of the demand, we have made the tariff effective, and this is a year when the wheat production is so low that it seems rather easy to do that.

Mr. NORRIS obtained the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator a few moments ago indicated that he wanted to hear from some one who had something to say in behalf of this amendment. I want to state that I fully agree with the position taken by the Senator from Montana, and I undertook to state that when the Senator from Alabama was discussing the matter.

Let me just illustrate, very briefly, what I think we could accomplish, possibly, under this amendment, in line with what we attempted to provide for in section 5 (a) of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act.

Let us suppose that there is an exporter who has been in that business for a great many years, who has connections in European countries, say in Germany, France, Italy, England, and other nations of Europe. At present that exporter is unable to finance his transactions because of the breakdown of financial institutions in Europe to a large extent, and because of the general banking practice that commercial paper, short-time paper, usually runs about 60 or 90 days, and therefore the banks are not able to take care of the bills of lading, and drafts, and exchange, and that sort of thing.

There are opportunities in Europe, however. Europe has not gone all to pieces. People are living over there, just as they are in this country, from day to day, transacting business, somewhat hampered and limited, of course, but things are going on, and the people have to have clothing and they have to have food.

Under the usual and customary financial operation through the banks, the millers over there and the spinners over there can not arrange to have the banks take care of their paper, so that the goods they would import from this country can be paid for now. They would be helped if we could set up some sort of machinery here whereby we could say to our exporters, "You are in touch with millers; you are in touch with spinners. They want this wheat; they want this cotton." I take those products just to illustrate, but the same thing applies to other products. "But they can only buy them provided they can have six months' time in which to pay for them."

That means that they want time enough to convert the raw material into the finished product, the wheat into flour, to manufacture the flour into bread and sell it, and to be in a position to put it on the market. Then they can pay for it. The same thing applies to the spinners. They say, "Give us enough time so that we can convert the cotton into cloth and put that cloth on the market, and we will meet our obligations."

They are perfectly responsible concerns. They can even get their own banks to guarantee them if we can take care of their paper in the meantime and accomplish the operation. If we arrange to assist along that line, we will get markets which we have not to-day, because those foreigners can not pay for the goods. Give them time enough and they can pay for them, and the banks and other institutions will guarantee them.

We are attempting here to place in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture $40,000,000, by which, through proper management and control and supervision, we can finance the sale of our products in the markets of the world, not only in Europe but in China and elsewhere, accomplish the sale of them, and open up markets which otherwise are not available to us at all.

That is the whole thing I have in mind. I do not want Congress to appropriate this money to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to dump on the markets of the world what is stored now by the Federal Farm Board and its subsidiaries. I do not see that that would do any good. I am in favor of opening up markets for the products which are yet to be offered, and that would help the producers of the United States. That is my idea about it. If it is to be confined to finding a market for this stored material, wheat, cotton, and so forth, I do not think we get anywhere by adopting the measure.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the surplus of wheat and cotton remains upon the market here, it will have its effect upon our markets for our home products. We can not expect the price of grain to rise in this country if these surpluses are on hand, ready to be turned onto the market at any time when the Farm Board wishes to put them on the market. We must get rid of the surplus products, in my judgment, that are in the hands of the Farm Board, before we can expect any rise in prices of our products.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should say they ought to feed them out gradually.

Mr. BORAH. They have been feeding them out gradually, and gradually holding down the price of the farmers' products. I said some time ago that if I had my way about it, I would ship that wheat to China and give it to them. That would be infinitely better than holding it here.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I started to say, when the Senator from Florida interrupted to ask a question, that when I first saw this provision in the bill I wondered why it was here, and I have been waiting expectantly to hear somebody give a reason for it. I think the reason has now been given, although those who favor this provision do not agree as to the object to be accomplished by the provision.

The thing that struck me first of all, naturally, I think, was that the intention was to get rid of the surplus wheat owned by the Farm Board. If that be true, why, then, should we go the roundabout way and give the authority to the Secretary of Agriculture to borrow money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of financing wheat or other products, wheat and cotton mainly, over which the Secretary of Agriculture has no authority? As a matter of law, if this were passed as it is here, the Farm Board would not be required to give him the wheat. He could not get it if the Farm Board did not want to give it to him. There is no provision here that the Farm Board shall be authorized to turn that wheat over to the Secretary of Agriculture, even if we give him this authority. So that it seems to me that the reason given by the Senator from South Dakota is not a valid one, and I take it that the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Montana are right when they give us the reasons which they have given as to why this provision should be in the bill.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I want to take those reasons up for just a moment; but before I do that, I will yield to the Senator from Illinois for a question. I hope his question will not be as long as the question propounded by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. GLENN. My question will be very brief. I came into the Chamber just a moment ago. In view of the statement made by the Senator from Idaho—and I have not heard the whole colloquy—I wonder if it would not be well to provide that this fund should not be devoted to use of the Farm Board.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the first thing that struck me, as I said, when I read the provision. If we are trying to get rid of the surplus wheat held by the Farm Board, and we have any additional authority to give in order to enable them to get rid of it, it ought to be given to the Farm Board, of course. I do not believe they need any such authority. I think they have it under existing law. I think all the authority the Secretary of Agriculture would have with this appropriation of $40,000,000 is now possessed, under the law, by the Farm Board. They have the authority to do that very thing. They have the authority, as I understand, to do everything that is provided for here. Why, then, the appropriation of $40,000,000 to enable them to do something which they could do now?

I am wondering, Mr. President——

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I think that, at least according to what the committee had in mind when we reported the bill, the Farm Board had no authority to sell any wheat or any of these products on credit.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator from Michigan, since he is going back to the committee, whether the Senator from Michigan agrees with the Senator from South Dakota or with the Senator from Montana as to the objects of the provision.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] made a statement on the floor yesterday that there was no restriction in the provision as to where the wheat should come from. There was a contemplated restriction as to where the Secretary of Agriculture should buy the product to sell.

Mr. NORRIS. This provision does not come from the Committee on Agriculture. It comes from the Finance Committee, of which the Senator is a member.

Mr. COUZENS. I am trying to explain to the Senator what the Senator from Oregon stated about the matter when it was before his committee. The subject matter was before his committee in several forms as to financing the exporting of agricultural products. What was contemplated was substantially that if the Farm Board or a private individual desired to ship wheat abroad to put in a warehouse there for distribution among any buyers that might appear, then this money would be available for that purpose. In other words, it would be secured by a warehouse receipt. If the Farm Board or a private concern desires to take 100,000 bushels of wheat to China and put it in a warehouse for storage and distribution there, then the shipper would get the money through this source.

Mr. NORRIS. That comes back then to the proposition that the Farm Board is supposed to be operating through cooperative organizations. The real object of the farm marketing act was to help the farmers' cooperative organizations and give them assistance. According to the Senator from Michigan, as I understand it, this plan is intended so the Secretary of Agriculture can loan the money to a private individual who wants to export, and that is the way it was explained by the Senator from Montana. If that be true then we have set up, through the instrumentality of the Farm Board an organization to help cooperatives to dispose of the surplus and handle all the farm products, and by this provision we propose to give to the Secretary of Agriculture $40,000,000 to deal with private parties to go into competition with the very instrumentality which we have set up, known as the Farm Board, so we will have one Government board operating through cooperatives and another Government institution to help kill the cooperatives by operating through private individuals and loaning them money so they may successfully compete with the other instrumentality we have set up to help cooperative organizations. Would it not work that way? Is not that what is going to happen?

Mr. BORAH. It would not work at all.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me that would be the inevitable result. We provide an appropriation of $500,000,000 to help cooperative organizations of farmers. We want to build them up. Then we provide $40,000,000 to tear them down and get private parties to go into the market and compete with the other instrumentalities we have set up.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. GLENN. Further, it is a very liberal provision because it provides that any loan may be made with or without security.

Mr. COUZENS. That was stricken out. It was corrected.

Mr. GLENN. I am sorry; I did not know that.

Mr. NORBECK. No, Mr. President, it was changed—I object to the word "corrected"—because it is not the usual way of dealing necessarily. In fact, I think that restriction tends to make it very difficult to operate, but it was changed. I want to get another vote on that matter to-day if I can. I think if we are going to get the surplus out of the way so as to relieve conditions in the American market, we ought to do something of the sort. I do not find the farm organizations objecting, but I do find the grain dealers objecting, and I find the board of trade objecting. They called me up from the Chicago Board of Trade to object to it. I am at a loss to know what opposition has come from the other side.

Mr. NORRIS. Evidently, from the statements made here, this money is going to be loaned to individuals who are exporters who in turn will have to sell the wheat on long-time terms. We are going to loan the money to the exporter on that same long-time credit in order that he may finance the individual who is engaged in exporting the wheat in competition with our own Federal Farm Board.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. It is provided—

but no such sales shall be financed by the Secretary of Agriculture if, in his judgment, such sales will affect adversely the world markets for such products.

It seems to me that is trying to bestow divine wisdom and power upon the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. NORBECK. I quite agree with the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. GORE and Mr. GLENN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. NORRIS. For the moment I do not yield to anyone.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] says this is bestowing divine power upon the Secretary of Agriculture. I think that is right. But we can do that, Mr. President. That is not difficult. We have a superman at the head of the Government, and divinity is only a little ways off! [Laughter.] I do not think that is any objection.

But I wonder if behind all this there is not something else. We provided after a long debate for the Farm Board. It was President Hoover's method of settling the farm question. It was his redemption of his promise made in the campaign that if he was elected he was going to put the farmer on an equal basis with the manufacturer so far as the tariff was concerned, and in answer to that promise we passed the Farm Board act. It is President Hoover's baby. I do not want to do anything to cripple it.

In the first place, it seems to me we are trying to be on both sides of that controversy that was waged over the Farm Board, and is still being waged to some extent. If we are acting in good faith, we ought not to put this provision in the bill, because it will help to tear down the very Farm Board we have set up. I am wondering if after all it is not another method to attract the attention of the country away from the difficulty in which the Farm Board have found themselves? They went out on the market and bought wheat, for instance, spending many millions of dollars in buying wheat. They raised the domestic price above the world price. That must be conceded by everybody. Immediately from one end of the country to the other went up the cry, "See what Mr. Hoover's action has done. It has raised the price of wheat in America above the world price. We are getting some benefit from the tariff."

To the man who did not look any farther, that seemed like a reasonable proposition. But I now inquire, What are we going to do with the wheat that has been piled up? We are only half through with the transaction. Of course, if I were given money enough, if the Federal Treasury was opened to me to the limit of $500,000,000 and I was told to take that money and see what I could do to help the price of wheat, I could raise the domestic price of wheat by bidding above the world price, and the tariff would keep foreign wheat from coming in here. I could raise the price to the farmers and, incidentally, to the middleman who had ownership and possession of a good deal of it.

But what would I do with the wheat then? If I had an unlimited supply of money, so I could burn the wheat or dump it in the sea, I could keep the price level always above the world price. The Farm Board went half through with their plan. They bought the wheat, bid for it and got it, and raised the price, but then they had the wheat. Then the question is, What are they going to do with the wheat? They can not equalize their business and call it a gain or a loss until they have sold the surplus wheat. I have always said we should wait until they sell it and let us see whether the farmer has been really helped or not. Now that wheat stands like a colossus, and everybody admits that its tendency is to hold the price of wheat down because we all know that some time that wheat is going to come on the market and depress the price. While it raised the price temporarily when they bought it, it will lower the price when they sell it. We can not weigh the Farm Board and its activities to know whether they have been a benefit or otherwise to agriculture until they have completed the job; until they have sold the farm products they now have stored.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. GLENN. In connection with the thought advanced by the Senator from Nebraska may I not inquire if the Government situation in that respect—that is, that they have completed only half of their job and the difficult part is unfinished—is not practically in line with the experience of private business particularly exemplified by our late Chicago Joe Leiter when he bought almost all the wheat in America and upon paper had made a great fortune, until the time came to dispose of the wheat. When he came to dispose of the wheat and the wheat was shipped into Chicago from all over the United States, then the burden became too great and the project, which seemed to have been a very highly advantageous one for Mr. Leiter, turned into a most disastrous one for him when the wheat was supplied and the time came to pay for it. The price fell and, except for his father's great estate, he would have been a bankrupt.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me proceed just a little further. I am wondering if we leave this provision in the bill and the Secretary of Agriculture takes the wheat which the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] said the Farm Board would be glad to give him, just what would happen. They can sell it to the Secretary of Agriculture and not lose much money on it. Then the plan is to let the Secretary of Agriculture send it abroad and lose the money. Then the argument would be made that the transaction has been completed and the farmers got the benefit of it, and nothing would be said about the loss because the loss would fall on the Secretary of Agriculture and not on the farm board. I have wondered if Senators thought that might be the object of the provision.

Mr. President, I do not want to do anything and I would not knowingly do anything that would injure the operations of the Farm Board. I never have. I would have been as glad as anybody to see them succeed. I would be glad now to see them succeed. But I want to be fair with the Government as well. When they make the claim that they have raised the price of wheat to the producer in the great West, I want them to complete the job. I have always contended, and those of us who have worked on the various farm bills to get rid of the surplus have always contended, that we could see no way on earth to deal with farm products where a surplus was produced unless we devised some method by which we could take care of the surplus, and the farm marketing act provided no such method. If it accomplished any good, and it seemed to me it would do something, it would be simply a steadying of the market.

But after all, under the law by virtue of which the Farm Board is now in existence they must deal with world markets, because when they get the surplus, unless they dump it back and kill our domestic market, they have to sell it on the other side of the tariff wall and take a lower price for it. That is the reason why it seemed to me they were trying to pull themselves over the fence by pulling on their own bootstraps. I do not believe it is economically sound. I said so when the farm marketing act was before us, but I failed on every provision that I favored. I have seen the idea go down to defeat in the main on account of the opposition of the President of the United States. I have seen him stand like a stone wall against the equalization fee provision, against the debenture plan, against the other bills introduced soon after the war by which we undertook to establish markets abroad to handle our surplus products.

I have always said, and so have those who have been in this fight since the end of the war, "If you have a better method, let us have it; we have done the best we can; we have suggested remedies in the shape of bills; we have seen them go down to defeat on account of the power and the influence of the administration. Now if the administration can do better, we give them carte blanche and welcome them into the field." As an answer to that challenge came the farm marketing act. It was Mr. Hoover's proposition in the campaign, and because the people of the United States believed that he was a superman, and, as the Senator from Iowa has intimated here, was closely related to Deity, he could perform feats in the economic world that nobody had ever before performed. So with a sweeping majority he was given the power. We passed the law he desired; he appointed his own Farm Board. They have been operating, and we have seen the results.

This is another plan, it seems to me, as to which nobody seems to know just exactly why it is here. Members of the committee do not agree as to the reason for putting the provision into the pending measure. I think it is here for the purpose of letting the Farm Board creep out of a hole out of which they ought not to be allowed to creep.

We ought to be fair with the Farm Board, and they ought to be fair with us. They have the authority now under the law to do just what we are proposing to give authority to the Secretary of Agriculture to do. They have already sold wheat in China on long time; they have already sold wheat in foreign markets and also have traded it for other commodities, as in the case of the coffee of Brazil. I hope they will succeed in their trading, but there is not any reason now, it seems to me, to try to help them creep out by permitting the Secretary of Agriculture to have $40,000,000 which I think he will use for the purpose of handling the surplus wheat the Farm Board has and of taking the responsibility off the Farm Board, so that when the transaction shall have been all completed, if we do not trace it clear through to where the money which has come from the Treasury has actually gone, we will think that we have spent the money well, because the farmers obtained an enhanced price for their wheat by virtue of this buying.

Personally I have not yet heard any reason given that satisfies me that this language has any place in this bill. It seems to me it ought to be eliminated from it, although, if there can be given a reason for its insertion that seems to have some kind of foundation, I am certainly willing to let it remain in the bill. Technically speaking, it has no place in a bill of this kind. As the Senator from Idaho stated, this is a different kind of bill; but I would not object for that reason. If it will help the farmers of the United States in any way, I am willing to put it in, even though technically and properly it does not belong in an unemployment relief bill.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Nebraska that this provision has no proper place in the pending relief bill. I also agree with him that if the section remains its purpose and its object ought to be more clearly defined. I think the powers that are intended to be conferred ought to be defined with more precision.

If the Farm Board has made a success of its operations in wheat and cotton, then this power ought to be conferred and this money ought to be advanced to the Farm Board and let it continue its successful operations. If the Farm Board has not made a success of its operations in wheat and cotton, then why should we try another experiment? What assurance have we that a different experiment will be more "noble" than that of the Farm Board, except as suggested upon the assumption of divine power vested in some authority somewhere in the Federal Government?

The question has been raised as to exactly what this language does mean. Perhaps some light may be shed upon its obscurity by reference to House Joint Resolution 394, introduced by Representative STRONG of Kansas. The newspapers report Representative STRONG as saying that House Joint Resolution 394 was prepared by the Secretary of Agriculture, that it was submitted to him by the Secretary, and that he introduced it in the other House at the instance of the Secretary of Agriculture. If that be true—and I do not doubt it—this joint resolution ought to shed some light on the section now under consideration. The more is this true because the House joint resolution and subsection (b) of the pending measure are in exactly the same language, word for word, for the most part, including the major part of the joint resolution.

I should add that the House joint resolution calls for an expenditure of $100,000,000 instead of calling for only $40,000,000. I make no point of that; the difference is inconsequential so far as the amount of money is concerned. Money grows on trees, and the forest of Vallombrosa grows and flourishes down here in the Treasury Department.

But there is a sort of appendix or codicil attached to House Joint Resolution 394 which does not show up in the pending section and which only illustrates our power to work miracles. It provides that the financing of the sale of wheat and cotton shall be construed to include the purchase of domestic wheat and cotton. I make no point of that. There is no material difference between purchases and sales when the power to work miracles is invoked; but the joint resolution to which I have referred, in which the Secretary of Agriculture has revealed his motives and his objects, authorizes him, under the power to finance sales, to effect purchases of wheat and cotton and to add to the stores already hoarded by the Farm Board.

Not only that, but this House joint resolution authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to make sales either for cash or upon credit. I shall refer to the credit proposal in a moment. Whether this authority is to be limited to cotton held by the Secretary of Agriculture now—and he holds 400,000 bales—whether it is to be limited to wheat and cotton held by the Farm Board ought to be made clear.

Mr. President, where are these sales to be made in foreign lands? We have a wheat carry-over now of something like 300,000,000 bushels or more, much of it held in the hands of farmers, much of it held in the hands of the private trade, searching the globe for markets—every crevice, every cranny, every market where a bushel could be sold being searched with the eagle eyes of private traders anxious to dispose of this surplus. Where is it to be sold? Spain, for instance, has an embargo on wheat until the price passes $1.37 a hundred; France has a tariff on wheat of $1.43 a hundred; Italy has a tariff on wheat of $1.44 a hundred; Germany has a tariff on wheat of $2.70 a hundred; South American countries have tariffs on our wheat ranging from $2 to $3. Where is this wheat to be sold? England, under her new provisional tariff, imposes a duty of 10 cents a bushel on wheat, and newspaper reports say that in her permanent tariff that rate will be raised to $1.03 in order to extend preference rights to Canada and Australia. I again ask, Mr. President, where is this wheat to be sold? And if sold by the Secretary it would plug foreign markets against the wheat now held by farmers and private dealers.

Cotton! The Secretary of Agriculture has 400,000 bales of cotton on his hands, taken over from farmers on loans to them made by the Secretary. The Farm Board owns and controls more than 3,000,000 bales of cotton. We have a carry-over of something like 10,000,000 bales or more, now held by private dealers as well as by farmers searching the earth for market places. Where will the Secretary of Agriculture find a market for this surplus cotton?

I think the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Montana have properly interpreted this provision. If I understand it aright, it authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to lend money to foreign purchasers with which to purchase our cotton.

We sold wheat in China and took in payment Chinese bonds, which ought to be put in a strong box or in a cabinet of curios alongside Fenian bonds and Confederate bonds. We traded wheat with Brazil for coffee and disturbed the coffee market. We have loaned, Mr. President, since the war ten or twelve billion dollars of public money and fifteen or twenty billion dollars of private money to foreign governments and to foreign firms and corporations with which to buy our goods. We can sell this cotton and wheat if we will lend the money to the prospective purchasers with which to buy it. The only point is, Has that experiment proved a success? If Senators are satisfied with it, then let them repeat the experiment by adopting this section—I had almost said "by repeating the folly."

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, my friend from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who is always so fair, shows a little more bitterness than usual this morning in his criticism of the administration and in the handling of its program; but he and I have traveled the same road on this matter. We have disagreed with the administration's policies. We have firmly believed that it was utter folly to go and buy wheat and store it in warehouses. We have believed that it was not orderly marketing, which was declared to be the main principle of the farm marketing act.

Orderly marketing consists in selling as you produce; and wheat must be sold every month in the year to somebody. We have our months of demand in the world market, and when we hold back on it other countries come in and take our place. But the question is, Can we sell this wheat in the world market, Mr. President?

For about 200 years we have been selling wheat in the world market. It is only since the Farm Board came into being that we withdrew from the world market. The world market has been open to us all the time. It is open to us now. It has been open to us only at the world price. It is open to us now only on the same conditions. It is true, however, that the economic situation is harder now; and it was hoped that this wheat might be moved with a little inducement.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] asks, Can we afford to loan $40,000,000 to the debtor? Mr. President, if it raises the price of the wheat that we raised in the United States 10 cents a bushel we will get the money back with 100 per cent interest. If it raises it 40 cents a bushel, it will come back manyfold.

I have not agreed with this administration in all things, but I agree that this is a sane effort, because it is along the lines that the Senator from Nebraska and I have been advocating all the time; and I am not going to abandon it now just because President Hoover comes over to our side.

Mr. NORRIS. I think I would begin to get doubtful about it, anyway, under those circumstances. [Laughter.] And let me say to the Senator that President Hoover never yet has come over to our side.

Mr. NORBECK. If this is an administration measure, he is absolutely coming over to our side. It is to market the surplus abroad. That is the thing we contended for. We have said it is the only thing that is economically sound. Finally, after holding back for all these years, they say, "All right; we will try to do it if you will give us the money."

I see no other way to raise the price of our products, and give us an American price here for American products, than this very way that the Senator from Nebraska and I have been advocating all these years—the very way that it is proposed to do it in this provision this morning.

Mr. President, the depressed economic situation is getting widespread. It started in the agricultural States, but it has spread over the entire Nation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if we want to do that, why not do it openly and aboveboard, and let the Farm Board do it? Why loan this money to the Secretary of the Treasury? Why loan money to anybody? Let the Farm Board sell this wheat on any terms it wants to, as it can do under the law.

Mr. NORBECK. I have no objection to doing it through one agency or the other; but the Senator knows as well as I do that there are a number of Senators here who have said they would not vote another dollar to the Farm Board, and I suspect that this has been done in this way to meet that situation, in order to get the legislation. I have not any objection to doing it in the other way.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. NORBECK. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. If that is true, then we are just putting in "the Secretary of Agriculture" here instead of "the Farm Board" in order to go a roundabout way to get the votes of the Senators who would not vote for something if it was the Farm Board that was going to operate it. In other words, we are going to practice a little deception on them.

Mr. NORBECK. No; why always put the worst possible construction on these things? There are Members of the Senate who do not believe the Farm Board has any business judgment. They are the same Members of the Senate who believe that Secretary Hyde is a successful business man. They will vote for one, and not for the other; and we will simply have to recognize that as a fact.

Mr. NORRIS. If that is true, there are other Members of the Senate who think that the Farm Board has a lot more business judgment than the Secretary of Agriculture has.

Mr. NORBECK. All right. There is room, therefore, for honest difference of opinion on it.

Mr. NORRIS. Then it is only a question as to which viewpoint has the most votes as to what we ought to put in the bill.

Mr. NORBECK. Yes; but that difference of opinion arises out of the different appraisements of different individuals. Therefore, the Senator and I can not decide it for the others.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. NORBECK. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. GLENN. As I understand, there is a large group of Senators here who have no confidence in the business judgment of the Farm Board. There is another group of Senators who have no confidence in the business judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture. So this is a provision whereby, having already provided a fund for the Farm Board, we now provide a fund for the Secretary of Agriculture, in the hope that by voting funds to both outfits we will find one that has some business judgment.

Mr. NORBECK. There is room for difference of opinion, and I quarrel with no man who has an opposite view on that matter. I am simply suggesting that there seems to be no other way to give the American farmer an American price, and no Senator has suggested any other way.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. NORBECK. I do.

Mr. PITTMAN. As I understand the Senator's position with regard to wheat, there are only three ways of dealing with this matter. One of them is to get this wheat out of the country and keep it from hanging over the future market. Another is to impound it, and let it be known that it always will be impounded.

Now that the Senate has voted an appropriation of $300,000,000 to be used to lend to the States for the purpose of meeting destitution, would it not be better to take this wheat and turn it over to the Red Cross or allocate it to the States for the purpose of feeding the destitute? The destitute can not buy any of the wheat of the crop that is coming on.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, we have already done that.

Mr. PITTMAN. Well, why not eat up the rest of it?

Mr. NORBECK. Because there is more wheat raised in the United States than we are able to eat; and if that were not so, we never would have any surplus.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am only talking about this surplus that is in the hands of the Farm Board. That wheat is there. It is a constant threat as against the future market for wheat in this country; and, as the Senator has said, it must be gotten rid of; otherwise it is a constant "bear" on the price of the future crop.

This provision proposes, in a sense, to get rid of it by aiding in the sale of it to foreigners. It is contended that that will itself consume part of the future export market of the wheat, if there is a surplus. The Senator from South Dakota thinks there will not be a surplus. Others think there will be a surplus, but what I am getting at is this: We believe that it will require at least $300,000,000 in the near future, commencing now, or possibly with the next session of Congress, to take care of the destitute; in other words, to feed them. There will have to be bread bought with that $300,000,000.

Mr. NORBECK. No; in the total cost of living bread is a very small percentage.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; but a great many of these people to-day would be very glad to have half a loaf of bread.

Mr. NORBECK. Yes; and the Congress has made provision for that.

Mr. PITTMAN. I know that bread is a very small part of the cost of living of those who have something else to live on; but I venture to say that a loaf of bread to-day would be a great help to a whole lot of people.

Mr. NORBECK. Undoubtedly.

Mr. PITTMAN. If we really think we are going to spend $300,000,000 to meet that destitution between now and next winter, why take the $300,000,000 and buy bread with it if we already have, in the form of wheat, bread that we want to get rid of? Why do we not just substitute in that proposition and provide that all of this wheat in some way shall be made available for those who can not buy flour to eat between now and December, instead of impounding it in a warehouse?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. NORBECK. Just a minute.

That is a detail. The surplus problem simply grows out of the fact that we produce more wheat than we can eat. If everybody eats all the bread he can eat, we still will have a surplus; so when we take it out of one place and move it to another place within the domestic market, we have simply relieved the pressure in one place and put it in another. There is no remedy for this surplus except to get it into the usual channels of trade, where it has been going for more than a century, where the world's demand has always absorbed it; but what little is needed here at home certainly should be provided. It has been provided.

Mr. PITTMAN. We have 10,000,000 idle wage earners in this country now. We have at least 7,000,000 on top of that number who are dependent on them; so that we have 15,000,000, then, who can not buy. Otherwise, we would not be appropriating this little sum of $300,000,000. They can not buy. Now, why take money out of the $300,000,000 to go and buy with one hand, and give with the other?

The proposition is this: What we want to do under this proposal is to sell all this wheat to some starving Chinese. That would be a pretty good idea if we did not have starving people here; but, as a matter of fact, the chances are that it will not be paid for for a long time to come, and we know that out of this $300,000,000 we are going to pay for bread right away.

The Senator says there is more wheat than we can eat. I do not know how much there is. How much wheat is there now in the hands of the Farm Board?

Mr. GORE. Ninety million bushels.

Mr. NORBECK. The figures of the Senator from Oklahoma will be accepted by me.

Mr. PITTMAN. Ninety million bushels; all right. How long will it take 15,000,000 people, between now and the end of next winter, to eat up 90,000,000 bushels of wheat? I venture to say they could eat it up, considering the fact that they will get hardly anything else to eat.

Mr. NORBECK. Yes; and then we will pile up another 90,000,000 bushels elsewhere, so that it will amount to exactly the same thing.

Mr. PITTMAN. But we are dealing with this surplus now.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, the Senator must not get this confused. This $300,000,000 for relief to give employment is in order that the workingman may be able to pay his house rent, may be able to pay his meat bill, may be able to buy his shoes, may be able to buy clothing for himself and his children, and their schoolbooks. Only a small part of it will go into wheat. The Senator from Nevada and I are not in disagreement.

Mr. PITTMAN. I know; but if we refrain from taking out of this $300,000,000 fund the amount that would be spent for bread, we would have that much more in the $300,000,000 fund; would we not?

Mr. NORBECK. It would be just like the Senator's silver. If we have not it at one place, we have it at another place. If we have a surplus, if we do not have it in the warehouses, if we supply a certain domestic market with the wheat in the surplus, then we have shut out just that many bushels from going into the domestic market. Therefore there is no solution in this deal except to export what we can not eat.

The Senator and I have voted for all the wheat the Red Cross wanted, and we will vote more. That is all right; but it is such a small part that it is not a solution. It is not even part of a solution.

Mr. PITTMAN. The whole truth about the thing is, and the complaint the Senator has against the Farm Board is, that they did not relieve the pressure on the market by buying, because this wheat has still hung above it.

Mr. NORBECK. My complaint of the Farm Board is that they have put this wheat in the warehouse instead of marketing it abroad, as they could have done, when the world's market would absorb it. My complaint of the Farm Board is that they did not conduct orderly marketing. It is just as the Senator from Nebraska says; they gathered it and put it in warehouses and created a little demand because it was out of reach, and then we have it to sell afterwards.

Mr. PITTMAN. Does the Senator know where there is any market for it abroad now?

Mr. NORBECK. I know that we produce only one-fifth of the world's wheat, and that 80 per cent of the world's supply, or four times more than we raise, is being marketed and consumed in the world. Our part of the export is an exceedingly small part of the world's market; and I have had exporters come to me in this building and show me inquiries they had from Europe saying, "What can you sell us wheat at?"

Mr. PITTMAN. If the Senator knows where there is a market for it abroad, let us put a direction——

Mr. NORBECK. I did not say there was a market for all of it. The Senator asked whether there was any demand for it. I say there is. I am not saying that anyone can go out this morning and sell these 90,000,000 bushels. I doubt it very much. I do maintain that this wheat would have sold itself all the way along at the world price if they had let it go.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is perfectly evident to me, although I am not a farm expert, that the farmers will have to get rid of this wheat that is hanging over their heads. They will have to get rid of it either by shipping it to somebody who can not pay for it for a long time, or they will have to have the distressed people of this country eat it. I would rather have it eaten by the distressed people here than to have it eaten by the distressed people somewhere else who can not pay for it. I would rather have it eaten than to have it remain in warehouses for three years, where we are paying for storage, and it is becoming useless; and when we recognize the distress in this country I can not understand why we do not utilize something like this to meet it.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I desire to say that I feel that we are dealing lightly with an economic problem, but perhaps we can not deal with it in any other way. It is as plain as day, however, that prosperity can not return until purchasing power returns. It is as plain as day that if purchasing power does not return there will be liquidation. We can take our choice between trying to restore a normal condition and letting it drift. If it drifts, it will drift into one of two things: It will either drift into the bankruptcy courts, or it will drift into a cheaper kind of money, some form of inflation. We are going to face one or the other, and it is inescapable.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, it seems to me the point raised by the Senator from Nevada is certainly well taken. It seems to me that, besides the other apparently well-taken objections to this provision, first, it has no place in this particular bill; secondly, the question of further aid to the Farm Board, either directly, or through subterfuge, is a subject of such importance that it is entitled to consideration, and full consideration, upon its merits, and not to be intermingled with a bill of this character, are matters which, it seems to me, are of great importance.

After all, what does this section intend to provide? It intends to provide $40,000,000 for the furnishing of wheat to people who now are unable to pay for that wheat, and therefore to take that amount of wheat out of the competition in this domestic market, and send it abroad to feed people who can not pay for it. That is exactly what this means, and that is all it means.

I think the point which the Senator from Nevada makes is entirely sound. We can supply a domestic market, a market which can not now be supplied for this wheat, by providing that it be allocated and furnished to people in our country who now can not buy wheat and can not buy bread. It will help the wheat surplus situation just as much to allow this wheat to be purchased and furnished to people who now are unable to buy bread in the United States, as to finance the purchase of the wheat by people in foreign lands who now do not buy it because they have no funds.

What is the difference upon the surplus wheat situation, or the cotton situation, whether people in Europe are enabled to buy it, or people are provided with money to purchase wheat and cotton in the United States who now have no means with which to purchase it? They would not buy this wheat in competition now, because they have not any money. Why not have our Government provide that those people shall be the ones to eat this wheat and wear the clothes made from this cotton, rather than that we should send our money abroad to enable people abroad, now unable to buy these commodities, to buy them?

Mr. President, yesterday I heard a school-teacher from the city of Chicago testify that there come every day into the common schools of the city of Chicago thousands and thousands and thousands of little boys and little girls, American boys and American girls, unfed that morning, without bread or any of the other products of wheat, of which we have this great and abundant and overflowing supply. Why can we not provide means by which those children, and children like them in every great industrial center in the country, may be enabled to consume these surplus products, thereby making a wider market for the farmer? Why will it not be as sound for us to provide that this surplus be consumed by these unfed, undernourished, starving children of our own, rather than to provide by the sending of $40,000,000 of our money abroad, that people there, destitute perhaps, and unable to buy, may be empowered and put in position to buy this wheat and this cotton and these other commodities?

I think that in our effort to aid and assist the farmer it is our first duty at the same time to be thinking of the people of our own country.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GLENN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I agree with what the Senator has said, if I may transgress just a moment on his time. In my judgment, the Federal Farm Board is never going to solve the agricultural problem. It has a lot of wheat on hand, and the sooner it gets rid of it the better everybody will be.

I think, myself, that in the end most of it is going to be given away, and certainly there is need now to utilize it to feed the unemployed and the hungry and the starving people, particularly in the large cities, of our own country. I would much rather give it for that purpose than to have $40,000,000 more of good money wasted, perhaps, in a foreign gamble which would not pay 10 cents on the dollar.

Mr. GLENN. I thank the Senator from Maryland. As he says, we can do all for the farmers that this section provides, according to its sponsors, by taking this surplus wheat and furnishing it to the people of the United States who now can not buy wheat from the farmers or cotton from the farmers. We can save this $40,000,000 to the taxpayers of the United States, and we can do all for the farmer that can be done by the Secretary of Agriculture if he had the $40,000,000, and at the same time we can save thousands and help thousands and thousands and thousands of people of the United States who now want bread made in the United States from American wheat.

I certainly am opposed to this provision of the bill.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I just want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this is the first challenge we have had of all the statistics since they were ever published. Here is one assertion that we are able to consume our surplus, and that if every stomach were full, there would be no surplus, notwithstanding the fact that we have a hundred-year record proving the contrary.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, we have a hundred-year record, but we have never had an experience or a time in the United States within that hundred years comparable with our present sad situation.

Mr. NORBECK. That is all right, but the size of the bushel is the same as it was then, and the size of the stomach is the same as it was then.

Mr. GLENN. But there are more empty stomachs now than ever before.

Mr. NORBECK. But when they were full, we never disposed of the surplus. That is the point I make.

Mr. GLENN. We can dispose of a lot of it in feeding the American people.

Mr. NORBECK. A lot of it, but not enough to affect the price.

Mr. GLENN. It would not take much time to divide up $40,000,000 worth of wheat among needy people in the months and months and months of the dire winter we are facing in the United States. That $40,000,000 worth of wheat which it is proposed to have the American taxpayers provide to send abroad would be consumed in the United States long before the snow cleared up in the spring.

Mr. NORBECK. It matters not whether the farmer gets 30 cents or 70 cents per bushel?

Mr. GLENN. It makes no difference to the American farmer whether that wheat is consumed abroad or in the United States, so far as that is concerned, by people able to buy. What difference does it make whether that wheat is consumed here by a boy or girl who can not buy bread in the morning for breakfast or whether it is bought by people of Europe?

Mr. NORBECK. The only difference is whether the tariff of 42 cents a bushel is effective.

Mr. GLENN. The tariff has not anything to do with this at all.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is apparent from what has been stated that there was no enthusiasm behind the proposal to name the Secretary of Agriculture to administer the $40,000,000 fund provided in subdivision (b) of section (2) of the bill before us. The section referred to directs that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation advance to the Secretary of Agriculture, in addition to the amounts heretofore allocated and made available to him by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, a sum not exceeding $40,000,000. The evidence before us conclusively shows that the Secretary of Agriculture and his allies have been exceedingly active in trying to secure an additional appropriation of $100,000,000 to finance the sales of agricultural products in other countries. The importunities of some of those sponsoring this proposition were ignored by the House, but they have been successful apparently in securing a part of their program which is represented by subdivision (b) referred to.

For some time it has been manifest that the Federal Farm Board and its supporters were determined to retrieve some of its blunders by getting rid of a large quantity of cotton and wheat, in which hundreds of millions of dollars of the money of the taxpayers had been invested. The Federal Farm Board and its friends learned that Congress was unwilling to make further appropriations to be expended by the board. Its past record has been such as to not only not inspire confidence but to convince a large part of the American people, as well as Congress, of its past unsound and, indeed, unwise and foolish policies.

There has been no little propaganda and pressure to induce Congress to appropriate further funds to the Federal Farm Board. I have received a number of communications, evidently inspired, urging that I support appropriations for use by the Federal Farm Board to enable it to dispose in foreign markets of wheat and cotton surpluses which it had purchased and was holding at great cost to the taxpayers of the United States. Copies of resolutions have been forwarded to me by a number of so-called cooperatives, eulogizing the Federal Farm Board, and approving its conduct—good, bad, and indifferent. I condemn the propaganda which is being carried on in behalf of the Federal Farm Board and the manifest determination of some of the direct or indirect agencies of the board, such as the Farmers' National Grain Corporation and the Grain Stabilization, and representatives of cooperatives, to persuade Congress to appropriate further large sums to be expended by the Federal Farm Board.

The Senator from South Dakota has indicated that a lack of confidence in the Federal Farm Board led those who proposed this $40,000,000 appropriation to name the Secretary of Agriculture as the agent to handle the fund and to sell in foreign markets wheat and cotton now in the hands of the board. In other words, because of the folly and improper policies of the Federal Farm Board, it has on hand tens of millions of bushels of wheat and enormous quantities of cotton. It expended a large part of the $500,000,000 fund provided by Congress, from taxes wrung from the people, in purchasing large quantities of wheat and cotton for which it finds no markets.

The policies of the Federal Farm Board have been counter to all sound business methods and practices which should have been followed in its activities under the law creating it. The Federal Farm Board—in the language of the street—"ran wild"; it ignored all lessons of history, and demonstrated its lack of wisdom or ability to meet the responsibilities resting upon it. Perhaps the board can not be criticized for its efforts now to find some means of getting rid of the surplus wheat and cotton which it purchased. But who would be willing, in the light of its record, to intrust it with $100,000,000 or $40,000,000 to enable it to sell in foreign markets these two commodities.

It is known that these commodities may not be sold in foreign countries unless credit is extended. The people of the United States are now suffering because of credits which have been extended to foreign countries. The losses which will be sustained by reason of these foreign transactions will be staggering in their proportions. Billions of dollars will be lost by reason of the inability of foreign governments, corporations, and individuals in other lands to meet their obligations.

We have learned that the members of the committee reporting this bill did not understand that it was contemplated that this $40,000,000 was to be used to relieve the Federal Farm Board of some of its surplus wheat and cotton and to aid it in minimizing the results of its foolish experimentations. The plan, however, has now been revealed.

The Secretary of Agriculture is to be substituted for the Federal Farm Board in attempts to dispose of the wheat and cotton held by the board in foreign markets. It is admitted that credits will have to be extended to foreign purchasers if sales are made. With the enormous losses which the American people have sustained during the past few years by extending credit and making loans to foreign governments, corporations, and individuals there is no great desire to take further chances and to run risks of losing additional millions of dollars. Personally, I would prefer to have the Federal Farm Board handle the $40,000,000 than to place it in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture. Appropriations have been made both to the Federal Farm Board and the Department of Agriculture, to be used for agricultural purposes, including loans to cooperatives and farmers. Losses thus far have been very great, and undoubtedly when the final day of settlement comes the balance sheet will reveal additional losses. I am unwilling further to tax the American people for the purpose of placing in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture or the board funds for the purposes indicated in the provisions of the bill now under discussion.

Mr. President, this provision has no place in this bill. As I stated yesterday, we are considering a bill to aid unemployment and to help the millions who are unemployed to obtain work and means of support. To take $40,000,000 from the fund which is designed to aid unemployment, and turn it over to the Federal Farm Board or the Secretary of Agriculture, with authority to further speculate in wheat and cotton by disposing of them in foreign countries, not for cash but for promises of payment, can not, in my view, be justified. Many complain that the fund to help unemployment is inadequate. Certainly it should not be impaired or diminished by subtracting from it the $40,000,000 in question, or other sums or amounts.

The Senator from Nevada has suggested that some of the wheat held by the Federal Farm Board, instead of being delivered to the Secretary of Agriculture, be used to feed the hungry and those who are in want. A short time ago a large quantity of wheat, held by the board, was acquired by the Government and distributed through the Red Cross for the benefit of the destitute. Certainly it would be better to adopt a similar course with respect to some of the wheat held by the Federal Farm Board than to approve of the plan provided in the bill before us. I have no doubt that the board and some of the forces of the administration will make a strenuous effort to have this provision of the bill adopted. In my opinion the provision is unwise and the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama to eliminate it from the bill should be adopted.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I want to say just a word about this proposal. I have not been able to see how the exportation of wheat and cotton and the sale of wheat and cotton in the foreign market, financed by American money, is going to be of particular benefit to American agriculture at this time. Any supply to the market anywhere is, of course, going to diminish the demand. The exception to that general statement would be to find a market for wheat and a market for our surplus cotton in which cotton and wheat are not now consumed. It is obviously out of the question to develop a purchasing market now for cotton or for wheat; that is to say, develop a market which will consume any considerable portion of our wheat or cotton surpluses now held, where the purchasers or consumers in that market have not heretofore been accustomed to use wheat or cotton.

It therefore seems to me—and I think the suggestion made by the Senator from Nevada and others is wise—that, so far as our wheat is concerned, it might as well be consumed in the United States.

It is true that would cut into the home market for the producer, but if we place the wheat elsewhere in the world market where wheat is now consumed, we are also cutting into the market of the American producer in so far as he contributes to the world surplus, as well as the producer elsewhere. The same thing is true of cotton, and I dare say that there are 40,000,000 people in the United States to-day who could easily consume at least $40,000,000 worth of wheat, who will not consume $40,000,000 worth of wheat if it is not made available to them. In other words, to supply the demand now of the unemployed and needy in America is not going to cut down any part of the market for the American wheat producer, because they are not able to buy or procure the wheat which they otherwise would consume. To withhold this wheat from them is not going to put them in any better shape to purchase any of the wheat which is coming on the market from the present crop.

Many cotton producers and many cotton manufacturers have questioned the proposal to use a portion of the American cotton now held by the Farm Board in this market. There seems to be little force in the objection which they have offered. It might as well be used here, and it ought to be used here, for the all-sufficient reason, it seems to me, that we ought to take care of our own people first. If we are not able to take care of all people, we should take care of our own people first.

I have said to the cotton producers of the South exactly what I am saying to the distinguished Senator from South Dakota now and to the proponents of this particular provision in the bill. If American cotton now held by the Farm Board is with American money exported and financed in any market, it will take up just that much of the world demand for cotton. We are getting the world's price for cotton and we are getting the world's price for wheat, with unimportant exception, and we might as well use our surpluses here if they are to be given away. It is true that if the Farm Board or the Secretary of Agriculture could take so much cotton and could place it where cotton has not been and is not now consumed, where there has not been a demand for cotton, of course it would be wise to export the cotton to supply that demand. But that would not be done. With the world flat on its back, with the purchasing power of consumers exhausted, obviously we can not develop a new market, a new demand for a product which has not been consumed in that market.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. GORE. Does not the Senator think that if the Secretary of Agriculture knows any place in the world where cotton can be disposed of, he ought to communicate that secret to the Farm Board?

Mr. GEORGE. I think he certainly should do so. It seems to me far wiser, far better, certainly more just, that the Congress should furnish aid to those consumers in the United States who can not buy, and for that reason alone will not be able to use, wheat now held by the Farm Board or by 1932 producers. If we furnish wheat and cotton to our needy people in the United States, who have no power to buy, that will be far the wiser thing for us to do.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator recalls that Congress authorized the Farm Board to turn over 40,000,000 bushels of wheat to the Red Cross.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. NORBECK. And there are bills pending to turn over more wheat to the Red Cross. The Senator will also admit that the Red Cross does its work pretty well. We have had no further requests for additional wheat. Certainly the Congress will give it all the wheat it can use, but that does not deal with the surplus.

Mr. GEORGE. I agree with what the Senator has said, but there is a larger demand than the Senator imagines in this country for wheat, for bread, for cotton—that is to say, for clothing—which can not be supplied because the people who need can not buy. They have not the money. All through the rural sections of the South now and during the remainder of this summer and autumn and winter there is and will be a tremendous demand for wheat and bread which can not be supplied simply because the purchasers can not buy, having nothing with which to buy. I have no doubt that here in the United States we could consume the surplus wheat carried by the Farm Board, and could do it with no more injury to our farmers than if we export the surplus wheat, because when we put that surplus in any hole that can be found anywhere in the world, we will have leveled up that hole and there will be no demand for whatever amount of surplus wheat we may produce this year.

But suppose I am only half right—the humane thing, the decent thing for the American Congress to do is to feed the hungry mouths of men, women, and children in the United States as long as those mouths are unfed and as long as they have no money with which to buy the food necessary to feed them or the cotton out of which cloth may be made to provide clothing. As certainly as we stand here in the Senate, in the very fields where the wheat is grown and in the very fields where the cotton is grown which furnishes the clothing for so large a part of mankind, men and women and children will go hungry and shivering during the coming winter.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the motion to strike out now pending should be adopted, would it then be in order to offer a similar amendment, or should the amendment be offered now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It may be offered at any time.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then I offer my amendment now in the nature of a substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas offers an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama. The proposed substitute will be read for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out, insert the following:

Whenever in the opinion of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation (1) there is a surplus of wheat or cotton or other agricultural products in the United States or lack of a market for the advantageous sale of the same, or (2) the ordinary banking facilities are inadequate to enable producers of or dealers in wheat or cotton or other agricultural products to carry such products until they can be exported or sold for export in an orderly manner, the corporation is further authorized and empowered to make advances as hereinafter provided to aid in financing the exportation and sale in the markets of foreign countries of wheat and cotton or other agricultural products produced in the United States. Such advances may be made (1) to any person or group of persons engaged in the United States in producing, marketing, or dealing in wheat or cotton or other agricultural products; (2) to any person outside of the United States engaged in purchasing wheat or cotton or other agricultural products, but only on condition that the moneys so advanced shall be expended wholly within the United States. Such advances shall be made for periods of not to exceed three years and shall be made in such amounts, and upon such terms and conditions, and with such security, as the board of directors of the corporation may prescribe. The aggregate of the advances made pursuant to this paragraph shall not exceed $250,000,000. For the purpose of this paragraph the term "person" means an individual, a partnership, an association, or a corporation.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, this amendment is drafted along the same lines as a similar provision contained in the War Finance Corporation act which we passed immediately after the World War. Senators will remember that the War Finance Corporation was organized primarily for the purpose of furnishing credit to exporters who desired to sell their products in Europe. Senators will remember that that particular activity of the War Finance Corporation was eminently successful and that the corporation finally liquidated its affairs without showing any loss whatsoever. It was even claimed that it made a profit for the Government.

This provision does not limit the loans to the Farm Board; it does not limit the loans to anybody. It provides that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may loan money to any individual, corporation, group of persons, or others for the purpose of financing the exporting of wheat, cotton, or other agricultural products into foreign lands.

I am somewhat amazed at Senators who are opposing this sort of a proposal. Everybody knows that credit has almost vanished in the United States. What is the necessity for the bill at all if there is plenty of credit? Why are we handing out $1,500,000,000 from the Treasury to finance so-called self-liquidating corporations if there is plenty of credit? Why is it that agriculture is the one industry, according to the conclusion of some Senators, that does not need credit to carry on its operations? How are we going to get rid of this tremendous surplus of wheat and cotton? I am talking not only of the wheat and cotton owned by the Farm Board but I am talking about the wheat and cotton and other products that will be produced in this good year of 1932. How are we going to get rid of it unless we sell it in the markets of the world?

How can these operations be financed when there is no credit for any other kind of business transaction unless the Government, through this same agency, the same agency that is going to finance other industries, the same agency that is going to finance bridges across San Francisco Bay and tunnels under the Hudson River, finances them in this same way? How are they going to be financed for exporting abroad when there is no credit abroad? How can a foreign purchaser buy when he has no money? If he is able to buy and then manufacture his goods and sell them in Europe, he can then repay these loans.

This is not an appropriation of $250,000,000. It is simply an authorization to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. If the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can not make loans with adequate security, they do not have to let the money go. If the Reconstruction Finance Corporation does not find the necessity for furnishing this credit, the money will remain in the Treasury. Senators are willing to trust the Reconstruction Finance Corporation with $3,500,000,000 to hand out to other industries according to their judgment and according to whatever terms they may see fit to adopt, and yet they are not willing to trust the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and their integrity to loan even the insignificant sum of $40,000,000 to agriculture. Senators are not willing to give them the authority to do even that much. They are not willing to trust the board, and yet they are willing to hand out $3,500,000,000 and turn it over to this corporation to dispose of as they may see fit.

I submit to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] that that is the truth. My amendment provides a limit of credit of $250,000,000. What proportion is that of the $3,500,000,000 which has been given to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation? It is only about one-fourteenth. If they loaned the whole $250,000,000, they would be allocating to agriculture in all its branches only one-fourteenth of the entire amount that is being devoted to industry and self-liquidating corporations.

Mr. President, I submit the amendment as a substitute for the plan carried in the bill. I do not want to have the credit limited to the Farm Board. I want every cotton dealer and every wheat dealer in America, if he can find a foreign market for his products and needs financial assistance to carry out the operation, to have access to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I would not limit it to the Farm Board.

But, Senators say, we are not going to help things by peddling out this surplus; we are not going to help agriculture in that way. What is going to be done with this surplus? As long as it is hoarded, as long as the Farm Board keeps it locked up in the warehouse, it is a drug on the market. The surplus is squarely straddle of the market for wheat and cotton and will be a burden on the market as long as it is in existence. We have to get rid of it some way, either by giving it away, feeding it to the hungry, or selling it in the world market. I propose this amendment as a method of dealing with the problem normally, sensibly, on sound security, according to every manner and fashion provided for the handling of other transactions by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I dislike very much to find myself in opposition to the viewpoint expressed by my good friend the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. The amendment which has just been offered shows the extent to which we are going in connection with the Government supplying money for various specially favored businesses.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Did the Senator from Alabama vote to create the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and to provide it with $2,000,000,000?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator from Alabama did not, and he spoke against it as vigorously as he could.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. NORBECK. In all good nature, without being critical of my good friend from Alabama, I desire to say that I do not think he should make that statement. It was only yesterday that he talked to me about a very big proposition along this line.

Mr. BLACK. I shall be glad to explain to the Senate what that was.

Mr. NORBECK. The matter to which I refer will come up later, but I do not think the Senator from Alabama is in a different class from the rest of us.

Mr. BLACK. I do not claim to be. I do claim, however, just as I said with reference to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the bill when it was before the Senate, that it was nothing more nor less than communism turned upside down. The communist believes in taking money from the few and favored rich in order to distribute it among the many poor. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation act adopted exactly the opposite plan; it proposed to take the money of the people throughout the country, rich and poor, in order to benefit a few favored taxpayers who could borrow from that corporation. It is but natural that we should advance step by step; and I am frank to state that if this amendment should be adopted, I would favor broad and blanket authority being given to the corporation to lend money to every deserving business in America. Why is it right to select one group engaged in business and industry and lend it money and not at the same time assist every business enterprise in America which is likewise near the shoals of adversity and insolvency? There are in every agricultural section of this Nation merchants upon whom the farmers depend for their yearly supplies who are on the verge of insolvency. Why should we not also take money from the taxpayers and lend it to them? I do not know but that such a plan will later be adopted. I can not tell as we rush on one step after another.

It is a little strange, however, that those who are most responsible for the initial step taken by the Government are those who have made the most complaint about the Government in business and about State socialism. It was members of the group who have stated that certain other people wanted to engraft State socialism on the Government who adopted the plan of digging down into the pockets of the taxpayers to carry on private business that can not stand on its own legs.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama a question. If the Government of the United States is to embark upon the policy of extending credit to one class and another class, to one individual and another individual, does he think there is any proper point where it can stop short of extending universally equal privileges and equal rights to all in this country, whether corporation, firm, or individual? If we are going to draw the line with individuals, what is to be the standard? Has not one citizens as much right to borrow from the Treasury of the United States as has another, if he needs it or if he fancies he needs it?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator absolutely. As I have said, if we are going to broaden the terms of the law, why not let the Reconstruction Finance Corporation lend to everyone engaged in a business which aids to carry on the commerce of the Nation?

Mr. President, I am very frank to state that, in so far as I am concerned, if I believed that this amendment would be an advantage to agriculture I would vote for it, not because I do not believe it is wrong in principle but because I do not believe it is any more wrong in principle than the original enactment of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. However, I do not believe that this proposal would be beneficial to agriculture. On the contrary, I do not see how it would benefit agriculture to lend money to those engaged in the business of selling agricultural products in order that they might seek for and try to find markets throughout the world. The markets are there. We have heretofore depended upon the regular business methods to secure those markets. The original amendment which I opposed provided that $40,000,000 should be turned over to the Secretary of Agriculture in an effort to find markets.

In the first place, I do not believe the Secretary of Agriculture would be the proper man to whom to turn over the $40,000,000. I believe such a course would simply give aid and employment to a large number of deserving Republicans throughout the country during an election year. I am very frank to state that I believe it would go farther and farther toward building up a vast political machine such as much of the so-called relief legislation at this term of Congress has made possible.

If we are going to give wheat and cotton to the people of China, why not give it to them directly? Why pay for the privilege? We can give it to them without appropriating $40,000,000 of American money to do so. They are ready to accept it; they will give us worthless bonds. Why turn over to the Secretary of Agriculture or any board $40,000,000 or any other amount for the privilege of giving the money away to nations that can not pay us? If we were to adopt that exact policy in the business life of our Nation, it would bring about insolvency to every merchant in the country.

Any merchant in an agricultural community can sell his goods to the people in that section if he will first let them have the money with which to buy; there is not any doubt about that; and this provision proposes to turn over to the Secretary of Agriculture $40,000,000 to be used evidently in advancing money to people across the water who have no money with which to buy our products.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. How does the Senator distinguish between the line of argument he is now employing and his eloquence here the other day in asking the Government to loan money to farmers in his State and my State and other States? What is the difference?

Mr. BLACK. I should be very glad to say to the Senator exactly what I stated a few minutes ago. In the first place, if the Government is going into the business of advancing money and helping the people of this country, I prefer the old Jeffersonian principle of starting at the bottom instead of lending it with the idea that big business will let it trickle down to those below. That is exactly the line of distinction. If we are going to advance money as we have done, if we are going to appropriate $2,000,000,000 to lend to those who control the financial affairs of the Nation on the theory that it may trickle down and a few crumbs may fall from the table of the specially privileged, then I say go farther, vote the money directly to the man who is down below and trust, if possible, that perhaps a little of it will ascend to those who are in the higher brackets. That is exactly the line of reasoning. This amendment proposes to lend money to every cotton broker, every wheat salesman in America, and to every grain exchange, if they want to buy, and every other business enterprise in the country.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield further to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator think he is quite fair in making that statement?

Mr. BLACK. That is as I understand it.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; the Senator can not understand it in that way, if he will read the amendment, for it says that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall have authority to do that.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. It shall have the authority to make loans that are sound.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator says that every cotton and wheat merchant in the country could borrow money under this provision.

Mr. BLACK. If I left the impression that the mere application for the loan would be sufficient to secure it then, of course, I correct it, because the application must be passed upon by the board; there is no question about that.

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly, and the board is not supposed to make a loan unless it is a good loan and the money is going to be paid back.

Mr. BLACK. My experience has been that when we start out in the business of subsidies the money does not come back. I am reasonably familiar with the subsidies supplied to the shipping interests of the Nation. Throughout the history of such transactions I recall that in each instance the final and net result has been that the Government lost money, and that will always happen. If the Government supplies money to conduct business enterprises, it means, sooner or later, that the Government loses the money, because if a business enterprise can not carry itself on its own plan, and with its own initiative, sooner or later the business enterprise will fall by the wayside. It is the same opposition that I have exactly to the ship subsidy. I have voted consistently against subsidies to the shipping interests, and I have done so because history shows that, with all the evils of Government operation of shipping, there is less danger to the public by reason of the Government itself operating shipping than there is in turning Government money over to private business operating shipping, with all the fraud and corruption that eventually result from it.

It will be recalled that it was impossible even to secure an amendment to the Reconstruction Finance act limiting loans unless the company that applied for the loan would limit its agents and officials to a reasonable salary. That is one of the troubles of providing Government money with which to operate private business.

In so far as I am concerned, I do not know but that, on a thorough investigation by a committee, it might be shown that the Government could obtain an advantage from some appropriation providing for the financing of the crops of the Nation in foreign countries, but there has been no such investigation. We propose here at the outset to provide $40,000,000 without an investigation—for what purpose? It is shrouded somewhat in mystery; one Senator said it was proposed for one purpose and two Senators said it was proposed for another purpose. There has been no hearing; there has been no printed report brought here to show the necessity for such an amendment; but at the very time we are proposing $40,000,000 without a hearing, there has been under discussion for weeks and for months a proposal affecting the salaries of Government employees, which will only bring about a reduction of $80,000,000. We propose to provide an appropriation of $40,000,000 without batting an eye or having a hearing, when we are claiming that we are here in the interest of Government economy. We have spent weeks and months trying to whittle down salaries in the effort to save $80,000,000, and then we propose to appropriate $40,000,000 without a hearing. That is the chief objection which I have to this proposal at this time.

There was no hearing before the committee. The administration wanted it and the administration tried to get it through the House. The House leaders objected to it; it has been tried in connection with about seven different bills, and the House leaders would not accept it, and then, without a single hearing or a single word, it was written in the bill, and we are proposing to appropriate $40,000,000 without the slightest proof from any source that a single farmer in America will receive a dollar's advantage. That is the opposition I have to the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. If a single farmer could get money under it, would the Senator favor it?

Mr. BLACK. No. If a single farmer got $10 that it took $40,000,000 to give to him, I would not. I want to find out first how much benefit will come to any farmer from the $40,000,000.

I think I know where a great deal of it would go; in fact, I have no doubt about it. It proposes to set up a large agency under the Secretary of Agriculture. I know the Secretary of Agriculture; I know his partisanship; I know the methods of appointment adopted by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Agricultural Department. It would mean the appropriation of millions of dollars to employ deserving Republicans to travel all over the world seeking markets at a time when markets can not be obtained. It would mean setting up a huge political personnel in this country in addition to those which have already been created. I have no doubt about that, because when we turn over $40,000,000 to the Secretary of Agriculture, knowing the Secretary of Agriculture and the methods he uses with reference to the selection of agents, I know where those agents would come from; and, in the main, I know the political tenets to which they would promise allegiance. I have had some experience in that; and whenever we turn over $40,000,000 at this time, just before an election, without a hearing, without a plan, without there having been a single witness before a committee to show that the farmers get the advantage of it, I think I know where the chief advantage will go.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PATTERSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GORE. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that House Joint Resolution 394, introduced by Congressman STRONG of Kansas, and written, as he said, by the Secretary of Agriculture, contains a provision that the Secretary of Agriculture can make these foreign sales of cotton and wheat through an export agency. That is the phrase used. That is the power granted—a plenary grant of power. There is no limitation, no further definition, no further direction; but he may effect these sales of cotton and wheat through an export agency plus this further authorization:

Or any other agency that he may see fit.

Mr. BLACK. I thank the Senator, because I have no sort of doubt about the power that the Secretary of Agriculture will have. I know that the committees in the House, controlled by the Democrats, have declined to report out this particular measure. They have opposed it, not only because of the fact that it is not a just bill, but because of the fact, perhaps, that they do not want any such agency given to the Secretary of Agriculture.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] asked me a few moments ago about a bill in which I was interested. I shall be glad to explain to him what that bill is. In so far as I am interested in that bill, it contains a provision requiring the Secretary of Agriculture to construe a loan for the benefit of farmers exactly as the Senator said he should have construed it in the beginning. That was the sole interest I had in it. That bill was passed. It provided for $50,000,000 of loans to the farmers. The Secretary of Agriculture came along and construed it in a way that gave the loans to as few farmers as possible and prevented as many as possible from having them.

When I took up the matter before the committee the committee unanimously agreed, as I recall—at least, the statement was so made on the floor by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]—that the Secretary of Agriculture had construed the law contrary to the intent of the Congress in passing it, and they reported out that bill. When it came out the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] made the statement that it was reported by the committee and that the committee did it with the belief that the construction of the Secretary of Agriculture was contrary to the plain and manifest intent of Congress. That was the bill which I offered and to which I called the Senator's attention on yesterday.

An amendment was placed on that bill by the House with reference to certain loans to the farmers who engaged in raising livestock, in which the Senator from South Dakota is far more interested, of course, than the people in the section of the country in which I live. I had nothing to do with that amendment. I am personally of the opinion that his construction of that was also wrong and contrary to the plain and manifest purpose of the act. I believe that when he held that a man who was engaged in raising livestock on the farm was not a farmer he went contrary to every accepted principle of construction which could be adopted. That is the bill to which the Senator referred in his remarks to me.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORBECK. Does the Senator favor the bill with the amendment now?

Mr. BLACK. Will I favor it?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Why, certainly.

Mr. NORBECK. All right. Let me call attention to two things, and then let the Senator go ahead and explain them.

Mr. BLACK. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. NORBECK. First, the bill provides for the expenditure of about $140,000,000 by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to be loaned to farmers. That is, one farmer out of 25 is to be favored with a loan, because that is all that can be taken care of. Who will the 1 out of 25 be?

Mr. BLACK. I shall be glad to answer the Senator's question.

In the first place, the Senator assumes that this bill appropriates $140,000,000, which is not correct. The bill does not appropriate a dollar.

Mr. NORBECK. Oh, well, that is not a fair statement. The money is appropriated. It is the unexpended balance of $200,000,000, of course. It does not appropriate a dollar of new money.

Mr. BLACK. The bill does not appropriate a single dollar; but the bill provides, as I stated before, and as the Senator agreed with me, that the Secretary of Agriculture had construed the earlier act improperly, and it simply requires him to accept the construction which the committee unanimously agreed he should have accepted in the beginning.

Mr. NORBECK. There are two parts to this bill. The first part the Senator has explained entirely fairly; but it was changed in the House, and the Senator says he is for it in its present form. I am speaking of what is before the Senate to be voted on that the Senator says he favors. Talk to us about state socialism! The Senator can match any one of us.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator may be correct. I have found that frequently we can place our own interpretations on any statement that is made. The Senator from South Dakota has a very agile and active mind, and I congratulate him on it.

However, the fact remains, as I stated in the beginning, that I believe the $40,000,000 appropriation will be injurious to the American farmer and not helpful. I am a little surprised that it should have been brought out of a committee without any hearings. Especially am I surprised in view of the fact that every possible pressure has been brought on the House, and they have declined to make a report on that measure. For months attempts have been made to get it out. Its advocates have placed it in bill after bill, and the House has declined to report it to that body. There is absolutely no connection whatever between the measure to which the Senator has referred and the measure appropriating $40,000,000 to be turned over to the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose of attempting to sell our crops abroad.

In the first place, I am very frank to state to the Senator that under no circumstances and under no conditions would I vote $40,000,000 to the Secretary of Agriculture to use at his discretion in attempting to aid the American farmer. My experience with him has been such that I do not believe his heart beats in sympathy with the plain, average, everyday American farmer.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama further yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BLACK. I do.

Mr. NORBECK. I am not going to get into any argument with my good friend from Alabama about who is the greater friend of the farmer—the Secretary of Agriculture or Eugene Meyer, the governor of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator may have a very perplexing problem suggested to his mind, and it is one which I would not attempt to solve.

Mr. NORBECK. But the Senator has made his choice. He says which one of the two he favors.

Mr. BLACK. I have made no choice—oh, no!

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator said he favors the bill making those livestock loans to the farmers through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. BLACK. If the Senator can get anything out of that, I do not care to discuss it any further. That law was passed. It was passed over my protest. I spoke against it and I voted against it. It has become the law. Since it has become the law, I desire to see that, so far as possible, the Secretary of Agriculture shall be forced to accept the plain intent and purpose of the only provision in that bill which was intended to aid agriculture. He did not do it. He construed it in every way so as to limit the ability of the farmers to borrow.

I saw at one time a mimeographed statement—I believe there were six pages of single-spaced mimeograph statement—with reference to the rules that the farmer had to accept before he could get a loan. Every conceivable plan was devised to curtail the privileges under that bill. The amendment which I offered simply offered a suggestion that the Secretary of Agriculture should construe it exactly as it was intended that it should be construed.

While the question was up, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] offered an amendment which he stated—and which I agreed—further guaranteed that the purpose of Congress in passing the act should be carried out, and his amendment to my amendment was adopted; but it did no more than simply require the Secretary of Agriculture to construe the act as it was intended that it should be construed.

But, Mr. President, I do not care to delay the Senate further. I have answered a great many questions. I simply want to state that I oppose this appropriation of $40,000,000 for the purpose of turning over to the Secretary of Agriculture at this time the right to finance American crops abroad.

If we want to give these crops to the people abroad after we have given to our own people everything that they can use, there might be some excuse for that. A few weeks ago, however, I stood and watched a line as they marched into a store where sacks of flour were put on the backs of various hungry citizens. I saw that in numerous places in my State. I saw men gather who three years ago were in good financial condition, the best farmers in their section of Alabama. I watched them as they marched up to the counter and went away with a sack of flour on their shoulders. I know that there has not been too much flour provided for that section of this country. I know from my own observation that that which we have given heretofore must be increased hereafter.

There are, as stated by the Senator from Georgia, many hungry mouths all over this Nation that should be fed. Why should we appropriate $40,000,000 out of the Treasury for the purpose of finding somebody in a foreign country to give our wheat to, at a time when the farmers, at a time when the people who work and toil, clerks, mechanics, even the lawyers and the doctors in some places over this Nation, are on the verge of hunger to-day?

I can not support a measure which would not only provide for a gift to nations abroad, but would pay $40,000,000 for the privilege of giving it away. If it is to be given, that is altogether a different proposition; but why should we pay money to give it away and hire special Republican favorites to show us how to give it away, when all we have to do is to go into any city or any county in this Nation to-day and find people who are ready to march up to the counter to get a sack of flour to feed the hungry children waiting in their homes?

I can not support that amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have been somewhat astounded at the attitude of the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]. He denounces an amendment which I have offered to provide for loaning money to aid in the sale of the farmers' products on sound security, to be approved by a business agency, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and he denounces that as being state socialism.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator will recall that what I stated was, and I repeated it to-day, that when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill came before the Senate I stated that it was state socialism, communism turned upside down. I did not make that statement with reference to the Senator's amendment. I made the statement with reference to the original Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill. I said it then. I repeat it now.

Mr. CONNALLY. I accept the Senator's statement; but does he think that the amendment of the Senator from Texas is state socialism?

Mr. BLACK. I shall be glad to state to the Senator, as I said then, that after that measure was passed, in so far as I was concerned, I would be in favor of broadening it in any way, even though I was opposed to the original principle, if I thought the benefit would go to the plain, average, everyday man, because we had embarked upon the policy.

Mr. CONNALLY. I accept the Senator's statement again. The Senator knows, if he knows anything about what is going to happen, that we have already embarked upon the policy of having the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Senator also knows that this bill in some form is going to pass. The Senator, in conformity with the view he took when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act was passed, opposed the whole measure, yet if it was going to be a policy he would then favor broadening its authority and broadening its activity to include agriculture, why does he now bring all of the ordnance of his forensic ability and his legislative capacity to bear upon the one amendment that has for its purpose doing something for the American farmer?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I will be glad to state to the Senator, because, as I said, I do not agree with the Senator that this amendment which was placed in the bill will assist the farmer. There is a difference, not in the objective but a difference in belief, as to whether or not the particular proposal will give any benefit to the farmer.

Mr. CONNALLY. I accept the Senator's statement again. The Senator does not think that improving a market in which the farmer has to sell will help the farmer. The Senator evidently believes that the way to help the farmer is to encourage him to go on producing, and yet instead of having a market for his product to impound it and pile it up, with the hope that some day in the far-off future somebody may give him a better price.

My meager knowledge of economics teaches me that when there is a demand on the stock market for an article it goes up. My meager experience teaches me that in a case where a merchant is overstocked he gets rid of his stock, even though he may take a temporary loss, because he knows that only by getting rid of the old, shelf-worn goods can a new market be stimulated for the goods coming from the factory. I am looking to the crop of 1932 and to the crop of 1933. I want the American farmer to live past the present primaries and past the coming election in order that he may have permanent prosperity.

Oh, but the Senator says, this will not do the farmer any good. He does not favor the reconstruction finance system, because it is State socialism, and yet the Senator introduced Senate bill 4780, making effective all during this year more than a hundred million dollars in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture for loaning to individual farmers.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Just a second.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is mistaken about that. I know he does not want to make a statement that is not correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is not that the effect of the House amendment?

Mr. BLACK. The House amendment? I am not familiar with the House amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. The House amendment is pending here, and I understood the Senator was going to call up the bill and have the amendment concurred in.

Mr. BLACK. If the Senate desires to concur in it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is the Senator in favor of it?

Mr. BLACK. I am interested in the House amendment, but the amendment which I offered—I know the Senator wants to be fair——

Mr. CONNALLY. I want to be fair, and I have the Senator's amendment before me now.

Mr. BLACK. If the Senator will look, he will see that it does not add a dollar to the appropriation. It is nothing in the world except a provision requiring the Secretary of Agriculture to construe that measure as the Senate committee said he should have construed it in the beginning.

Mr. CONNALLY. I agree with the Senator that the Senator's amendment does not add a dollar to the appropriation; the appropriation has already been made, and the Secretary of Agriculture has over a hundred million dollars; but the Secretary of Agriculture has quit loaning the money, because he construed the act to mean that he had no power to lend any more, and the Senator's amendment provides that he shall go on lending it, that he shall continue to lend it, when he had already shut off lending. Yet the Senator now says that his amendment did not have the effect of increasing the appropriation. Technically, no; but the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Alabama was to make the Secretary of Agriculture lend money to individual farmers after he had construed the law to curtail his power and had stopped lending. Am I not correct?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct to this extent, that the law had been enacted, and I voted against the bill, but the law had given him the right to make loans to individual farmers. The Secretary of Agriculture construed it in the way he usually does, so as to make loans to as few as possible.

Mr. CONNALLY. Has not the Senator confidence in the Secretary of Agriculture to make these loans?

Mr. BLACK. I will state this to the Senator, that personally I would far prefer to have the authority vested in some other body, rather than the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. CONNALLY. As I understand the Senator now, he says that he voted against the original bill. He therefore is against the policy; but since it had been undertaken, he favored, then, carrying it on. Very well. Under that act as passed the Secretary of Agriculture says, "I have no further power to make loans to individual farmers," and the Senator from Alabama, his soul wracked with opposition to the principle, absolutely opposed to the whole principle of the reconstruction bill, yet is the one who introduces a bill to open up the Secretary's hands, to make him do what he says he has not the power to do, and in order to do it, he has to introduce a special act, and I hold the measure in my hand.

As I understand the Senator from Alabama, he is in favor of the Government lending to individual farmers, but he is not in favor of lending to the merchant who buys the farmer's products in order to enable the merchant to sell those goods, and thereby create a market for the farmer. I believe that if it is sound to lend to the individual farmer, it is sound to lend to anyone else dealing in his commodities, in order to carry out a marketing program, in order to sustain agriculture.

What good does it do to lend to an individual farmer, to enable him to make a crop, and then, when he gets the crop, he can not sell it—there is no place to carry it? It is an economic fallacy, it is an economic crime, to encourage a farmer to raise a crop, and then deny him a market in which he can sell his crop. But the Senator from Alabama believes in that policy. "Come on, farmers, to the Treasury, all of you, individually, come up and help yourselves, but the moment you get the money we will not allow the manufacturer or the exporter of your goods a dollar in order to sell your goods in foreign markets."

The Senator has said that he does not trust the Secretary of Agriculture because he has no sympathy with the farmer, so the Senator from Alabama says. He does not believe that the heart of the Secretary of Agriculture beats in unison with the great farming interests of our Nation.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand here a measure introduced by the Senator from Alabama, Senate Joint Resolution 131, to provide a system in the rehabilitation of certain storm-stricken areas in the United States and in relief of unemployment in such areas.

Whereas the States of Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, and Kentucky are suffering from the effects of recent storms—

And so on, and so on. Then the Senator from Alabama provides what? Who is going to make these loans? The Reconstruction Finance Corporation? No. The Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. In just a moment.

Mr. BLACK. I would like to ask the Senator whether he has the first bill I offered, when I placed the matter in the hands of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and when the committee insisted that I should change it and put it into the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know about that. I sent out to the document room and asked them to send me all bills for loans to farmers, knowing that there would be a good many of them. I do not know yet what the others provide.

I am referring now to Senate Joint Resolution 131. Did he put the authority in the hands of the Farm Board? Oh, no; you can not trust the Farm Board. Did he put it in the hands of the Treasury, which handles the business of the Nation? No; you can not trust the Treasury. Did he put it in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which has handled all of this reconstruction work? No; you can not trust those people. But the Secretary of Agriculture is the one who should make the loans under this bill.

That the Secretary of Agriculture—

the enemy of the farmer, the Secretary of Agriculture, whose heart is stone when the farmers are mentioned; the Secretary of Agriculture is the one who is to handle the loans provided to the drought-stricken, storm-suffering people in Alabama. The Senator's own constituency is to be delivered over to this heartless, this mercenary bureaucrat, the Secretary of Agriculture.

Remember, we are against State socialism. Remember, we will fight it. Remember, we are going to stand like a brick wall against State socialism. Let us see what this bill provides:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed—my amendment simply authorizes. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is simply authorized, under my amendment, when it finds a sound loan, when it finds that it can not be financed here at home, when it finds that the market would be improved by exporting a commodity abroad, when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as business men, think it is a sound transaction, my bill says they "may." The Senator's bill says that the Secretary of Agriculture is "authorized and directed." He has to do it—immediately to assist in the rehabilitation of the storm-stricken areas in such States.

What States? Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, and Kentucky. It is unsound to have a national policy which reaches all of the people of the United States, but it is statesmanlike to have one that fits only four States in the Union. It is State socialism if it embraces all of the people, but it is sound doctrine when it touches the citizenship of only four States.

Let us see what else.

For such purposes the Secretary of Agriculture shall have power to make loans to persons in the storm-stricken areas in such States.

Listen to this. I want the attention of the Senator from South Dakota. He may remain seated if he likes, but I want him to listen.

Mr. NORBECK. I will get closer, so that I can hear the Senator better.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want the Senator's attention. What, under this bill, does the Senator from Alabama provide?

For such purposes the Secretary of Agriculture shall have power to make loans to persons in the storm-stricken areas in such States upon such terms and conditions as he shall by regulation prescribe—

There is no requirement there as to whether there shall be any security or not. There may be further on. I shall not foreclose that. It is just as the Secretary of Agriculture may by regulation prescribe. Think about the farmer in need being turned over to the Secretary of Agriculture, without any guidance by the Government. Let the Secretary of Agriculture absolutely sacrifice him, this cruel monster who does not have any sympathy for the American farmer—including an agreement by the borrowers to use the loans for the purposes specified by him.

He would give the Secretary of Agriculture, this bureaucrat, the power to say to the farmer, "You may have a little money, but I will make you use it as I shall prescribe," not as a free American citizen getting a loan, to do with it as he may, but getting it as a cringing, cowering, humiliated supplicant.

"Give me; oh, give me Government funds, and then tell me how I may use them, tell me that only in this particular way I may employ them."

The bill provides further:

Except that no such loan shall be made for a period of more than 10 years.

Lend him money on moonshine, but he may not lend it for longer than 10 years. My amendment provides that these loans shall be made upon adequate security, and for not more than three years, to sound business concerns. The amendment of the Senator from Alabama provides that they may be made to anybody, with nothing except a promise of future residence in the realm over yonder beyond the silvery clouds, just so you do not make him a loan for more than 10 years. That is not socialism; that is sublime statecraft.

Except that no loan shall be made for a period of more than 10 years or in an amount in excess of $5,000 to any one individual.

Five thousand dollars for what? It is to sufferers from the storm. They need only temporary relief, temporary help.

He wants to give the individuals not more than $5,000 each. That is lots of food for one man to eat until the storm has passed by. That is lots of clothing for one man to use until the storm cloud goes by.

The rate of interest shall be beginning with the fourth year—he gives him three years free interest—the rate of interest upon each such loan beginning with the fourth year—I suppose that is what it means, but if I am in error I ask the Senator from Alabama to correct me. It reads:

The rate of interest upon each such loan beginning with the fourth year shall be 5 per cent per annum, but the Secretary of Agriculture in his discretion may defer the payment of interest upon any such loan for such period of time as he shall deem necessary.

If the old boy with $5,000 in his jeans, with no security for it, and 3 years free interest and with 10 years' time to pay it, has no interest at the end of 10 years, this terrible monster, the Secretary of Agriculture, may waive the interest.

Mr. President, I take off my hat to pay my profound tribute to this constructive piece of agricultural statesmanship in the form of Senate Joint Resolution 131 introduced by the Senator from Alabama.

All such loans shall be made by the Secretary of Agriculture or through such agencies as he shall designate.

Yes; let the Secretary of Agriculture appoint anybody he wants to. The Senator does not trust the Secretary of Agriculture, but if he can not trust him in any other respect, how will he trust him to appoint agents to carry out the plan? Why, Mr. President, it is provided also that all money received during two years shall become a revolving fund. The Senator is looking for another storm at the end of two years. He wants a revolving fund provided from these loans so that the Department of Agriculture, through the Weather Bureau, can hang out a signal, and every time they have a storm or a thunderhead gathering in Alabama he can telephone down to them and tell them to start the loan fund revolving again which has been accumulating under Senate Joint Resolution 131.

Mr. President, I submit that the amendment which I have offered is not State socialism. The Senator from Alabama says he does not favor the whole policy, but now that we have the policy he is in favor of helping to carry out its activities. If that be true, how can he object to my provision for making loans to dealers in commodities? I do not mean loans on mere moonshine. I mean loans on actual cotton and actual wheat and actual security, so that when a merchant sells his commodity abroad and gets payment for it he can repay the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, not in 10 years but in not to exceed 3 years.

When we are appropriating $3,500,000,000 to finance industry and to finance commerce, to build bridges and tunnels, and to set up such self-liquidating corporations, I submit that $250,000,000 as a limit is not too much to designate for the assistance and the relief of that one great industry upon whose prosperity depends all the others that we are now seeking to aid by artificial stimulation. I submit that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation need not loan all of the $250,000,000. I submit that the Government ought to vest that corporation with such authority so that in case there is a demand for this sort of credit by men with security, considering the markets abroad and the necessity to remove the surplus from our own markets, they can make the loans. I submit that no real friend of the farmer can consistently vote against a policy like that while at the same time advocating such a policy as is enunciated in Senate Joint Resolution 131.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I do not want the Senate to forget the issue which is before it. I have been very much interested in the impassioned defense of the Secretary of Agriculture made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator made the defense in his joint resolution.

Mr. BLACK. I am delighted that the Senator from Texas made that defense. I tried to explain to the Senator, but it seems it made no difference to him, that I offered the joint resolution providing for the administration of the fund by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The measure went to the committee. The committee declined to accept it. I insisted that I did not want it administered by the Secretary of Agriculture. However, upon the insistence of the committee, I amended the language of the joint resolution and offered it in the form from which the Senator from Texas has read. However, of course, it has no materiality to the question which is here involved. It was a very interesting discussion that was made by my friend from Texas, but it has no relevancy to the question before us.

As a matter of fact I was wondering what similarity the Senator from Texas could find in the lending of money to a farmer down in Alabama whose home had been blown away, who had lost the savings of a lifetime, and the lending of money to Clayton & Co., of Texas, for the purpose of engaging in a huge cotton business. It may be there is a similarity. I do not know about that, but I do know that under the joint resolution which I offered it was limited in the making of loans to the individual farmers who had lost their homes and who had seen taken away from them the last vestige of the last plank which they had spent their years in providing to cover their families. Compare that to the loaning of $250,000,000 to every cotton broker, to every large cotton salesman in the United States. It would embrace loans, if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation wanted to make them, to every large cotton broker all the way from Texas to New York. I insist that there is no similarity whatsoever. They are as distinct as the North and South Poles. The joint resolution which I offered was offered in line with the theory which the Government adopted years ago of aiding those in distress brought about through a sudden emergency. It relates to individual farmers.

I went through that section two weeks ago. I went through a little village where every home in it for a space of hundreds of feet had been blown away and not a plank had been left. No, Mr. President, I have no apology to make for having introduced the joint resolution. It was in line with measures which have been offered heretofore. There is no similarity whatever, nor can any be found in voting for that measure and voting for a proposal which would take $250,000,000 of the taxpayers' money, not to rebuild a home which has been destroyed, not to rebuild a barn which has been blown away, but to carry on the business of a cotton broker. I have always thought the cotton brokers should be allowed to carry on their business as other good Americans do, just like any other American business men. If they had competition, it would be all right. If they did not have it, it would be all right. But I am opposed at this juncture to opening up this fund to this particular class of individual business men unless we broaden it so as to include all of the business men who are in distress. If we want the Government to go into the banking business and lend to every distressed business in America, that will be perfectly satisfactory to me.

I want the Senate to understand the issue. It has nothing to do with the joint resolution from which the Senator from Texas read at such great length. I have nothing else to say about that. The amendment which I have offered is to strike from the bill an appropriation of $40,000,000 to be turned over to the Secretary of Agriculture to be used in his discretion in financing crops abroad. I am opposed to that policy. The Senator from Texas has offered a substitute, as I understand it, for an authorization for $250,000,000 to be loaned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to various business enterprises. I am frank to state that if it were $40,000,000, and the other were $40,000,000, I would vote for his proposal rather than vote for turning over $40,000,000 to the Secretary of Agriculture for the purposes set out in the bill; but I am opposed to both proposals.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I do not care to answer the Senator from Alabama except as to one aspect of his statement. I understand certain of his remarks rather to insinuate or imply that the Senator from Texas had been actuated in this matter with respect to aiding some particular cotton firm or exporter.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CONNALLY. In just a moment.

Mr. BLACK. I merely wish to say——

Mr. CONNALLY. I refuse to yield now until I shall have concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas declines to yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want to say that if the Senator from Alabama intended to make or now makes any sort of insinuation of that kind, he speaks that which is not true and which is unworthy of any Senator.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I was trying to get the Senator to yield when he started to make his statement.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have yielded to the Senator several times. I was not conscious that he wanted me to yield again.

Mr. BLACK. I was trying to get the Senator to yield at the point where he made his statement to which I am about to refer. I made no such intimation. I made no such insinuation.

Mr. CONNALLY. What did the Senator insinuate?

Mr. BLACK. I would not have thought of making such an insinuation. I would not have believed it if anybody else had made it.

Mr. CONNALLY. What insinuation did the Senator make?

Mr. BLACK. I do not think under any consideration the Senator from Texas would be prompted by any motive of benefiting an individual in his State or a business in his State. I have the highest regard for the Senator's integrity and for his ability as a Senator. I always have had and I have now. If there was anything that I said that by any stretch of the imagination under any circumstances or conditions could lead any human being to believe that

I intended to leave such an impression or make such an insinuation, I want at this time to state that it was not intended, that I did not intend it, and that if anyone had said it about the Senator I myself would have resented it.

Mr. CONNALLY. What insinuation did the Senator make?

Mr. BLACK. None whatever. The Senator is entirely mistaken. If I had made it I would repeat it, but I did not make it. I did not intend to make any kind of an insinuation, and if anyone else had made an insinuation about the Senator from Texas I would have resented it myself.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall be glad if the Official Reporter will preserve the remarks as made.

I do not know the attitude of any single exporter or cotton dealer in my State with respect to the amendment which I have offered. I do not know their attitude. My only motive is in trying to stimulate the cotton and wheat and agricultural markets abroad. Whether or not the Senator from Alabama, in his zeal and vigor in debate, made any such insinuation as that, I desire to express my utter disregard of it. I accept what the Senator said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the substitute proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

On a division, the substitute was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Copeland	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. NORBECK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to inquire as to the parliamentary situation. The amendment, as I understand, offered by the Senator from Alabama is to strike out subdivision (b) on page 4?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is to strike out subdivision (b) of page 101 extending over to page 102.

Mr. BORAH. I have the reprint of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama to the amendment reported by the committee, on which the yeas and nays have been demanded. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRATTON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. In his absence, not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. COHEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD]. I find I can transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], which I do, and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HASTINGS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] and therefore withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MORRISON]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. I am unable to secure a transfer, and therefore must withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who is absent from the city. I am not able to secure a transfer, and therefore withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GLENN. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], who is absent from the city, and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. I have a general pair with the Senator from Montana and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the general pair of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN] with the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL].

So Mr. BLACK's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask at this time that the amendment which I offered yesterday, in the nature of a substitute for the bill, be brought before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a pending amendment, and a substitute is not in order until amendments to perfect it have been disposed of.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then I offer the proposition which the clerk holds in his hand as an amendment, to strike out the first section of the substitute and insert in lieu thereof the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma for a question.

Mr. GORE. I desire to make a motion to reconsider a vote that was taken this morning in my absence. I do not know that the parliamentary situation would require it to be considered now, before the amendment tendered by the Senator from Maryland is submitted, or not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not necessary to consider it at this time. The motion to reconsider will be considered as having been entered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to have some matter inserted in the RECORD?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I have received this morning a telegram from Fort Wayne, Ind., reading as follows:

FORT WAYNE, IND., June 21, 1932.

Hon. ARTHUR R. ROBINSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Fort Wayne and Allen County have carried the local unemployment burden thus far, but funds are about exhausted. We need $2,000,000 Federal aid to care for the 9,000 out of work for a 12 months' program.

ARTHUR HALL.
G. IRVING LATZ.
OSCAR FOELLINGER.
E. A. BARNES.
G. V. FULLER,
Executive Secretary Fort Wayne Community Chest.

This is a mere indication of the distress and the need for aid that exists in that Indiana city.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. Yesterday, when the Senator from Maryland had placed in the bill an amendment providing for preference for World War veterans with dependents, I suggested doing away with labor-saving machinery as much as possible, and confining the work to hand labor. The amendment I desire to propose will not interfere with the Senator's amendment but will be a perfecting amendment in case his amendment is adopted. I wonder if he will yield to me to permit me to submit that amendment at this time.

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Michigan, as I am in sympathy with his amendment; but of course I am doing it with the understanding that it will not lead to much debate.

Mr. COUZENS. I do not think it will.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator agree to withdraw his amendment for the time being in the event that it does lead to much debate?

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then I withdraw my amendment temporarily.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland withdraws his amendment for the time being. The Senator from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I desire to draw the Senate's attention to section 6, on page 111, where provision is made, in substance, for the 5-day week and the 6-hour day—in other words, the 30-hour week. I propose to add, at the end of the word "week," on line 23, the following:

Provided further, That so far as practicable, hand labor shall be employed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator if he will yield while I offer a perfecting amendment on page 102, following the language that the amendment we voted on a few moments ago sought to strike out and failed. I will withdraw it if it leads to any debate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Under those circumstances, I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on page 102, after line 7, I offer the following amendment:

The Secretary of Agriculture is directed to report to Congress in detail his action under this subsection.

That is merely asking for a report from the Secretary of Agriculture of his action under the provision by which he is given $40,000,000 to use for the purposes named.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] has made a strong defense of this whole item. He is absent from the Chamber at this time; and I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that he withhold his proposal until the return of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to that, except it seemed to me to be very appropriate, while that matter is fresh in the minds of Senators, to make this small addition to it.

Mr. McNARY. I should have no objection, and I do not think the Senator from South Dakota would; but I think it would be well to withhold the amendment until he comes in.

Mr. NORRIS. Would the Senator object to acting on the amendment with the understanding that if the Senator from South Dakota objects to it, and wants it reconsidered, I will consent to its reconsideration? I realize that I can offer it at any time; but my reason for offering it now is that we have just voted on striking out that language.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may I inquire whether it would not be more desirable to put in a time when this report is to be made to the Senate?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know how long it is going to take the Secretary of Agriculture to get rid of that $40,000,000, so I could not put in the time. If there is any objection to my offering the amendment at this time, however, I will withhold it.

Mr. McNARY. There are some possibilities over reconsideration. The bill will be here for several hours, and I suggest to the Senator that he withhold the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. All right; I will withdraw the amendment for the present.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BROOKHART. I desire to offer——

Mr. TYDINGS. May I say to the Senator that I do not yield for the purpose of offering an amendment. I have an amendment of my own pending.

Mr. BROOKHART. I do not think there will be any objection to this amendment. If there is, I shall withdraw it.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have been glad to yield to three or four Senators with short amendments; but I really think I have been as courteous as could be expected, and more so. I value my own amendment somewhat, and I must insist that it be considered next.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. I do not want to interfere at all with my friend; but if the amendment just offered were to be adopted it would not preclude consideration of amendments tendered to section 1, would it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the amendment is agreed to, it will, because it strikes out section 1.

Mr. KING. Then I should like to perfect section 1 before that is done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has a right to do that, if his amendment perfects section 1.

Mr. KING. I dislike to interfere with my friend's amendment, but I want to perfect this section.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have to leave to-morrow afternoon, and I am very anxious to get a vote on my own amendment to-day. May I say to the Senator that if I lose the floor at this time I rather think it will be difficult for me to get it again; so I ask that he withhold his amendment until mine is voted up or down.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator would not lose the right to offer his amendment. It would still be pending; but as it strikes out section 1 and substitutes certain matter, the Senator from Utah has a right to perfect the section before the vote is taken upon the amendment of the Senator from Maryland. Therefore, the amendment of the Senator from Utah is in order if he desires to offer it at this time.

Mr. KING. I will trust to the debate and whatever fate attends the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland; and the Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, unless Members of the Senate want the amendment read, or unless they want more discussion upon it, I am disposed to let it come to a vote without further debate. In the few minutes that I shall occupy the time of the Senate, unless I am interrogated, I shall try very briefly to state what the amendment is.

First of all, it provides for a bond issue of $1,500,000,000. Of that sum, $1,000,000,000, in accordance with the Federal highway act, is to be used to build roads, bridges, and tunnels in the States. There is $300,000,000 for rivers and harbors and flood-control projects. That makes $1,300,000,000. About $175,000,000 additional is appropriated for a very selected list of buildings, already approved by the Congress, which are needed, and which I believe upon examination will be held to be economically sound.

I offered this amendment because I was opposed to making loans to States, counties, and municipalities if a sounder program, so to speak, could be promulgated. I thought that the making of loans to municipalities and counties and States was not a sound policy if it could be avoided in this time of extraordinary stress.

The amendment I have proposed provides for nothing more than a continuation of normal Government activity. It provides that we shall do the things which we would do anyhow in the next 10 or 15 years. We will appropriate the money anyhow in the next 15 years to do the very things which my amendment proposes. It would keep the Federal Government out of all this banking business, and, as I have sat here from day to day listening to the discussion of a so-called unemployment relief bill, all I have heard discussed is a banking measure, to lend money to every Tom, Dick, and Harry in the United States.

When the Federal Treasury becomes the financing agency for all kinds of enterprises, then the day of the balanced Budget and of the integrity of the American dollar is gone. We are entering upon a very dangerous domain when we make the Federal Treasury the first national bank of all the business agencies in the United States, including the States and counties and cities.

I furthermore believe that a billion dollar road program has two distinctive appeals. First of all, it would result in work in every part of the United States. Every city, every county, would get its proportionate share. Unemployment, while more aggravated in a particular spot than elsewhere, is general, nevertheless, all over the United States. There is not a county in the country that has not suffered from the effects of the depression, and as relief is divided into two categories, namely, direct relief, by employing the now unemployed, and, secondly, giving them purchasing power, so that industry may employ more people to produce the things which the unemployed will buy, why not spread that help over the entire country?

In addition to that, Mr. President, it would result in the employment of more people, in my judgment, than any other scheme which has been offered here. This business of the Government lending to the A B Bridge Co. or the C D Tunnel Co. ought to be avoided if possible. We have no business taking the money of the taxpayers of this country and parceling it out to business concerns which may want financial assistance. That is not a function of the Government.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. I would like to ask the Senator, not having had time to examine the bill, what he would strike out of the bill?

Mr. TYDINGS. Eventually, if my amendment is adopted, it will strike out everything after the first section.

Mr. BROOKHART. Leaving only the road-building program?

Mr. TYDINGS. No. As I stated in the beginning of my remarks, I offer a billion five hundred million dollars worth of work, a billion for roads, three hundred million for rivers and harbors and flood control, and a little less than two hundred million for a selected group of public enterprises, among which is $20,000,000 for veterans' hospitals and some customs houses.

Mr. BROOKHART. If the Senator offered that as an addition to what is in the bill, I would be glad to vote for it, but I do not feel like voting to strike all of the other things out of the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. I want to strike them all out and keep the Federal Government within its proper function, which is to do the Government business, to exercise its governmental function, and not go out into the field of lending everybody money.

Mr. President, I doubt very much whether this amendment will be adopted. I am satisfied, from what I have heard, that instead of an employment bill, we are going to have a banking bill. There is no provision for any employment, except indirectly, in this bill, when we eliminate the public-works provisions from the measure.

All it does is to designate the Federal Reconstruction Finance Corporation and authorize it to parcel out the taxpayers' money to every concern which is building public or semipublic improvements.

An amendment was made here the other day to lend money to building associations. No doubt many of them need it, but I simply cite that to show that we are making a banking bill out of this relief bill, and we are making a banking bill rather than an employment bill out of it with the money of the taxpayers of the United States.

Let me illustrate the danger of the self-liquidating projects. The mayor of, say, South Bend, Ind., wants a bridge, or a tunnel, in connection with a highway leading into that city. A contractor goes to him and says, "You can go down to Washington and borrow $2,000,000 to build this bridge." The mayor comes here to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the city council, of course, having given him the proper authorization, and gets the taxpayers' money. He takes it back to South Bend, Ind., and with it the contractor builds the bridge. I ask anybody, as a matter of common logic, if in the last analysis the Federal Government has financially aided in building the bridge in South Bend, Ind.?

Mr. PITTMAN. The pending measure is intended as an emergency measure.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes. But I am afraid the result will be a condition as in the illustration I gave of South Bend, Ind.

Mr. PITTMAN. I wish to say to the Senator that if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation did give to the mayor of a city $1,000,000, or $2,000,000, under this measure, for the purpose of new construction work which did not depend on taxes but would come back from revenue provided for use on that proposition, and it employed men and labor and fed hundreds of families, the fallacious argument made by the Senator would not cause me to vote against it.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator started out by saying that my conclusions were inaccurate. I then set up an illustration to prove my conclusions; and the Senator switched his observation by saying that my illustration was accurate; and inasmuch as my illustration proved my conclusion, I not only have my own statement now but the testimony of my interrogator that he was wrong in the premises.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. There is some question on this side as to whether the original sections 2 and 3 of the Senator's amendment have been eliminated.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I took out sections 2 and 3, which provided for financing the projects by a tax on beer. There is no beer, not even water, in this proposition.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is the Senator going to take that part of the amendment to Chicago when he goes to-morrow? [Laughter.]

Mr. TYDINGS. That would be a small part of the amendment I am going to take to Chicago to-morrow.

Mr. President, there are many things for which I have voted during this session which under normal times no one could have induced me to support. I am not saying that all of the things for which I have voted have been sound. I am not saying that I have not voted for some things when really every inclination I had was to vote in the negative. I tried to accord to the President all of the nonpartisan support I could get out of a fairly partisan individual. I voted for some things that I really have had a hard time to support and particularly since we had seen some of those things in operation. But because that has been done in the best of faith is no reason why we should forever continue the course down a pathway which, if we pursue it long enough, in my humble judgment, will wreck the Treasury of this Nation.

Who knows how long this depression is going to last? Is it going to be with us for one year only? Where will we be next summer when we begin to appropriate for the following winter? Suppose the depression lasts two or three years more? Where under God's heaven is the money coming from to finance these undertakings, particularly when we have gone out of the sphere of proper governmental function and indirectly are financing construction companies of the United States with the taxpayers' money? That is the reason why I offered my amendment, perhaps in a futile but well-meant effort to keep the Government in its proper governmental sphere, to keep it from going into fields which under normal conditions no one would dream of having it enter.

We have got to make the decision now whether it is better to appropriate money in line with our Constitution, in line with our traditions, in line with precedents, in line with what we have heretofore considered sound appropriations, or whether we are to continue the policy of throwing open the Federal Treasury as the first national bank of America for every man who has a project, perhaps worthy, and who desires that the Federal Government shall give him the money with which to operate it.

I do not challenge the good faith of anyone who votes on either side of this question. I know men who are going to support the self-liquidating proposition in just as much good faith as I believe I have in opposing it. I know they have reached their conclusions after looking over the situation in the country and trying to reconcile conflicting views. But I submit that we had better pass the road construction bill, which will redound to the wealth of the country, promote the comfort of its people, supply work to every community, and really have something in the end to show for it than to pass the Federal income around to every concern which wants to be financed.

What is the difference in the city of Baltimore coming over here and borrowing $2,000,000 and then giving me a contract to build a tunnel or a bridge, and I wind up with the $2,000,000 of the Federal taxpayers' money? Baltimore city would turn it over to me as the contractor. In the end we are simply using the Federal funds to finance private undertakings. I believe that if we adopt the amendment of the committee and it is signed by the President, the day will come when there will be many who supported it who will regret it. I believe there will be some factors in connection with it which will not make pleasant reading in the newspapers. There will be many of the so-called self-liquidating projects which will not self-liquidate at all. They will be utter failures, and almost all or a large part of the money at least in many cases will be lost.

Mr. President, I doubt very much if there is sufficient support here for my proposition to carry it. It is offered in good faith. I hope the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, so that we may have a vote upon my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COUZENS in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland to the committee amendment. The Chair suggests that the amendment ought to be read. It does not appear in the RECORD, and there are no printed copies of it available.

Mr. GEORGE. Let the amendment be reported. It has not been printed and is not in the RECORD, as the Chair has suggested. It ought to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out section 1 of the substitute reported by the committee and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That there is hereby created a special fund in the Treasury to be known as the emergency construction fund and to be administered by the Secretary of the Treasury as hereinafter provided. For the purpose of providing funds to carry out the provisions of this act the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to borrow on the credit of the United States a sum not to exceed $1,500,000,000 and to issue bonds therefor to be known as emergency construction bonds in such form as he may prescribe. Such bonds shall be in denominations of not less than $50, shall mature in not less than 10 years from the date of their issue as hereinafter provided, and shall bear interest, payable semiannually, at such rate as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but not to exceed 4¼ per cent per annum. The principal and interest of such bonds shall be payable in United States gold coin of the present standard of value, and such bonds shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except estate and inheritance taxes and surtaxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority.

"(b) Such bonds shall be offered at not less than par as a popular loan under such regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury as will give all citizens of the United States an equal opportunity to participate therein. Any portion of the bonds so offered and not subscribed for may be otherwise disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury at not less than par. No commission shall be allowed or paid in connection with the sale or other disposition of any such bonds. All amounts derived from the sale of such bonds shall be paid into the emergency construction fund.

"(c) In issuing the said bonds for said loan the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue certificates, according to what is known as the serial annuity plan, and each series as issued shall be lettered beginning with the letter "A," and so on down the alphabet until the entire amount of $1,500,000,000 shall have been issued, so that the entire principal shall be redeemable as follows:

"Series A, $150,000,000, 1 year from date of issue; Series B, $150,000,000, 2 years from date of issue; Series C, $150,000,000, 3 years from date of issue; Series D, $150,000,000, 4 years from date of issue; Series E, $150,000,000, 5 years from date of issue; Series F, $150,000,000, 6 years from date of issue; Series G, $150,000,000, 7 years from date of issue; Series H, $150,000,000, 8 years from date of issue; Series I, $150,000,000, 9 years from date of issue; and Series J, $150,000,000, 10 years from date of issue.

"(d) As soon after the passage of this act as may be practicable the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause said bonds to be prepared and shall advertise them for sale in such manner as he may prescribe: Provided, however, That in the event all of said bonds are not sold promptly upon said offering by the Secretary of the Treasury he shall again offer the bonds remaining unsold at the next earliest practicable date and make such adjustment with the purchasers of said bonds as to interest as the difference between the date of said bonds and the time of purchase shall make necessary.

"(e) Said bond issue shall bear a date to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury and not longer than 60 days after the passage of this act.

"SEC. 2. (a) The emergency construction fund shall be used for the purpose of providing for the emergency construction of certain authorized public works with a view to increasing employment and carrying out the policy declared in the employment stabilization act of 1931. The following amounts are hereby appropriated from such fund: To the Treasury Department, $33,949,950; to the Veterans' Administration, $20,232,000; to the Inland Waterways Corporation, $815,000; to the Office of Public Buildings and Public Parks, $1,250,000; to the State Department, $1,453,520; to the Navy Department, $25,109,000; to the municipal government of the District of Columbia, $3,535,400; for the construction of roads, bridges, and tunnels, $1,000,000,000; for rivers and harbors improvements and flood-control projects to be expended under the direction of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, $300,000,000; for reforestation, $10,000,000; and for planting of trees along improved highways, $5,000,000. All amounts available for highways, bridges, and tunnels shall be apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture among the several States in the manner provided by section 21 of the Federal highway act, as amended, and shall be available for expenditure on highway projects approved by the Secretary of Agriculture in the same manner, so far as practicable, as other funds appropriated for carrying out the provisions of such act, except that no part of such amounts apportioned to any State need be matched by the State.

"(b) The amounts so appropriated shall, so far as practicable, be expended on authorized construction projects covered by the report of the Federal Employment Stabilization Board transmitted to the Senate January 25, 1932, pursuant to Senate Resolution No. 127, Seventy-second Congress, first session, agreed to January 7, 1932, and shall be made available at such times and in such amounts as may be necessary to complete such projects at the earliest practicable date. In the event that an appropriation has heretofore been made for any such project the amount thereof shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. All amounts appropriated for reforestation and for planting trees along improved highways shall be expended under the supervision of the chief of the forestry service.

"SEC. 3. In the employment of labor in connection with any project provided for in this act, preference shall be given to ex-service men with dependents.

"SEC. 4. This act may be cited as the 'Emergency construction act of 1932.'"

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland. [Putting the question.]

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is lost.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I was on my feet before the Chair really announced the vote, and I wanted to ask for the yeas and nays. I now ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been demanded. Is there a second? [A pause.] The yeas and nays are not ordered.

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask for a verification by a standing vote of the announcement of the Chair that the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those seconding the demand for the yeas and nays will rise. [A pause.] There is not a sufficient number to second the demand; and the amendment is rejected.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think I should present a conference report and ask for its present consideration in order to expedite business that really has to be transacted. So I present a conference report and move its present consideration.

Mr. KING. What is the conference report?

Mr. JONES. It is the conference report on the economy bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the motion of the Senator from Washington shall prevail, will it displace the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will not, because the report for which the Senator from Washington asks consideration is a privileged matter. The report will be read.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate (Nos. 46–168, both inclusive) to the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask for a suspension of the reading of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I desire the attention of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. The indications are that the amendments to the text of the bill now under consideration, with the exception of the one proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] and another amendment in the nature of a substitute, have about been disposed of. I believe that if the Senate might be permitted to proceed with the bill now under consideration we could reach a conclusion of that measure before the end of this day. I am told that there will be some discussion of the conference report presented by the Senator from Washington. There is no disposition here, of course, to defer that unduly or to fail to take proper action on it.

I wonder if the Senator from Washington would not permit us to proceed for a time with the pending bill? He has been very generous, and we appreciate his action in that particular.

Mr. JONES. I am anxious to have the conference report disposed of to-day.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course I can only give the Senator from Washington the assurance that I have just stated. There is no agreement to vote on the pending measure and none is possible until some other amendments shall have been disposed of. But the bill under consideration, the so-called unemployment relief bill, itself, must also go to conference and some time will be required to work out the details, probably a considerable time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. KING. I want to mention to the Senator from Arkansas, and also to the Senator from Washington, so that there may be no misapprehension, that I have several motions I desire to make relative to the pending measure. One is to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] was agreed to; another to strike out subdivision 2 of section 1, the provision for private corporations receiving aid; and if that should not be agreed to, I shall propose another amendment limiting the amount which may be loaned to any one project to $25,000,000. I thought it was only fair to all concerned that I should indicate that those motions were pending and would be offered.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, of course, I do not know what discussion there may be of the conference report for which I have moved consideration; whether it will take any considerable time or not; but I thought probably we could soon dispose of it. If it should take some little time, why then I think it is rather important that we should proceed with it and get it disposed of, because a number of appropriation bills, as I stated this morning, have to be passed and be in operation before the 1st of July. Some of them ought to be in effect previous to that time, so that matters can be properly carried on. I want to dispose of the conference report to-day. If by withholding it a couple of hours, it can still be concluded to-day and allow the consideration of the pending measure to proceed, I am perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest that the Senator from Washington take that course for the present, and then if he feels constrained later to proceed with the conference report, he will, of course, be at liberty to do so.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Washington if he could not arrange to take the conference report up to-morrow? I have something I wish to say, but I am not prepared this afternoon, and I should like to have the consideration of the report deferred until to-morrow morning. If the Senator can arrange to do that, I will greatly appreciate it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington has the floor.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to accommodate all Senators so far as I can, but I am also anxious to have the public business transacted. I know there is no disposition unnecessarily to delay the consideration of the conference report, and, if it will help matters to proceed with the pending bill to-day, I am perfectly willing that that should be done; but I wish to give notice that on the opening of the session to-morrow I will ask that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the conference report. For the present, therefore, I withdraw the conference report and my motion, but I give notice that on the convening of the Senate to-morrow I shall make a motion to proceed with the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. MOSES. That being the case, I will now offer the amendment of which I spoke this morning.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. MOSES. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. I wish simply to request that the report submitted by the Senator may be printed in the interim so that we may have it before us to-morrow morning.

Mr. JONES. It is printed in the RECORD in the proceedings of the House and the Senator can also secure a printed copy of it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very well.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. MOSES. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to give notice that following action on the conference report on the legislative appropriation bill involving the economy program, I intend to ask that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the independent offices appropriation bill. I do not think that it will take very long to consider that bill.

LOANS TO STATES—SYSTEM OF HIGHWAYS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12445) to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by authorizing and expediting a public-works program, and providing a method of financing such program.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me?

Mr. MOSES. I yield.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has stated that he expects to make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was added at the end of the bill dealing with certain Army construction. I hope the Senator will do me the kindness of making that motion at some time when I am on the floor, because it will be my duty to make the point of order against the motion that it is too late.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. MOSES. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I desire to address myself to the matter just adverted to by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

I was not present when the amendment was offered or adopted and I had no opportunity whatever to know anything about it until the reprint of the committee amendment with the amendments heretofore adopted to it was laid on our desks this morning. I assumed that it was an amendment providing simply an appropriation for the construction of Army buildings according to the housing program, and I should have no particular objection to that; indeed, in the drafting of the bill consideration was given to the question as to whether an appropriation should not be included in the bill for some such purpose.

But, Mr. President, now that I have an opportunity to read the amendment, I find that it not only makes an appropriation of $15,000,000 for housing work and similar construction but undertakes to specify the particular housing construction that shall be undertaken under this provision, without any information, so far as I know, on the part of the Senate concerning by whom the selection was made or about the necessity for the particular buildings included in the item.

With respect, for instance, to the general building construction provisions of the bill there is an appropriation of $100,000,000 for the construction of buildings pursuant to the survey heretofore made and according to the selection and choice made by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General. There is no attempt to specify where the construction shall take place or what buildings shall be constructed except as thus indicated.

Considerable criticism has been directed against the House bill by reason of the fact that it undertakes to specify the particular works for the construction of which the bill provides. It has been referred to opprobriously by reason of that feature of the bill, and it occurred to me that much the same manner of criticism might be directed at this particular feature of the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

This amendment, for instance, provides for the construction of a quartermaster maintenance building at Albrook Field, Canal Zone, for buildings at Barksdale Field, La., for buildings at Fort Bennings, Ga., for buildings at Fort Douglas, Utah, for construction at Edgewood Arsenal, Md.——

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I do not wish to imperil my possession of the floor. However, if this colloquy is not going to run much longer, I shall yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It would look at least as though it would be open to the criticism that these items are incorporated for the purpose of getting support for the amendment.

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me to reply? If so, I will be very brief.

Mr. MOSES. I yield.

Mr. REED. The matter of Army housing has always been handled in this way; that is to say, the Congress has specified where each improvement shall be made and how much shall be expended upon it. The amendment is substantially the same as the provision which was embodied in the original Garner bill, and the list was taken from an Army housing bill worked out after careful study by the House Military Affairs Committee, some member of which visited every single post mentioned in the list, with the exception of one.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me ask the Senator a question. It is now suggested to me that the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania was directed to the House text.

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire has the floor. Does he yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. MOSES. I have been yielding to the Senator from Pennsylvania and to the Senator from Montana, but as I said, Mr. President, I do not wish to imperil my possession of the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have no antagonism to the amendment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. MOSES. I yield now to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator. I was here when this amendment was adopted and I believe the chairman of the committee, the Senator from New York, understood—and that the Senate understood—that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania was to complete the House text of the so-called Garner bill. I know that the Senator from Pennsylvania believed that he was offering an amendment to the so-called Wagner bill; but I recall with vivid distinctness that it was the impression on this side—certainly it was my impression—that the amendment presented by the Senator was to the House text, so that, if and when the House text became a law, the Senator's amendment would be incorporated in it. I had an amendment of almost identical character which was intended to be offered as an amendment to the House text, so that when it became a law, if ever, my amendment would be in it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it is already in the House text.

Mr. MOSES. Inasmuch as this subject is not before the Senate, and will not be until the motion to reconsider is actually made——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, just a moment; a parliamentary inquiry. I understood that this was simply restoring the House text. I have no objection to the amendment; but I know that the able Senator from Pennsylvania would not want to achieve any victory where there was a misunderstanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is reminded of the fact that this is an amendment to the so-called Wagner bill, on page 114.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; I am aware of that. I am aware that the RECORD states that; but the Chair is not aware—and I am not aware—that the Senate understood that that was the situation. The Senate believed that we were restoring the House text and not amending the Wagner bill. I state that on my authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire will lose the floor if he does not proceed.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, as I said, this matter is not before the Senate, and will not be until the motion to reconsider is actually made. Therefore I will resume the floor, and move to amend by striking out, beginning on page 103, at line 20, down to the end of line 16 on page 112.

Mr. President, this amendment goes to the heart of the difference of opinion regarding the policy to be pursued in legislation of this character. One school of opinion in the Senate maintains strongly that large sums of money should be raised through bond issues for the purpose of public works, to the end of mitigating unemployment. The other school of opinion—and I adhere to the second school—believes from observation and experience that the moneys already spent for public works under similar circumstances have not produced that mitigation of unemployment which the authors of the legislative projects had in mind.

We discover, from observation in many sections of the country, that when large sums of money are provided for public works, and notably for Federal buildings, the contractors for those projects prove to be, in almost every instance—certainly in a very large percentage of instances—specialized contractors who are familiar with every detail of Federal specifications for buildings, who know how to take advantage of every incident connected with securing a contract, who bring their own organizations to the site of the operation, and who provide little or no local employment.

This very morning in one of the Washington papers was to be found a violent complaint about the situation which has been created in this city in the expenditure of the many millions of dollars which we have authorized for public buildings here, on the ground that practically all of the contracts were awarded to these highly specialized contractors, and that substantially no employment was provided for people in the community.

In other words, Mr. President, those of us who hold opinions similar to mine regarding legislation of this character are of the opinion that the expectations of benefits to be reached under a bill such as this, which is entitled "A bill * * * to create employment by authorizing and expediting a public-works program," are bound to prove futile.

In addition to that, we have spent hours in discussing the form in which we should give aid to self-liquidating projects. The projects contained in the portion of the bill which I am moving to strike out are not only not self-liquidating but they are projects which will set up a perpetual burden upon the Treasury through maintenance, repairs, custodial services, and so forth.

It is believed, if one may read the terms of the bill optimistically, that that portion of the money which is purposed to be used for highway construction will some time come back into the Treasury through deductions to be made from annual grants to the States under legislation already existing. I believe that equally will prove futile, Mr. President, and that no one of the benefits advanced as flowing from this section of the bill can be realized in anything like the measure that the authors of the bill and the committee have in mind.

As I have watched the progress of the bill in the Senate, I have become convinced that the form of the bill is substantially determined upon, and I believe that the fate of the bill is substantially determined upon. Holding those opinions in that special regard, I have no desire to prolong the debate upon my amendment. As a matter of fact, I am under some form of gentlemen's agreement with the Senator from Arkansas that I would, so far as I am concerned, in debating this amendment, confine myself within the limit of time which he this morning suggested. I am doing that, and I am quite content that the amendment shall be submitted to the Senate and voted upon, because this amendment, once disposed of, whether by rejection or agreement, fixes the policy which the Senate believes should inhere in this measure. That, after all, is really the crucial question before the Senate as we consider this proposition.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I am in complete agreement and full accord with all that the Senator from New Hampshire has said in respect to that provision of the Wagner bill which provides $500,000,000 to be derived from the proceeds of an extraordinary bond issue, of which approximately $300,000,000 would be used in addition to expenditures already appropriated for public works, and the remaining $200,000,000 would represent the capitalization of approximately a like amount of public-works items to be included in the ordinary Budget for the fiscal year 1933.

We all, of course, know all too well of the struggle through which we have so recently passed to make all possible economies in governmental expenditures, and, when that had been done, to provide sufficient new revenues in the form of increased taxation to balance the Budget. We must all realize, too, what it would mean to float, or try to float, such a bond issue at this particular time, under conditions as they prevail at present.

The device of creating a special fund or extraordinary bond issue does not alter the fact that the expenditures for public works would be increased by $300,000,000 for the fiscal year 1933. Neither, in my opinion, is anything actually gained by the capitalizing of current public-works expenditures, the inclusion of which in the regular Budget must automatically increase the deficit by just that amount.

The Senator from New Hampshire has described so clearly and forcefully the dangerous features of a program of this nature that there is nothing I feel I can add to what he has said, other than to stress the fact that in my opinion any money so expended, particularly for public buildings, actually employs less labor per dollar spent than money spent in other fields of activity, notably in respect to the self-liquidating projects feature of the Wagner bill, of which I have been in favor, as you all know, from the very beginning.

I am therefore forced to vote with the Senator from New Hampshire in favor of striking out this particular feature of the Wagner bill, and I hope his amendment will prevail.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas obtained the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment which takes precedence over the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

Mr. NORRIS. On page 102 of the bill, at the end of line 7—amending language that this amendment would strike out—I move to insert the following:

> The Secretary of Agriculture is directed to report to Congress in detail his action under this subsection.

The Senate will remember that earlier in the day a motion was made to strike out, on page 101, commencing with line 18, all down to and including line 7 on page 102.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not think any objection can be offered to the amendment which he proposes.

Mr. NORRIS. I offered it once before, and it was objected to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair point out to the Senator that there is an amendment pending.

Mr. NORRIS. The amendment pending, as I understand, is the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But it begins at page 103, section 4.

Mr. NORRIS. I have here the printed amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I say to the Senator from Nebraska that different copies are being used. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire has no relationship whatever to advances through the Secretary of Agriculture to promote foreign exports. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire relates solely to the provision in the bill creating a fund for public works.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I understand that, but let me read from it:

On page 102, line 4, beginning with the word "any," strike out down to and including line 5, page 103, and in lieu thereof insert the following.

That is striking out language in the bill that I am seeking to amend.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, he is erroneously stating the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, as I understand it, is, commencing on page 103 at line 20, or section 4, to strike out all down to the end of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair point out to the Senator from Nebraska that that is not the amendment.

Mr. Norris. Then I am reading the wrong amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; the Senator from New Hampshire did not offer the printed amendment which he had on the desk.

Mr. NORRIS. The printed copy that I have of the amendment, then, is not the one that is pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No.

Mr. NORRIS. Then I concede the position taken by the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire is to strike out all language in the bill, commencing with section 4, down to the end of the bill.

Mr. MOSES. Oh, no, Mr. President; not down to the end of the bill, because the Senate this morning passed on the question of the commission in another amendment.

My amendment begins on line 20, page 103; and I move to strike out from that point down to the end of line 16, on page 112—I am now speaking of the official bill—because the Senator will recall that this morning we dealt with the matter of the commission.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; and, while it is not important to discuss it, the amendment was correctly stated when I said "down to the end of the bill," because the commission provision has already gone out.

Mr. MOSES. Yes; that is right.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from New Hampshire set an example which I am going to follow. He limited his remarks, and directed them to the issue immediately under consideration. The provision which he seeks to strike out authorizes $500,000,000 through a bond issue for certain public works. In that $500,000,000 is comprehended a sum aggregating about $132,500,000 for public roads, trails, and so forth. That is, I believe, literally the House bill which passed some months ago, and which has been considered from time to time by the Senate.

If the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire should prevail, the advance for highway purposes will be eliminated. It is respectfully suggested that this road fund is of such a nature that it will reach other than the great industrial centers, that it will provide a measure of employment in many rural communities where conditions are quite as bad as are to be found anywhere else.

It is almost an identical provision with that which was passed by the Senate a year ago at the instance and request of the administration. True, the amount appropriated then was somewhat less than the amount carried in this bill. It would be unfortunate, if this measure is to be regarded as a comprehensive scheme for partially relieving unemployment, to strike out the amount carried for the construction of public highways.

The Senator from New Hampshire has referred to the dangers that the bill would undergo if this provision which he is seeking to strike out should be retained. I wish to emphasize the fact that it would be exceedingly difficult to pass the measure either through this body or the body at the other end of the Capitol with the sum for public roads stricken out. I do not say that by way of threat, but merely in reply to the declaration of the Senator from New Hampshire that the retention of this provision would endanger the bill.

It is inconceivable to me that the President would veto a bill which incorporates an item almost identical with one which he prompted the Congress to pass for a similar purpose a year ago, when conditions relating to unemployment were less oppressive than they are now. If that is the significance of the declaration of the Senator from New Hampshire, I take it that he has been replied to.

Moreover, this measure, in the part proposed to be stricken out, actually takes out of the current appropriation bills approximately $200,000,000. Adding that to the $135,000,000 carried for highways, we have $335,000,000 of the fund which it is contemplated shall be created, obtained by a bond issue.

Of the remainder, there is $100,000,000 which may be used in the construction of Federal buildings already authorized, not appropriated for, and which will replace post offices and other buildings now rented at high cost to the Government. The selections are to be made, within the limitation just stated, by the Secretary of the Treasury. That accounts for the sum of $432,500,000 of the total of $500,000,000 bond issue. This leaves a comparatively small remainder allotted to certain specific purposes which I shall not take time to discuss.

I conceive that the real objection to this provision is found in the fact that it is not comprehensive enough, but the committee which drafted this bill did so at great pains. They made a very careful study of the subject. They invoked and secured the assistance of numerous specialists and experts in the employ of the Government. There is not an item in this $500,000,000 provision that has not been carefully worked out, that is not necessary for the conduct of the affairs of the Government, that is not, in a fair and sound sense, a measure of economy on the part of the administration of the Government.

For these reasons I am unable to give support to the proposal of the Senator from New Hampshire. The subject is one which might be elaborated at great length, but I am going to conclude my remarks with the suggestion that this is a very modest program, it is well thought out, it is in the interest of the Government, and it does tend to afford relief from the constantly increasing unemployment of which we speak so much, and which we do so little to alleviate.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I shall follow the example of the Senator from Arkansas and express, as briefly as possible, the few thoughts that should be added to what has already been said.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] correctly states that this amendment of his will bring forth the two schools of philosophy which are in contention in this body. One school takes the position that we should follow, as the Government has followed in other depressions, the laissez faire policy of waiting for some miracle to bring about a recovery of business and the absorption of the unemployed, and that we should accept with it all the misery, the tragedy, and the loss involved in the destruction of the most cherished of our national assets, the future of our children.

There are others of us here who for some time have been contending that in this crisis, when private industry is paralyzed, when private business is practically at a standstill, when the volume of construction is shrinking, when the prices of commodities are going down, when bread lines are lengthening, and when new unemployed are being added day by day to the 10,000,000 men out of employment now, the Federal Government should take some steps to better conditions. What has Congress done directly along the line of what the Government ought to do, to put those men back to work, and restore their purchasing power? The pending bill, Mr. President, is the first genuine effort to accomplish that purpose.

An objection was urged yesterday by the Senator from Pennsylvania, that perchance this bill might not result in an equitable distribution of the benefits all over the country. I deny that, but in any event it is to me incomprehensible that such an argument should be urged as a reason for adopting the laissez faire doctrine of doing nothing.

It seems strange to me that during the consideration of the reconstruction finance proposal no such suggestion was advanced against the enactment of that legislation. We did not at that time hear asserted the argument that legislation ought not to be passed to arrest the further progress of the depression, and to improve our credit facilities because a bank in some particular section of the country alone would be benefited, or that perhaps only a railroad in Pennsylvania or New York or some other State would be benefited, by the borrowing privilege granted under the act. We were not told that because the benefits might not be distributed uniformly we ought not to enact the legislation at all. If that objection had been urged, the answer would have been made directly that when we benefited any one section of the country, we served the general welfare of the whole country.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation act has been passed. The Glass-Steagall Act is on the statute books. All of these things we have done. I admit they have been of some benefit. I suppose they prevented the closing of some banks. Perhaps they assisted, for the time being, in preventing our slide down the toboggan of depression. But they have not brought about any recovery in our business conditions. To-day we still face the tragic reality of 10,000,000 or more men out of employment, with several million families now relying entirely upon charity.

By way of interpolation let me suggest that to-day the head of the Salvation Army in New York was in my office, and he told me that 8,000 men were being housed and fed by that organization in the city of New York, men who had come there for aid from different sections of the country. Many of them are professional men and business men, all of them penniless, without anything to eat or a place to sleep, except such as is provided by the Salvation Army. The significant thing he said to me was this. He said, "Senator, these men are all good, patriotic Americans. They have not suggested a word of protest against the Government. They are suffering under this shadow of charitable aid, and all they say is, 'We want an opportunity to work.'"

Private industry, under existing circumstances, is unable to take up the slack. It is unable to provide employment. Shall we, the Government, not use whatever instruments are in our hands to absorb part of this unemployment, to begin the stimulation of business and set in motion the return toward better times? When we once start it, I am sure that as time goes on prices of commodities will increase, and that more than any other change will make possible the resumption of private business activity. Thus far we have been smug, we have been complacent, we have been waiting for some one else to do the job or for some one to perform a miracle and thus bring us back to normalcy; but it can not be done that way.

The program of reconstruction which has been proposed in the pending bill is a very modest one, as the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has stated. There is a third school of thought here, and I sympathize with its purposes, composed of those Senators who feel that the program ought to be enlarged, particularly the Federal public-works program which the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire would strike from the bill. They feel that the bill does not launch a sufficiently large number of public works to give work to a substantial number of the unemployed. I am sure that efforts will be made by them to enlarge that program. The objective of this group I can understand; but I am unable to appreciate the philosophy of those who want to strike out even this modest aid for the employment of our citizens.

In adopting the program of public works we are following a law which is upon the statute books, a declaration which the Congress made over a year ago in a bill which it will be recalled I had the honor to introduce and in the signing of which, after it was passed, the President expressed great gratification. It provides that the Government should prepare our public-works program for a period of six years in advance so that if an industrial slack should come upon us we would be in a position to accelerate public construction and take up the slack in private industry. We are to-day simply following the declaration of Congress, and the declaration indeed of the President, because in signing the employment stabilization act he called the attention of the country to the fact that the proposal was not entirely new and that he himself, in 1921, had advocated the formulation and enactment of similar legislation.

Mr. President, under the program, as the Senator from Arkansas has said, and may I reiterate it for the sake of emphasis, we take only such projects as have been authorized and approved by Congress and the President, such as have been planned, and upon which we are ready to proceed. It is conservatively estimated that upon the Federal public-works program alone, which the Senator from New Hampshire is attempting to strike from the bill, over 500,000 men can receive employment.

I can not believe in this crisis, when the whole country is looking tearfully to us, still pessimistic, but looking for a ray of hope from the Capitol, praying for aid in the reestablishment of confidence and the recovery of business, that we will say "no"; that we will not even use the instrumentalities within our control to help the workingmen of the country redeem their self-respect by employment and to restore purchasing power to the American people. That road of inaction does not lead to better times.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MOSES. I demand the yeas and nays.

CHARLESTOWN SAND & STONE CO.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 564, being Calendar No. 889. There are unusual reasons which make necessary the prompt passage of the bill, and therefore I make the request.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 564) for the relief of the Charlestown Sand & Stone Co., of Elkton, Md.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I inquire if this is an emergency measure? I must object to the consideration of bills of this character under present conditions. I do not think we can suspend the consideration of a bill of general importance, one that is itself imperiled or embarrassed by appropriation bills and conference reports that are behind it. I shall object.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No. I feel compelled to object. At a time when the Senate is not considering a bill of general importance, I would not object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred or ordered to be placed on the calendar as indicated below:

H. R. 1225. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Campus Martius Memorial Museum, of the city of Marietta, Ohio, the silver service presented to the United States for the gunboat Marietta; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

H. R. 9590. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the collection and publication of statistics of tobacco by the Department of Agriculture," approved January 14, 1929; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

H. R. 11390. An act to detach Hardeman County from the Fort Worth division of the northern judicial district of the State of Texas and attach the same to the Wichita Falls division of said district; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 12078. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the east branch of the Niagara River at or near the city of Niagara Falls, N. Y.; to the calendar.

H. R. 12329. An act to establish the boundary lines of the Chippewa Indian Territory in the State of Minnesota; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMELIA EARHART PUTNAM

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 165) authorizing the President of the United States to present the distinguished-flying cross to Amelia Earhart Putnam, which were, on page 1, line 4, to strike out "flying cross" and insert "service medal," and to amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States to present the distinguished-service medal to Amelia Earhart Putnam."

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, the Senate unanimously approved this joint resolution to award the distinguished-flying cross to Amelia Earhart Putnam. It went over to the House; and after quite an exhaustive report made by the Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Davison, it was concluded that it would be wiser to make this the distinguished-service medal rather than the distinguished-flying cross, because the War Department wanted to reserve the distinguished-flying cross entirely for feats of aviation within the Army and within the Navy. Therefore the House amended the joint resolution by changing the two words "flying cross" to "service medal," and also amended the title.

I therefore move that the House amendments be accepted and the joint resolution approved.

The motion was agreed to.

IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION OF VIRGIN ISLANDS NATIVES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4425) relating to the immigration and naturalization of certain natives of the Virgin Islands, which was, on page 3, line 6, to strike out "Porto Rico" and insert "Puerto Rico."

Mr. REED. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 2983. An act for the relief of homesteaders on the Diminished Colville Indian Reservation, Wash.;

S. 3864. An act authorizing expenditures from Colorado River tribal funds for reimbursable loans;

S. 4367. An act to enable the collection of import duties on foreign-made goods entering the Virgin Islands through parcel-post mail;

S. 4511. An act to amend sections 328 and 329 of the United States Criminal Code of 1910 and sections 548 and 549 of the United States Code of 1926;

S. 4614. An act to amend section 14 of an act entitled "An act to adjust water-right charges, to grant certain other relief on the Federal irrigation projects, and for other purposes," approved May 25, 1926 (44 Stat. 636), as amended (46 Stat. 249); and

S. 4778. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the east branch of the Niagara River at or near the city of Tonawanda, N. Y.

LOANS TO STATES—SYSTEM OF HIGHWAYS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12445) to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by authorizing and expediting a public-works program, and providing a method of financing such program.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. May I ask the Senator to allow me to offer an amendment, which will not take over five minutes? I make the request because I must go back to a meeting of a conference committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I presume that technically under the rule I would have to permit the Senator to offer his amendment, but I have been waiting for two days with the expectation that amendments to the text would be completed. However, if the Senator wishes to amend the text, his amendment is probably in order, because I propose to strike out down to section 5, which authorizes the issuance of bonds. Therefore, if the amendment of the Senator from New York proposes to amend the text which I desire to strike out, his amendment is probably in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Wisconsin temporarily to lay aside his amendment in order that the Senator from New York may present an amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, my understanding of the parliamentary situation is that technically any Senator who desires to offer an amendment to the portion of the text which I propose to strike out is in order without any consent. However, I very much regret that I have not been able to secure the attention of the Senate earlier in the day, because the amendment I have presented is of very great importance from my point of view, and I shall have to discuss it at some length.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Wisconsin that if he wishes to withhold the amendment temporarily, in order to permit the Senator from New York to present an amendment, the Chair will undertake to protect the Senator from Wisconsin in his rights.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I appreciate the Chair's kindness in the matter. There have been amendments offered here all day long for the last two or three days. I had hoped to get my amendment up at some earlier hour in one of the sessions of the Senate, and, unless the Senator from New York insists on his rights, I should prefer to proceed.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I quite understand the position of the Senator and I will try to find an occasion later to present my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senate committee. As I understand the rules, it is in order to perfect the text either of the House bill or the portion recommended by the committee to be inserted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may I point out to the Senator from Florida that the amendment which I propose leaves all after section 5, beginning on page 109, and going on to the end of the bill. Therefore, unless the Senator's amendment is an amendment to the text which I propose to strike out, my belief is that his amendment is not in order at this time.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, my amendment is in the nature of a new paragraph or section. The Senator from Wisconsin having been recognized, I realize he has a right to propose his amendment, and I will await the disposition of his amendment before proposing the one which I have to offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 100 it is proposed to strike out lines 14 through 25; on page 101, strike out lines 1 through 17; on page 102, strike out all after line 7; strike out all of pages 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108; on page 109, strike out lines 1 through 5; and in lieu thereof insert——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there is still a question as to what is sought to be stricken out. I want to inquire, does the amendment propose to strike out on page 101 after line 17?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It proposes to strike out from line 14, on page 100, down to and including line 17, on page 101.

Mr. NORRIS. It does not strike out subsection (b)?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that will remain in the bill if my amendment shall prevail.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment proposed by Mr. LA FOLLETTE, which is as follows:

On page 100, strike out lines 14 through 25; on page 101, strike out lines 1 through 17; on page 102, strike out all after line 7; strike out all of pages 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108; on page 109, strike out lines 1 through 5; and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"That it is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress to provide for the more effective conduct and administration of Federal public-works activities; that, during the period of emergency hereby recognized to exist, public-works expenditures should be largely expanded in order to stimulate production and business activity and to alleviate unemployment; and that in pursuance of this policy it is the desire of Congress that the expenditure of the emergency funds made available by this act shall be governed, in the discretion of the administrator of public works, provided for in section 2, by the following considerations:

"(1) Facility with which projects may be gotten under way at the earliest possible date.

"(2) Amount of labor that will be employed, directly or indirectly.

"(3) Number and diversity of the industries which will be affected, directly or indirectly, by said projects.

"(4) Value of the projects to the economic and social welfare of the country.

"(5) Economical administration of the work.

"ADMINISTRATION OF PUBLIC WORKS

"SEC. 2. (a) There is hereby established at the seat of government an administration of public works, under the direction of the administrator of public works. The administrator of public works shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. He shall receive a salary at the rate of $15,000 per annum, and his term and tenure of office shall be like that of the heads of the executive departments.

"(b) The administrator—

"(1) Shall maintain the principal office of the Administration of Public Works in the District of Columbia, and such other offices in the United States as in his judgment are necessary.

"(2) Shall cause a seal of office to be made for the Administration of Public Works, of such device as the President shall approve, and judicial notice shall be taken thereof.

"(3) Shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

"(4) Shall make annually, at the close of each fiscal year, a report in writing to Congress, giving an account of all moneys received and disbursed by him and the Administration of Public Works, describing the work done by the Administration of Public Works, and making such recommendations as he shall deem necessary. He shall also make from time to time such special investigations and reports as may be required of him by the President or either House of Congress, or as he himself may deem necessary and urgent.

"(5) May appoint and fix the compensation of such assistant administrators and technical and scientific experts, and, subject to the provisions of the civil service laws, may appoint, and, in accordance with the classification act of 1923, as amended, fix the compensation of such other officers and employees as are necessary to execute the functions vested by this act in the administrator or the Administration of Public Works.

"(6) May make such expenditures (including expenditures for personal services and rent at the seat of government and elsewhere, for law books, periodicals, and books of reference, and for printing and binding) as are necessary to execute the functions vested in the administrator or in the Administration of Public Works. Such expenditures shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the administrator.

"EMERGENCY CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

"SEC. 3. To meet the emergency hereby recognized to exist, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $5,500,000,000, to be immediately available for expenditure by the administrator of public works in the manner hereinafter provided.

"SEC. 4. In carrying out the emergency construction program, the administrator—

"(1) May appoint advisory boards and committees to advise and confer with him. No salary shall be paid to board or committee members, but when attending meetings or engaged in other activities at the request of the administrator they shall be allowed necessary traveling and subsistence expenses, or per diem allowance in lieu thereof, within the limitations prescribed by law for civilian employees in the executive branch of the Government.

"(2) May hold hearings and require, by subpœna, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents and may administer oaths. In case of disobedience to any subpœna the administrator may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents.

"(3) Shall submit monthly to the President and to the Senate and House of Representatives (or the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives, if those bodies are not in session) a full and detailed report of the emergency activities and expenditures of the Administration of Public Works, together with a statement showing the condition of the funds administered by him. Such reports shall, when submitted, be printed as public documents.

"SEC. 5. The administrator is authorized to deduct from any appropriation made pursuant to the authorization contained in this act so much thereof as he deems necessary for the expenses of the Administration of Public Works in carrying out the emergency provisions of this act. The remainder of any such appropriations shall be available for expenditure for the purpose hereinafter set forth, upon allocation by the administrator in accordance with and in furtherance of the policy set forth in section 1 of this act, so far as the administrator deems feasible.

"SEC. 6. In addition to the regular appropriations for the public works hereinafter specified the administrator may expend for such public works a total of not to exceed $650,000,000 of the amount authorized in section 3 as follows:

"(1) For the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works and for the prosecution of such projects heretofore and hereafter authorized as may be most desirable in the interest of commerce and navigation, and for the prosecution of flood-control projects heretofore or hereafter authorized, not to exceed $200,000,000;

"(2) For carrying into effect the provisions of the public buildings act, approved May 25, 1926, as now or hereafter amended and supplemented, in respect of public buildings within and without the District of Columbia, not to exceed $275,000,000;

"(3) For the construction and reconstruction of forest roads and trails, not to exceed $50,000,000;

"(4) For the prosecution of irrigation, drainage, and reclamation projects heretofore or hereafter approved in accordance with law, not to exceed $25,000,000;

"(5) For repair and remodeling of existing buildings and structures, and for miscellaneous Federal public works, in the discretion of the President, not to exceed $100,000,000.

"SEC. 7. In addition to the regular appropriations for Federal-aid highways, the administrator may allocate an additional $1,000,000,000 of the amount authorized in section 3 for the construction and reconstruction of highways in the manner hereinafter provided, which shall be available for expenditure upon highway projects approved by the administrator, as follows:

"(a) Not to exceed $500,000,000 of such amount shall from time to time be apportioned by the administrator among the several States in the manner provided by section 21 of the Federal highway act, as amended and supplemented, and shall be available for expenditure in the same manner, so far as practicable, as other funds appropriated for carrying out the provisions of the Federal highway act, with the following exceptions:

"(1) The limitation of payments permitted by said act shall be increased to $50,000 per mile, exclusive of the cost of bridges of more than 20 feet clear span;

"(2) Any amounts apportioned to any State not claimed by such State shall be available for payment to States who are able to proceed with construction over and above their apportionment;

"(3) Such funds may be used as a temporary advance to meet the requirements of such act as to State funds, to be reimbursed to the Federal Government over a period of five years, commencing with the fiscal year beginning next after the termination of the emergency, by making deductions from regular apportionments made from future authorizations for carrying out the provisions of such act.

"(b) Not to exceed $150,000,000 of such amount shall be available for meeting 50 per cent of the cost to the several States and their civil subdivisions of highway bridge construction, without regard to the provisions of the Federal highway act limiting the expenditures of Federal funds to bridges outside certain municipalities.

"(c) Not to exceed $250,000,000 of such amount shall be available for meeting 50 per cent of the cost to the several States and their civil subdivisions of elimination of railroad grade crossings.

"(d) Not to exceed $100,000,000 of such amount shall be available for meeting 50 per cent of the cost to the several States and their civil subdivisions of elimination of highway grade crossings and construction of by-pass roads.

"SEC. 8. (a) The administrator may allocate not to exceed $3,750,000,000 of the amount authorized in section 3 for the purpose of making loans to States and their civil subdivisions for (1) construction of Federal-aid highways; (2) construction of other State, county, and municipal highways, streets, and pavements; (3) construction of bridges; (4) construction of water supply and sewerage works; (5) construction of flying fields, exclusive of purchase of lands; (6) establishing of parks and playgrounds, exclusive of purchase of lands; (7) construction of public buildings; (8) elimination of grade crossings; (9) reforestation and fire prevention, exclusive of purchase of lands; and (10) other construction of a public or semipublic character.

"(b) Loans made under the provisions of this section shall be for periods of not more than 10 years, at a rate of interest three-fourths of 1 per cent above the average rate at the time of making the loan for the bonds issued theretofore under the provisions of this act, but in no event to exceed 5 per cent. No loans shall be made under the provisions of this section except upon the approval of the finance board created by section 10.

"SEC. 9. The administrator may allocate not to exceed $100,000,000 of the amount authorized in section 3 for the purpose of making loans to limited dividend corporations created solely for the erection of housing, on projects for housing families of low-income levels, such projects to have the approval of the administrator with respect to (1) the financial structure and the limitation of the dividends of the corporation, and/or (2) the limitation of the rentals to be charged, and/or (3) the location and plan of the project with respect to city plans, slum clearance, and the rehabilitation of blighted areas in cities, and/or (4) the replacement of housing now unfit for healthful habitation, and/or (5) the guaranties under State or municipal laws and administration of adequate control, and/or (6) the senior or other financing of the project, and (7) such other considerations and safeguards as the administrator shall deem necessary or expedient. Such loans shall be made upon the same terms and conditions as loans made under section 8, except that such loans may be for periods of not more than 30 years, and may be amortized serially within such limitation of time.

"SEC. 10. There is hereby created an Emergency Finance Board, to be composed of three members, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. One of the members of the board shall be experienced in State and municipal finance, one shall be experienced in housing construction, and one shall be experienced in banking and finance generally. All applications for loans under sections 8 and 9 shall, subsequent to their approval by the administrator, be referred to the board for its approval. In acting upon such applications for loans the board shall take into consideration (1) the financial condition of the borrower and (2) the ability of the borrower to obtain funds at reasonable rates from other sources. No salary shall be paid to board members, but they shall be paid from funds available for the administration of this act a per diem compensation not to exceed $20 for time devoted to the business of the board, and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses or per diem allowance in lieu thereof, within the limitations prescribed by law for civilian employees in the executive branch of the Government. The members of the board shall serve during the continuation of the emergency.

"SEC. 11. Appropriations authorized by section 3 shall remain available until expended or until the index of industrial production, as now computed, of the Federal Reserve Board reaches index No. 95. Thereafter the administrator shall make no new commitments, and shall have the emergency powers conferred upon him by this act only so far as may be necessary to complete contracts already under way and liquidate the emergency affairs of the Administration of Public Works."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, there are two divergent schools of thought in a depression. One group adheres to the theory of deflation—it favors letting the depression run its course. The other school of thought subscribes to the theory that action by the Government, and by those in positions of economic power, should be undertaken to check the process of deflation and to endeavor to stimulate recovery.

Ever since this depression began, the Government—and when I use that term I refer not only to the President and the executive branch, but as well to the legislative branch—has followed the policy of deflation.

During the depression I have endeavored, as a Member of this body, to force upon the attention of the Senate the cataclysmic character of the economic phenomenon we have been witnessing. I have urged upon the Senate its responsibility to inaugurate a policy to meet the devastating effects of this deflation.

My efforts have been unavailing. Naturally, on this side of the aisle the majority of the Senators have followed the policy, or the lack of policy, of the Chief Executive. Strangely enough, those on the other side of the aisle—who, under our 2-party system of government, have a responsibility of functioning as the opposition—have during this, the most serious economic crisis in all our history, abandoned that function, and have been following the course marked out by the President.

Convinced as I am that we have yet to see the most serious phases of this deflation, I think the time has come to review the attitude taken during this crisis by the Chief Executive and subscribed to by Republicans and Democrats in the Congress. I select for review the record which he has made, not from any desire to raise partisan or political questions in this debate, but because he has been the leader of a virtual coalition in the Congress of both Republicans and Democrats. As we stand to-day facing the most serious phase of this terrible depression I venture to make that review, because upon it I wish to predicate an appeal to Members upon both sides of this Chamber to rise above party considerations and to embrace a program which I believe has within it hope of checking the downward spiral of this deflation, and of alleviating the suffering and the human misery which exist in this land of plenty to-day, to a degree beyond the ability of words to describe.

When the President of the United States was inaugurated on the 4th day of March, 1929, he came into office on the eve of a catastrophic economic breakdown. He entered upon that office with a reputation carefully cultivated during his eight years as Secretary of Commerce and strengthened in the public mind by the speeches which he made during the campaign preceding his election, which, had it been justified, promised intelligent and courageous handling of precisely the type of problems which have confronted him during this most serious situation.

It was the popular belief in this country that Herbert Hoover was an able business man with great executive ability, that he had an intimate acquaintance with and a thorough grasp of economic problems, both domestic and world-wide, and that, in addition, he was guided by a warm and sincere humanitarianism, as exemplified in his administration of relief during the war.

He made a significant declaration in his inaugural address that—

> The larger purpose of our economic thought should be to establish more firmly stability and security of business and employment.

It was not, however, translated into action during the seven months of apparent complacency in the face of visible economic signs that we were already entering upon the first phases of this economic disaster. Apparently the President believed that the fictitious prosperity which found its expression less in an improvement of the real economic position of the masses of American citizens than in booming stock prices and in extravagant profits, skimmed off by the few at the top of our economic ladder, could go on forever. He seemed entirely content with the diversion of large portions of the national income away from investment in measures to promote the general welfare and into investments in artificially inflated stock values, into economically unwarranted buildings and industries, and into foreign securities. He made no effort to check the growing concentration of economic power which was increasingly subordinating the national economic welfare to the growth of the profits and the possessions of a class of financiers and speculators. He showed no interest in proposals to increase the purchasing power of the people generally in proportion to the increase in the Nation's producing power, or in proposals to safeguard the masses of the people against the dangers of an economic storm.

In so far as he intervened at all, it was through his insistence that there must be no governmental intervention, the laissez faire policy which he eulogized when he insisted in his inaugural address that "progress" would be attained by "cooperation." The lip service which he gave to the "regulation of private enterprise" and to "the rigid enforcement" of the laws applying to business, quickly showed itself vacillating, and yielded readily to the demands of interested groups provided they were fortified with sufficient economic power.

The President's immediate efforts were directed toward what he described as the "dominant issue" of law enforcement, toward the enactment of his own plan of agricultural relief, which has proved to be such a tragic disappointment to the farmers of the country, and as a means of benefiting certain industries which he admitted were suffering from "economic changes," toward the "readjustment of some of the tariff schedules."

Supplementing the warnings of those economists and observers who had been denounced as calamity howlers, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics had in February predicted a decline in business in the second half of the year. The need of giving early and serious consideration to the problem of economic instability had been given legislative recognition on the day preceding President Hoover's inauguration in a report submitted by the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] in response to a resolution which I had introduced on May 3, 1928. In June the President, however, rejected a suggestion that he call a national conference to consider ways of preventing the growth of unemployment, made by the president of the Iowa State Federation of Labor in an open communication to the Chief Executive, with the vague assurance that it was "hoped that we will be able to take it up when some of the momentarily pressing problems of the administration are out of the way."

Three months later these "momentarily pressing problems" faded into insignificance when in October prices of stocks on the New York Stock Exchange collapsed, financial demoralization threatened, and the gradual decline in industrial activity, which had already been under way for some time, suddenly became accelerated.

The President was oblivious to the underlying facts of the situation. On October 25, 1929, he announced to the press:

> The fundamental business of the country—that is, production and distribution of commodities—is on a sound and prosperous basis.

After an economic review, which demonstrated gross misinterpretation of the factors which he cited, he insisted that everything indicated fundamentally "a healthy condition." The next few weeks, however, demonstrated that he had been wrong when he referred to certain adverse signs as "of secondary character."

He began, therefore, in November to take counsel with prominent business leaders. The course of action upon which he determined thereafter made use of three of the policies with which for three years he continued futilely to attempt to stem the tide of depression: First, he adopted the tactics of minimizing the importance of the depression and the consequent distress which it created among the masses of the people in order to inculcate a false optimism in the minds of the public; second, he relied upon "psychological" measures to pep up the business and financial community and the more critical portion of the public; third, he employed the use of a multitude of conferences and committees to promote his "psychological" measures and to obtain "cooperation" as an alternative to positive governmental action.

In the succeeding months and years this course of action was supplemented by his resolute opposition to virtually every form of governmental action, except for schemes—including "psychological" drives as well as excursions into State capitalism—to create more and more credit and to somehow pump it into industry, based upon the illusion that recovery could be obtained through an abundance of credit without regard to the available amount of purchasing power.

Finally, Mr. President, during this period his activities have been characterized by frantic and often panicky efforts to enforce "unity of action," along the lines upon which he insisted, to censor the press, and thereby to found public opinion upon misinformation, and to shift the burden of responsibility for this major economic disaster upon some one else, sometimes upon "bear raiders" on the New York Stock Exchange, upon "noncooperating" portions of the business community, and more often and with greater intensity during recent months he has directed the scorn of the country upon the Congress, endeavoring to create in the public mind the belief that is sufficient power were given to him he would through means which he never quite defined restore prosperity.

When his domestic policies failed to produce results he soon came to attribute his failure, in so far as it could not be attributed to the stock exchange, to the business community or to Congress, to economic developments outside of the United States.

Throughout all of the shifts and turns in policy which followed the first failure of his efforts to minimize the situation and to offset it by "psychological" measures, there has been an obvious unwillingness to attack those in possession of wealth and of economic power and an acquiescence in attempts to throw the entire burden of deflation or liquidation upon the masses of the people, including the middle class.

The Chief Executive's own "psychology" must doubtless be held partly responsible for the ludicrously tragic story of his administration. He obviously lacked knowledge and understanding of economic forces, but he refused to give serious attention to proposals which he disliked, to statements of fact which contradicted his own views, and to counsels which ran contrary to his prejudices. His insistence for months upon speaking of a "recession" and not a "depression" was one of the least of the instances of this. When his policies were questioned, he regarded his critics as personal enemies.

He listened seriously only to sycophantic advisers who tried to read his mind. As a result he failed to break through his doctrinaire economic philosophy into the world of reality. He found it difficult to go boldly to the country or to consult frankly with men who came to him as equals. His conferences were always held secretly, and he attempted to limit public knowledge to whatever interpretation he chose to give to the press. His slowness in grasping or in admitting realities made him slow in altering policies until, pushed by the logic of events, he invariably launched his half measures 6 or 12 months too late. For comprehensive measures he had no taste, both because of the courage which they demanded and because of the sacrifices—whether temporary or permanent—which they would have imposed upon the financial and promoters' class with which he had associated throughout his life.

In announcing on November 15, 1929, the first of his many "programs of action," the President deprecated the prevailing pessimism which had followed the undue optimism of the stock-market boom, but said: "My own experience has been, however, that words are not of any great importance in times of economic disturbance. It is action that counts." He accordingly put forward a program involving:

1. Credit stability and assurance of an ample supply of capital, through the Federal reserve system.

2. Demonstration of the confidence of the administration by undertaking tax reduction.

3. A forward movement through:

(a) Revival of construction, which he assumed would follow now that funds would flow into construction and no longer into the stock market.

(b) The stimulation of exports and of other legitimate business expansion.

(c) Use of the agricultural marketing act, in furtherance of (b).

The first part of this program failed—though the President has seemingly never discovered this—because credit itself is dependent upon business activity which none of the President's programs succeeded in stimulating, and because the owners of capital proved unwilling to invest as long as the prospect for profits was slight.

Mr. President, one of the foremost economists in this country, a conservative for whom I have great respect, has described credit as "suspicion asleep." Once awakened, credit is as futile as any device that could be imagined in a critical period of this kind.

Construction failed to respond because of factors more basic than a lack of funds, and the stimulation of exports was defeated, partly by the widespread depression and partly by the retaliation, itself intensifying the world depression, provoked by the Hawley-Smoot tariff revision which the President refused to assist in limiting, and which ultimately he approved, despite the protests of 1,000 of the leading economists of the country and some of the Nation's foremost leaders.

The administration's $160,000,000 tax reduction, benefiting principally the large income taxpayers and the larger corporations, was enacted in December, 1929, following the stock-market crash. Progressive Senators on both sides of the aisle who objected that the Treasury might be in need of funds for relief purposes, in view of the fact that we were entering upon one of the worst depressions in our history, were almost overwhelmingly defeated by the first of a long succession of conservative Republican-Democratic coalitions, whose leaders insisted that the depression was "psychological" in character and would be largely mitigated by the stimulus of a 1-year reduction in taxes for the benefit of large income taxpayers and the large profitable corporations.

The President continued to minimize the seriousness of the depression and reiterated his faith in "psychological" devices. The President on November 17, 1929, launched his third line of attack on the situation, saying that he sought "to dispel foolish pessimism and to assure the orderly march of business and employment over the winter," when he announced that a series of conferences with sundry groups of business, financial, and labor leaders had been arranged. The conferences were accompanied from day to day by statements that confidence was being reestablished, that business would be carried on as usual, that wages would be maintained on the one hand and strikes avoided on the other, and intimating that "any possible dislocation of employment" would be guarded against.

Mr. President, in June, 1929, industrial production was at the index of 127, freight-car loadings at 108, value of building contracts at 126, factory employment at 102.7, and factory pay rolls at 109.7. In December, when with the help of the party of the opposition, the Democrats, the President passed the first of his "psychological" remedies for this depression, the $160,000,000 tax refund measure to which I have just alluded, industrial production had fallen to 100, a drop of 21 per cent from the peak of 1929, freight-car loadings had fallen to 102, a loss of 6 per cent; value of building contracts had fallen 19 per cent to 102, factory employment was at 96.9, a loss of 6 per cent, and factory pay rolls had fallen to 99.1, or a loss of 10 per cent. Apparently the Chief Executive and his supporters, both Democrats and Republicans, in this Chamber were unaware of these economic data showing the cataclysmic character of the depression; and as I proceed with my review of the record made by this bipartisan control of Government since 1929, I shall advert to this continued and marked decline of those economic indices to indicate how blind were these men to the facts which were available for all to read.

The President's annual message to Congress on December 3, 1929, stated that the "systematic, voluntary measures of cooperation" which he had instituted, providing for business as usual, the maintenance of wages, and the expansion of private, Federal, State, and local construction, had brought about a—> Remarkable and satisfactory response. * * * I am convinced that through these measures we have reestablished confidence. Wages should remain stable. A very large degree of industrial unemployment and suffering which would otherwise have occurred has been prevented.

Had not the hesitation of business men, caused by "unwarranted pessimism and fear," been offset—

> This hesitation unchecked could in itself intensify into a depression with widespread unemployment and suffering.

Having thus already prevented the depression, the President of the United States naturally asked little from Congress in the way of remedial legislation. He requested specifically nothing dealing with the situation except his "psychological" tax reduction and a slight increase in public works, nor were there put forward by those in the party of opposition any legislative proposals which either recognized the seriousness of the depression upon which we were entering or proposed any governmental action to meet the situation.

In accordance with recommendations made at the November conferences which the President had called, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States on December 5, 1929, held a "National Business Survey Conference," at which President Hoover admitted the existence of "some unemployment" but asserted that the most serious danger was "undue pessimism, fear, uncertainty, and hesitation in business," for which the cure was "action"—that is, more abundant capital, assurances of wage maintenance, and voluntary efforts on the part of industry and State and local governments to increase construction.

The national business survey conference was intended according to its sponsors "to put into practical effect the ideas initiated by President Hoover." Chairman Julius H. Barnes described it as an important experiment in organized business activity. Business men representing the major trades and industries presented detailed reports of "conditions and prospective activities." The impression went forth that business activity would be sustained and perhaps even expanded. The official report issued at the close of the conference said:

> Further information will probably be solicited from time to time as may be required, with the object of building up an adequate picture of the business structure, of determining the weakness that may exist in the national economy, and of disclosing possible steps to eradicate them, to the end that the entire national business fabric may be maintained in a normal state of adjustment and equilibrium essential to the orderly advancement of the national welfare.

The only tangible aftermath of the President's first "committee and conference" attack on the depression was a vaguely defined organization which, under the direction of Chairman Barnes and in the name of the National Business Survey Conference, for a while issued frequent and highly optimistic messages of cheer, then gradually dwindled into silence, and expired in May, 1931. The failure to go through with the business plans and expenditures forecast in December was demonstrated by the business indices of succeeding months. It was evident, as President Farrell, of the United States Steel Corporation, remarked at the economic council hearings last October, that "the wish was father to the thought."

Examined in retrospect, the only certain accomplishments of the first attack upon the depression were the enactment of the tax reduction, which undoubtedly left in the pockets of the wealthy substantial sums otherwise available for governmental action, and a very moderate increase—amounting to $55,000,000 a year for roads, $15,000,000 a year for public buildings, and a smaller increase in rivers and harbors construction—applying in part to the fiscal year 1930 and in full to the fiscal year 1931, in Federal public works construction.

The course of Federal public works, excluding vessel and aircraft construction, through June 30, 1930, was:

1928	$201,180,000
1929	261,695,000
1930	297,303,000

The legislation enacted during the winter of 1929–30 became fully effective in the fiscal year 1931, when it was further supplemented by the emergency public works bill enacted at the short session of the Seventy-first Congress. Even with all of this, however, Federal construction in the fiscal year 1931 totaled only $460,641,000. This was an increase of some $160,000,000, entirely insufficient to offset the decline in State and local construction and woefully inadequate compared with the decline in construction generally.

The efforts to stimulate State and local construction, including a public appeal to the State governors on November 23, 1929, was frustrated by the growing financial predicaments of these governments, with the result that combined Federal, State, and local public-works expenditures first failed to grow materially and then declined, as follows:

1927 total public construction	$3,706,000,000
1928 total public construction	3,631,000,000
1929 total public construction	3,555,000,000
1930 total public construction	3,632,000,000
1931 (estimated)	3,000,000,000

Judging by the trend in the first few months of 1932, it is probable that public construction will not reach $1,500,000,000 this year.

Meanwhile, total public and private construction fell year by year, from $10,091,000,000 in 1928, to $9,018,000,000 in 1929, to $6,946,000,000 in 1930, to $4,800,000,000 in 1931, with the present likelihood that the 1932 total will not be over $2,500,000,000 or $2,750,000,000, a decline of anywhere from $7,000,000,000 to $8,000,000,000 since the peak of 1928.

Beyond the tax reduction put through by the bipartisan coalition under the leadership of the President in the session 1929–30, there is a debatable question whether the assurances given at the White House conferences in November did or did not result in maintaining wage levels beyond the time at which they otherwise would have been cut. Wage reductions began soon after the outset of the depression, but undeniably for months few of the larger industrial concerns made serious reductions, for which I give their management and their control due credit.

Whatever the credit due to the President may be—and I do not wish to deny him any credit which is justly his—the wage-maintenance policy, based upon voluntary assurances and upon official declaration, unsupported by any show or threat of action, was effective, taking the most optimistic view, for but 18 months, and collapsed, under increasing economic pressure, in the early autumn of 1931.

Evidences of tangible action to counteract the depression are, except for the issuance of statements and of appeals for "cooperation," entirely lacking in the administration's record and in the Record of Congress for the next six or eight months. Chairman Barnes, Secretary Lamont, and other officials, carried on an almost continual chant of hope and of pledges that the depression was about to end. On March 5, 1930, the President rejected a new proposal for a national unemployment conference, with the declaration that "everything possible is being done to remedy conditions." At this time, Mr. President, industrial production was at 104, a gain of 4 points since December, 1929, but a loss of 18 per cent since June, 1929; freight-car loadings had fallen to 96, a decline of 6 since December, 1929, and a total decline since the peak of 1929 of 11 per cent; the value of building contracts was at 102, a decline of 19 per cent since the 1929 peak; factory employment was at 92.9, and factory pay rolls had reached 98.2. The then Secretary of Labor, now the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], in a statement indorsed by the White House, said at the same time that unemployment did not exceed 3,000,000 persons, many of whom would be "normally" unemployed.

There were, however, Members of Congress who regarded the situation less lightly. Criticism grew and early in March, the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], myself, and others, joined in attacking the inadequacies and the misrepresentations of the administration's position.

The President made reply on March 7, 1930, in a statement to the press in which he said:

> All the evidences indicate that the worst effects of the crisis upon employment will have been passed within the next 60 days, with the amelioration of seasonal unemployment, the gaining strength of other forces, and continued cooperation of the many agencies actively cooperating with the Government to restore business and to relieve distress.

Almost exactly 60 days later, speaking before the annual meeting of the United States Chamber of Commerce, the President claimed that, through the cooperation of business men, the press, financiers, public officials, and others, the program which he had set forth late in November had "succeeded to a remarkable degree." The dangers of loss of confidence, of monetary panic, and credit stringency, he said—> are behind us. There has been no significant bank or industrial failure.

Now mark this—

> That danger, too, is safely behind us.

Apparently blissfully ignorant that the census of unemployment taken on April 1 was to show an unemployment of at least 3,400,000 persons, the President, in accordance with the policy of distorting factual information upon which his administration was already well launched in its efforts to minimize the depression, said that a "telegraphic census" of governors and mayors had brought "with one exception the unanimous response of continuously decreasing unemployment each month."

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VANDENBERG in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, we are listening to one of the most important and able speeches that it has been my pleasure to hear in the Senate. I think, in view of the important facts being presented we should have a larger attendance——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator, but I do not yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin declines to yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Since the accommodating Senator from Wisconsin has yielded to an interruption, may I take it upon myself to ask from what source does the Senator gather the particular figures which have been interesting me very much, showing the gradual increase of unemployment and the gradual gradations of public works?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. They have been taken in part from the official reports of the Federal Reserve Board and partly from indices published by the Department of Commerce, printed by the executive branch of the Government over which the President presides.

Mr. LEWIS. I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. They are published, I may say to the Senator, in bulletins which are issued and distributed, and I assume the President had access to them.

Looking to the future, the President intimated vaguely that "when the situation clears a little" he might undertake the organization of a representative body to study the history of the predepression and depression periods, "with a view to broad determination of what can be done to achieve greater stability for the future, both in prevention and in remedy." At the same time he insisted that whatever action might be determined upon must be in the "field of cooperative action outside of government" and that "progress must come from individual initiative, and in time of stress it must be mobilized through cooperative action." Later months were to bring to the President the conviction that these principles should be violated sufficiently to permit action by the Government to the extent of providing additional credit to banks, railroads, and industrial corporations. His interest in the broader problem of stability, however, remained undefined, postponed to some remote future day.

The President's seeming confidence that the problem was taking care of itself and that positive governmental intervention was unneeded remained unshaken on June 4, 1930, when he rebuked, according to Amos Pinchot, a delegation which had come to urge upon the President a tremendous public-works program. That was two years ago. Unemployment was being exaggerated; the tide had turned; we would drift peacefully, if slowly, back to good times. I quote from Mr. Pinchot:

> With calm confidence he spoke of the results that were being gained through the conference he had called of great business leaders and of their fine response to his appeal not to curtail the volume of their activities. He showed us, in authoritative style, that every agency of both the Federal and State Governments was working at top capacity to relieve the situation. "Gentlemen," he said, "you have come six weeks too late."

At that time, Mr. President, industrial production had fallen to 100, a loss of 21 per cent since the preceding June; freight-car loadings had dropped to 93, a loss of 14 per cent since the preceding June; the value of building contracts had fallen to 99, a loss of 21 per cent since the preceding June; factory employment had dropped to 89.7, a loss of 12 per cent in a year; factory pay rolls had gone to 90.7, a decline of 17 per cent in that year. Yet the President of the United States assured the distinguished delegation that waited upon him to urge the inauguration of a gigantic public-works program to check the progress of the depression that they had come six weeks too late.

Mr. President, the long session of the Seventy-first Congress ended on July 3, 1930, barren of legislation affecting the fundamental economic situation, except for the dislocation of international trade brought about directly and indirectly by the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act. Even mild public-works planning and employment exchange bills of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] in harmony with recommendations made many times by the President himself during the years preceding found no administration support, and although they were passed by the Senate through the persistent efforts of the Senator from New York, they received no attention in the House of Representatives, which was controlled and dominated at that time by the administration. All efforts to promote a more adequate expansion of public works were blocked by presidential appeals for economy, buttressed by distorted calculations of prospective appropriations.

The quiescent policy of the administration was broken somewhat by the increasing severity of the drought which prevailed during the summer of 1930. On August 5 the President recognized the possibility of "real suffering" and said:

> No stone will be left unturned by the Federal Government in giving assistance to local authorities.

Official surveys and conferences multiplied rapidly; railroads were induced to shoulder part of the cost of relief by making emergency reductions in rates on the movement of livestock and of feeds. The Red Cross was stimulated into action; the Department of Agriculture revised its radio program by including special talks on drought conditions, and the President announced that, due to "the thought that I can probably be of some service," he had canceled his proposed western trip.

A conference with the governors of the drought States brought on August 14, 1930, an elaboration of the President's drought-relief program. Relief was to come from State and local resources, with a presidential committee to "coordinate" the State and county committees, supplemented by $5,000,000 from the Red Cross, speeding up of Federal-aid highway allotments, and a continuance of the railroads' rate reduction. Appeals for emergency credits were turned aside with vague assurances that, in so far as sound security could be given, credit would be supplied by existing Federal agricultural credit institutions.

As the autumn of 1930 came on, it became increasingly evident that existing policies were not meeting the necessities of the situation. The drought areas protested that the President's program had not and could not prevent intense suffering and economic maladjustment. It was generally recognized, except in administration circles, that the economic situation was in its broader aspects growing progressively worse. Although completely accurate data were unobtainable, it was obvious that unemployment was increasing and that distress was being relieved inadequately. Stock and bond prices collapsed anew in the fall of 1930, leading to administration charges that persons hostile to the administration were manipulating the market on the eve of the elections which in November were to result in a severe defeat for the Republican Party.

Presidential recognition of the existence of a serious unemployment problem finally came on October 17, 1930, when the President still insisted that his program of 10 months before had "contributed greatly to reduce unemployment," but admitted that he now contemplated a further organization along three lines:

> First, cooperation with the governors and employment organizations of the States and local communities; second, development of methods with the national industries; and, third, direct Federal employment in public works, etc. * * * As a nation we must prevent hunger and cold to those of our people who are in honest difficulties.

A renewed suggestion that a conference of industrial and labor leaders, similar to the Harding conference in 1921, be called was rejected a few days later with the explanation that the President had "covered that ground" in his November, 1929, conferences.

Col. Arthur Woods was appointed to direct an organization to act as a Federal clearing house to "coordinate" State and local activities it was announced by the President on October 21, 1930. A White House statement said that "no attempt was being made to minimize the problem, for it is being recognized as a real one," but expressed faith that there would be no large degree of "actual individual suffering," and estimated the number of the unemployed at 3,500,000. Up to this point Cabinet officials had been in the habit of estimating it at 2,500,000.

On October 22, Colonel Woods took up his work with the statement that—> we are going at the problem with all the information and with all the vigor that we can command * * *. It is a race with human misery. I think we will win by furnishing jobs and through social relief measures * * *. It is largely a local problem.

In answer to demands for a special session of Congress, the President asserted on October 24, 1930:

> No special session is necessary to deal with employment. The sense of voluntary organization and community service in the American people has not vanished. The spirit of voluntary service has been strong enough to cope with the problem for the past year, and it will, I am confident, continue in full measure of the need.
> Colonel Woods is receiving most gratifying evidence of this from the governors, mayors, industrial leaders, and welfare organizations throughout the country.

About this time another one of the periodic campaigns of optimism was launched through the press. Headlines said that "immediate gains are expected in labor situation" and that "State governors report progress in aiding jobless." The administration continued to give out rosy statements of its public-works activities, including one which gave the palpably distorted impression that $1,000,000,000 worth of Federal public works were in progress, or soon would be. The President issued appeals for support of the local drives of community chests, and of the National Red Cross membership drive. "The Red Cross is our national insurance against the suffering of disaster in any part of our country."

Colonel Woods on November 6 said that "an early improvement in the situation may be expected," and on November 7 said that "the States have the employment matter well in hand, although some are farther ahead in the work than others." On November 17 Colonel Woods announced that the first phase of the work of the President's emergency committee for employment, including "formation of a central organization and the arousing of the country to the need of general effort to combat unemployment," had been completed. He was not yet ready to announce what the next phase would be.

The President was meanwhile setting the stage for another ineffectual session of Congress. Seven conservative Democratic leaders tendered an offer of "cooperation," readily accepted by the administration, so that by November 13 the President felt assured, and was quoted as saying, that—

The fear and apprehension which have been expressed over reports that delay or filibuster would be resorted to to force an extra session of Congress have, therefore, no foundation.

The ultimate results of the creation of the President's Emergency Committee for Employment were predicted with fair accuracy by The Nation on November 12 when it said, editorially:

It becomes clear that what Mr. Woods has accomplished thus far is to call attention to what has been done or what is supposed to be about to be done. His action has precisely the value that inheres in such publicity. This statement involves no reflection on Mr. Woods, for no improvised organization except a charitable one can do anything of immediate importance in a time like this. * * * Plants are opening and closing all the time as economic necessity dictates. Public works are being undertaken as appropriations become available. Private and public charity go on their old way, with somewhat increased funds, and the suffering and demoralization of unemployment are somehow endured. None of this does or can Mr. Woods fundamentally change.

Fundamental changes were evidently far from the President's mind. The emergency committee for employment on November 22, according to Prof. J. C. Lawrence, a member of the committee, submitted to the President "a report on emergency measures which might be taken to combat unemployment," and said that a report dealing with long-time considerations was in preparation. None of this ever came to the official attention of Congress; and on December 16, 1930, the President answered a formal request of the Senate by asserting that, except for notes and verbal suggestions for use in the annual message to Congress, the emergency committee "has made no report on unemployment."

By this time industrial production had dropped to 82, a loss of 18 per cent since June, 1930, and a drop of 36 per cent since the peak of 1929. Freight-car loadings had fallen to 84, a loss of 22 per cent since June, 1929. The value of building contracts had shrunk to 73, a loss of 42 per cent since June, 1929. Factory employment was at 80.1, a drop of 22 per cent since June, 1929, and factory pay rolls were at 73.7, a loss of 33 per cent since June, 1929.

The congressional session of 1930–31 began with a background of intensified unemployment and distress which could not be hidden by optimistic camouflage and vague promises. Demands for direct relief measures and for an effective public-works program were being made in this Chamber and throughout the country. Every reliable indicator of business conditions showed a movement constantly downward. November, December, and January were marked by an unprecedented number of bank suspensions. The curtailment of industrial production was too obvious to be denied.

The President's annual message on December 2, 1930, shifted all responsibility for prolongation of the depression to the drought and to foreign developments:

In the larger view the major forces of the depression now lie outside of the United States, and our recuperation has been retarded by the unwarranted degree of fear and apprehension created by these outside forces.

This was the line of defense which Republican stump speakers had employed just before the November, 1930, by-election.

The program which the President had outlined a year before was credited with having mitigated the otherwise probable course of the depression:

The result of magnificent cooperation throughout the country has been that actual suffering has been kept to a minimum during the past 12 months, and our unemployment has been far less in proportion than in other large industrial countries.

The President held out hope that, because of the extent to which the United States is self-sustaining, we would "overcome world influences." He insisted:

Economic depression can not be cured by legislative action or executive pronouncement.

I may say, in passing, that he has tried the latter.

Economic wounds must be healed by action of the cells of the economic body—the producers and consumers themselves.

This again, he assured us in his message, would take place through "cooperative action" based upon individual "faith and courage," abstinence from hoarding, neighborly responsibility, industrial responsibility for employees, and upon community and State responsibility encouraged by the National Government. The new relief organization had already received "a most gratifying degree of response."

On the extent of unemployment, the President returned to the contention that, aside from a "normal" unemployment of 1,000,000, only 2,500,000 had been unemployed in the spring, with "some decrease in employment since that time." The number in distress were estimated at from 10 to 20 per cent of those unemployed.

On all other important economic questions the President was vague, or silent. After the depression, he said, it would be necessary to consider what action could be taken "to remove possible governmental influences which make for instability and to better organize the mitigation of the effect of depression," but he thought it "as yet too soon to constructively formulate such measures."

Information demonstrating that the President had continued to minimize the extent of unemployment and distress was presented to the Senate in December and January. I first presented telegrams from central labor bodies which the president of the American Federation of Labor had secured. Later on, I presented to the Senate the results of a questionnaire which I had sent out to the mayors of cities, asking for information concerning the extent of unemployment. Regardless of this information, the bipartisan coalition in the Senate, however, which had been foreshadowed in November, cooperated effectively with the President and with administration leaders in the House to block all real relief legislation.

In response to a resolution which I introduced, administration officials were questioned before the Senate Appropriations Committee early in January, but the committee drew forth little of the basic information concerning the situation. Colonel Woods admitted that his organization did not know the extent of unemployment, but added the comforting observation:

We hope distress is going to be avoided; we hope every community is so organized as to be able to take care of any cases of distress in its neighborhood. I have confidence that that is the situation.
